Let us see what has been the history of the Bureau of Efficiency. The Bureau of Efficiency has done some good work, but it has never done the work that Congress authorized it to do in the act creating it. In the legislative appropriation bill approved August 23, 1912, the Bureau of Efficiency was established, to create efficient ratings, and it was made a division in the Civil Service Commission. They had not worked there very long until the officers of the bureau got into a quarrel with Mr. McIlhenny, the president of the Civil Service Commission, and then by the next bill it was taken out and made a bureau of the President to assist him in trying to bring about efficiency in the various executive departments. Now, what does our budget bill provide? It goes a great deal further than the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] would have you believe. It provides for a comptroller general, and I wish to remind the House that the comptroller general is to be the arm of Congress, and that if that bill becomes a law he can be removed only by a joint resolution of Congress. The bill provides:

SEC. 13. That the comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds, and shall make to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the accounting department, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures. He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures. The comptroller general shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as the committee may request. The comptroller general shall specially report to the Congress every expenditure or contract made by any head of a department in any year in excess of the appropriation to such department and in violation of law.

He becomes the efficiency expert of the Government, and under him we will have a Bureau of Efficiency. What does this amendment provide? It is certainly an amendment offered by those who are not in sympathy with budget legislation at all. It will kill real budget legislation.

What does this bill provide? The Bureau of Efficiency which we turn loose upon Congress without anybody to guide, without anybody to control, with an appropriation of $125,000 a year, is authorized to investigate any matter relating to organized activities or methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government and shall from time to time submit reports of its investigations to Congress. On its own initiative we turn loose here one man not answerable to anybody and say to him that he shall go out whenever he wishes and submit his reports to Congress. In the budget bill passed by the House we have provided for a semijudicial officer, the comptroller general of the United States, who will have under him hundreds of employees, all the accounting officers and employees under the six auditors who are now employed. It will be their duty to examine every account of every dollar that is expended out of the Public Treasury. When these accountants come back to the comptroller general he will learn from them where inefficiency exists. He will get the information in regard to overlapping of work, of everything of that kind, and it is made his duty to report them to Congress.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I do.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Suppose in a given case under the language provided by the budget system bill that a committee of this Congress was satisfied that there was not only inefficiency in the amount of work done by a given department but the manner in which it was being done. By what authority would we get a report in a case of that kind?

Mr. GOOD. The bill we passed provides that the comptroller general also—shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures.

We have given him very full instructions in this regard. Now, mind you, the budget bill was put in; for what purpose? To stop duplications in the Government service. What does the Senate amendment do? It simply creates another branch, another agency to do the same work that we have provided for in the budget bill to be performed by the comptroller general. Now, let us be consistent. These matters are going to be in conference. Let us not put legislation on an appropriation today and take it back to-morrow. That is not good legislation. We are going to have a real efficient prompt action by the comptroller general and those who will be employed under him, and let us not confuse the matter. Let us not throw dust in our own faces and defeat budget legislation by this kind of camouflage. I do not agree with the Secretary of War in the conclusion he reaches that no efficiency experts shall go into his department. I think Congress has that right, and we must exercise that right if we are to bring about real economy, and let us do it in a sensible way. Let us leave to the committee that has jurisdiction of this legislation full and complete authority to exercise that jurisdiction, and I assure you it will be exercised in a manner satisfactory to any man who is in favor of a most rigid and strict investigation of every executive department. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, let me repeat that it is our hope and expectation that the class of activities that naturally and properly are within the jurisdiction of a bureau of efficiency shall be undertaken and carried on under the budget plan that is proposed. We have no hostility to the Bureau of Efficiency. We are all of us in favor of having an efficiency bureau or efficiency agency responsible to the Congress, but to adopt this amendment now with budget legislation pending would be to confuse the entire issue, and if we are heartily in favor of a budget system, and an efficient one, we should vote to disagree to this Senate amendment in order that these matters may all be considered in connection with the consideration of the budget system generally. I hope the House will vote unanimously against the adoption of this amendment and insist upon a disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 53 and agree to a conference.

The question was taken.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a rising vote.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 104, noes none.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. WASON, and Mr. SISSON.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 4073 be taken from the Speaker's table and considered, a bill of similar import having been reported from the House committee and now being on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas calls up from the Speaker's table the Senate bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4073) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Missouri Valley Bridge & Iron Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, its successors and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway, trolley, and railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Bridge and the mouth of the Big Blue River, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the Senate bill came over after the House bill was reported?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is my understanding that is the case; in fact, I know that is the case. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill differs very slightly from the House bill. The House bill struck out the words "highway, trolley, and railroad" from the bill, and I have spoken with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which reported the bill, and he says he has no material objection to the change. I move the previous question on the passage of the Senate bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 512.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12266) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918; and, after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided between those for and against the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule; that at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed to, when the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order the consideration at this time of a bill increasing the amount of the pay to soldier students $20 per month, increasing the pay or allowance from $80 to $100 a month for single men and from $100 to $120 per month for married men. As soon as the necessity for this was called to the attention of the proper committees of the House this action was readily taken by the Congress. It is but another evidence of the willingness of Congress to do everything that is necessary or that it can do to enable young men who fought in the World War for the United States to prepare, in so far as it is possible to do so, to take the places they formerly occupied in the world's activities and to pursue their usual course in life in the future in the performance of their duties as citizens.

May I say in this connection that during the war and since the close of the war Congress, that controls the purse strings, has been in no sense niggardly or backward with appropriations for any purposes that had for their object the betterment of the condition of those who served in the war? If there are cases where there is ground for dissatisfaction, they do not arise from want of action on the part of Congress. Congress has in every instance made the necessary provisions. If there is failure—and there is—it is in the execution of the law rather than in the law itself. Rules and regulations are made for students who are being rehabilitated, for others who are in hospitals, for others who are otherwise provided for by the Congress, that make it practically impossible for those for whom benefits were intended, to get just what Congress intended they should get.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In just a moment.

I venture there is not a Member here who has not had his attention called to cases of serious failure on the part of the Government to do its duty properly to the soldier, whether in the hospital or in the school, or wherever he may be, because of failure by those who are executing the laws and applying the appropriations that have been made by Congress. We appropriate millions for hospitals. Young men in them are treated brutally.

Mr. CALDWELL. Where?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In Chicago, to be specific. These cases could not have been anticipated by Congress. And there is nothing that Congress can do to avoid these things. I make these statements so that it may be known that the Congress, that appropriates the money, could not follow the appropriations to those for whose benefit they were made, and see that they were used in the manner in which it was intended by Congress they should be used. Congress makes appropriations and enacts laws; it can not execute or enforce laws.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. CALDWELL. I was very much interested in the statement that young men in the hospitals were treated brutally and the gentleman's reply to my question that it was in Chicago. I hope the gentleman will be kind enough to give the House the details of that, because I do not believe a person who is responsible for the brutal treatment of any man who is in the Army should stay in the Army or in the Government service. And I should like to put him out.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The matter was discussed on another occasion. The facts were all clearly brought out in that discussion; the names of the soldiers and the names of the officers and the very dates and the hour of the day on which the brutality was inflicted upon the soldiers.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to ask the gentleman, in addition to the amount that is provided for the soldier in this, what does the soldier have to pay out of this money to maintain himself? Does he just have to pay his board?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand the soldier pays merely his board and necessary personal expenses.

Mr. McKEOWN. And the tuition is provided for in addition?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not prepared to answer that question specifically, but I understand many of the manual-training schools and other schools are open to these students without tuition.

Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] desire some time?

Mr. GARRETT. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. This rule provides for two hours' debate on the main proposition?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. There is no objection to the rule, of course. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, and I understand there is no objection to the bill. I was wondering if it would not be agreeable to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], if I might have his attention, to amend the rule by unanimous consent and let there be one hour of debate? Let me say, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. There is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and unanimously reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, in which I am very much interested and which is urgently important to certain interests. The urgency can be explained to the satisfaction of all the Members of the House, and I should be very glad if it could be considered this afternoon. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], whom I do not happen to see present just at this moment, understands the urgency of the matter, and I would be very glad if we could arrange for that bill to be considered. I understood from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], privately, that he doubted whether they needed two hours of general debate on this bill. If some arrangement could be made whereby the debate could be limited to an hour instead of two hours it might give the opportunity I have asked for.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] say about amending the rule?

Mr. FESS. So far as I am concerned, it would be agreeable to me, but I have not consulted with the members of the Committee on Education.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not see why on earth we can not get through with this bill in an hour. The debate is limited to the bill, and there is no opposition to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To settle the matter, Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent to amend the rule, making the general debate one hour instead of two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to amend the rule by substituting one hour for general debate for two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will that interfere with the time that has been allotted to the various persons, I would like to inquire?

Mr. FESS. I have been asked by only three persons for time, who wanted 10 minutes apiece. That will be 30 minutes. I was expecting to take 7 or 8 minutes myself in explaining the bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I desire 10 minutes. If I get 10 minutes, I shall have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, if no one desires to discuss the rule further, I shall move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12266) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12266. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12266, with Mr. GOODYKOONTZ in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12266. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12266) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, be hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That every person enlisted, enrolled, drafted, inducted, or appointed in the military or naval forces of the United States, including members of training camps authorized by law, who, since April 7, 1917, has resigned or has been discharged or furloughed therefrom under honorable conditions, having a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated while a member of such forces, or later developing a disability traceable, in the opinion of the board, to service with such forces, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

"The board shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to furnish the persons included in this section suitable courses of vocational rehabilitation, to be prescribed and provided by the board; and every person electing to follow such a course of vocational rehabilitation shall, while following the same, be paid monthly by the said board from the appropriation hereinafter provided such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support and for the maintenance and support of persons depending upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course shall be more than $100 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $120 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule as amended, the debate is limited to one hour. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the first bill passed by Congress looking to the relief of the disabled soldier was the war-risk insurance bill, which became a law October 6, 1917. That bill included a provision for a survey looking into the possibility of rehabilitation work. Following that bill an effort was set afoot that resulted in the rehabilitation bill proper, which became a law June 27, 1918. That bill afterwards was amended in a slight degree on July 11, 1919. The amendment was to transfer the question of the eligibility of a soldier making application for training from the war-risk insurance to the Federal board. It also had another amendment which was designed to simplify the eligibility item. For example, the original law provided that after the discharge of the soldier, if in the opinion of the board he is unable to carry on a gainful occupation—that is rather general—or being unable to resume his former occupation or to enter some other occupation, "or having resumed or entered upon such occupation, is unable to continue the same successfully, he shall be furnished by said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide."

That is a very general provision of the original law, which was modified by the law of July 11, giving more latitude to the Federal board to determine the eligibility for vocational training. In that case it goes to the soldier discharged or furloughed, "having a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated while a member of such forces, or later developing a disability traceable, in the opinion of the board, to service with such forces, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability, shall be furnished by the said board," with so and so.

That is quite broadening in its character as compared with the original law. Under the old law the monthly allowance to the soldier was his enlisted pay, which was $30, which was paid by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and the Federal board added to that $30 such amount as in the judgment of the Federal board was necessary. So up to May 1, 1919, that addition was $35, making $65 to the soldier in rehabilitation work. On May 1 they added $10, which ran it up to $75, and that continued until the amendment of July 11, 1919, when the House changed the $75 to $80, which is the present law.

There was an effort to put that at $100. The Committee on Education thought it unwise and refused to recommend it. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union agreed with the Committee on Education. Recently a bill was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], the author of the former amendment, increasing the amount from $75 to $80, providing that the increase should be made for the single man $100 a month and for the married man $120 a month.

Mr. McKEOWN. Why was it that only $20 additional was given to the married soldier over the single soldier? Was it because the family allowance goes along just the same?

Mr. FESS. Yes; they are not interrupted.

The committee opened hearings upon this increase. Personally I was rather unfavorable to it, thinking it might not be necessary. But when the evidence was brought in and very carefully sorted, and the witnesses subjected to a pretty discriminating cross-questioning, and after they had submitted their budgets, that were printed in the hearings on the request of the committee, there seemed to me to be little argument against allowing the increase.

There were 10 disabled men before the committee. Those 10 men represented 63 wounds in their bodies. There were all sorts of disabilities. We had them to submit to us an itemized cost bill of what they had to pay out, and then we brought before the committee people on the outside who had served as assistants to these people in finding places for them, and it impressed the whole committee that here was a case where, unless we made this increase, the Government was permitting these men to be subjects of charity.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman tell us what items the soldiers are expected to pay out of these amounts?

Mr. FESS. If my friend will consult the hearings, he will find that the hearings contain, I think, 10 individual cases of budgets, and they are in a printed form which will serve the gentleman's purpose better than for me to repeat them.

This is what I would like to say to the committee at this moment: An association known as the "Carry On Club," which was a sort of auxiliary to this rehabilitation work, testified through its chairman that they had busied themselves for months in placing disabled soldiers in quarters in the endeavor to find quarters within the range of cost which the Government gives them. These people said that was impossible to do, that they had supplied funds in a charitable way to carry on the education of these boys. The requirement for subsistance is not the same for a disabled man in training that it is for the average man. The same diet will not answer. The same clothing is not possible. The amount as well as kind differs. In the case of disabled men, the item of drugs and medicines is quite important. The place of location is also important. If $80 per month for subsistance is sufficient for the average man in school in New York, it does not argue that it is sufficient for disabled men.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. I am a member of the committee, and I agree fully with what the gentleman is saying, but, as I recollect the hearings, there was no testimony, or very little testimony, from any other place than New York City.

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. PLATT. So we do not know that the same conditions as to expenses of living apply to other places than New York or some other large city.

Mr. FESS. That is true. That was one objection that the committee had raised originally, and yet I do not know how we can legislate here and pass a law applying to one district that does not apply to the 13 other districts.

Mr. PLATT. Of course, the board has the power under this amendment to give less in places where it is not needed.

Mr. FESS. Certainly the board has the power to pay less than the maximum. They can pay less than that if, in their judgment, it is not needed.

Mr. PLATT. As a matter of fact, though, did not the testimony, so far as we had any from outside or from the board, show that the board is actually paying $80 everywhere now?

Mr. FESS. I think that is the rule also.

Mr. PLATT. It may not be absolutely true everywhere, but so far as we had any testimony it seemed that they were paying $80, whether it was needed or not, and there were some places where that sum was more than students generally were receiving for living expenses from their parents.

Mr. FESS. I think that is the rule of procedure.

Mr. PLATT. When the limit was $75, was that supposed to be equivalent to all that the soldier got in the service?

Mr. FESS. Yes. The law provides when the soldier enters upon training he is to receive compensation under article 111 or allowance under the vocational act, whichever is the greater.

Mr. PLATT. I asked the War Department a while ago for a statement of just what a soldier's pay was, including subsistence, shelter, and so forth, and the answer was that the enlisted man got on an average $75.05 a month, but of course subsistence, clothing, and so forth, were included at Government cost. If the soldiers when in the service had been compelled to buy their clothing, their uniforms, and so forth, and their food, and so forth, outside, the cost to them would have been much more than $45, and if they had been given $75 a month, with the requirement that they should buy for themselves the things that were furnished them, they would not have had $30 or $15 in cash left over. At present, in cities like New York, their testimony before our committee was to the effect that $80 a month hardly provided the barest necessities, with no margin whatever, and often with a deficit, made up by charity or by private means. Hence, the necessity for the increase to $100.

Mr. FESS. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. For how long can this vocational training last to one individual? Suppose he enters to-day. How many years can he continue?

Mr. FESS. That will have to be determined by the judgment of the board that has the administration of the law. They tell me that they have entered a few men for a four-year course, but the average course is 10 months.

Mr. CANNON. That is by regulation of the board?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose a man enters to learn one trade and fails. Can he come in again?

Mr. FESS. That depends entirely on what the board will do. We need wise administration on it.

Mr. CANNON. What will a married man with five children get while he is taking vocational training?

Mr. FESS. He gets the same as his compensation under the war-risk insurance, and as I remember that is $5 per child.

Mr. CANNON. I think it increases, does it not?

Mr. PLATT. It is increased to the amount of $5 per child.

Mr. DARROW. Fifteen dollars for the wife.

Mr. FESS. I have it here.

Mr. CANNON. That is, $15 for the wife, and I think it increases as the number of children increases.

Mr. FESS. That is in section 3. I have it here.

Mr. McKEOWN. Ten for the first child and $5 for each additional child.

Mr. FESS. I have it here. If there is no wife but one child, $5. If there is no wife but two children, $12.50. If there is no wife, but three children, $20. If there is no wife but four children, $30, and $5 per month additional for each additional child.

Mr. CANNON. Then the success or failure of this whole matter depends upon the Vocational Board, which has plenary power?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has stated it correctly.

Mr. CANNON. How many people are receiving vocational training?

Mr. FESS. The report to-day is that there are 32,166 in training, something like 60,000 approved ready for training, and 136,000, in round numbers, supposed to be eligible in the entire list who will some day become beneficiaries of the law.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman states in his report that this will cost $5,000,000. Does that mean $5,000,000 a year?

Mr. FESS. Five million dollars for the year.

Mr. CANNON. This increases the present law by $5,000,000 a year?

Mr. FESS. I think so. That is the nearest estimate I could get. Now, if my friend will allow me, there is some dispute whether we ought not to give training with compensation to every person who has a disability of whatever per cent. I asked the Federal board the other day, in this investigation, what would be the estimated cost if we should do that, and I was staggered when I was told that it would amount to something like $450,000,000 for the four years.

Mr. CANNON. While they are taking vocational training is this all they get? Or do they get compensation?

Mr. FESS. Their compensation is not reduced.

Mr. CANNON. Then they get full compensation for all injuries that they receive, and $100 a month for a single man, $130 a month for a married man, with an allowance for the children. Has the gentleman made a calculation as to what the average would be?

Mr. FESS. Let me yield to my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I feel that my colleague did not get the question of the gentleman from Illinois when he answered that they did draw the compensation.

Mr. FESS. They draw whichever is the larger.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Under the law the vocational pay would be the larger, and they would not get any war-risk compensation.

Mr. CANNON. They can not get both?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. They can not get both.

Mr. FESS. I misunderstood the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. They can choose whichever is the larger?

Mr. FESS. Yes; that is the law.

Mr. CANNON. I believe the gentleman has stated how much it will take to carry out this law.

Mr. FESS. Yes; I think it will not be less than $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. CANNON. And that will run for a period of five years?

Mr. FESS. I can not see how it could run for five years. The most of them have entered for three, and some have entered for four years.

Mr. CANNON. But they can enter for five or six years?

Mr. FESS. No; I do not know any course that would allow five years.

Mr. CANNON. The total number of people in and people that have come in is what?

Mr. FESS. One hundred and thirty-six thousand all told.

Mr. CANNON. Those in and those who have been passed?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And others are eligible for admittance?

Mr. FESS. One hundred and thirty-six thousand is the estimate, and if it is a correct estimate there are not any others.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is that under the law as it reads now?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. And not under the proposed 10 per cent disability provision.

Mr. FESS. No; if you include that it would run away up. I think Members will catch this distinction. Under the war-risk insurance act they are classified in section 2 and section 3. The administration of the law does not allow compensation in the form of allowances to those taking section 3. If you remove that and say that everybody that gets training shall be paid compensation, you are going into a big field.

Mr. BRIGGS. Why is it at this time in 1920 there are 60,000 approved applicants and no action apparently in giving the men the needed training?

Mr. FESS. There are several explanations for that. One is that the industrial situation is so inviting to people looking for work that they do not take the training. I am told that there are 28,000 not in training, not the fault of not being able to place them, but they are not making applications to enter; they are in something else.

Mr. BRIGGS. Already employed in profitable employment?

Mr. FESS. Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be necessary for me to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition for 30 minutes in my own right for the minority of the committee, unless some one is opposed to the bill. If so, he would be entitled to be recognized. If there is no one, I ask to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], a member of the committee.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I presume members of the committee will regret that it is necessary to increase the allowance provided in this amendment. Not because they would not desire to help the wounded soldiers but because of the fact that we have a depleted Treasury, and any further encroachment upon it is of course to be deplored.

However, it is not a theory that confronts us but a condition. From practical experience and from the knowledge that has been gained by the conditions that exist, with these boys in training, it is found that it is absolutely necessary unless we throw these men over to charity. It is unfortunately true that thousands of these boys who have been placed in training have been receiving charitable contributions in order to carry them through their training period. The Elks Association, with a splendid feeling of generosity, in the first place set aside $100,000 for the purpose of making a revolving fund that might be loaned to these soldiers. Afterwards it was found that it should be and was increased to $200,000. It was found that a great many of these boys who were receiving training could not maintain themselves and their families with the utmost scrupulous economy unless they received assistance from others.

The Red Cross loans money to them. They have received loans from other generous societies and individuals in order to help them through the training period. So we are obliged in common decency to put these boys in at least a fair and reasonable condition of independence regarding the time that they are in training or else abandon the proposition entirely.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman state how the amounts proposed by the bill compare with those in Great Britain for similar vocational training?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I can not. In Great Britain the efforts of the Government are very largely supplemented and probably more than doubled by private contributions. They receive the help necessary to carry them through the period of training. In fact, they are taken care of in Great Britain very largely by private associations, patriotic associations that do not call themselves charitable associations, but, nevertheless, it is charity.

So we have brought in this amendment for a fair and reasonable increase in the allowance to these young men during the period when they are in training. We have increased the allowance $20 a month. The average length of time which these boys occupy in training and which will require this compensation is about 10 months. Of course, during that period of time they are practically withdrawn from all power to assist themselves or to earn any money themselves. There is an exception to that where they receive training in factories with those engaged in mechanical business. As they are able to do some work along with their training, they receive some pay for it.

It is a fine thing to note the support which this bill is receiving from Congress. It was unanimously reported from our committee and it will be unanimously passed by the House. We all feel that no matter what it may cost, no matter what effort may be required, the representatives of the people will do everything that can be done to rehabilitate the wounded soldier and make him a self-supporting, independent American citizen, honored because of his service, and still more greatly honored because of his sacrifice.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the history of this legislation and of the present necessity for bringing in this amendment, it is very interesting to note what the President of the United States said in his veto message sent to Congress on July 11, 1919. I want to read that veto message, because it throws a good deal of light upon the present situation. I read from page 2493 of the RECORD of July 12, 1919:

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I find myself obliged to return H. R. 6176, "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," without my signature, because of certain items of the bill which seem to me likely to be of the most serious consequences. Under the vocational rehabilitation bill, which became law June 27, 1918, the Congress has sought to fulfill the expectations of the country that their soldier, sailor, and marine disabled in the recent war should be given an opportunity to secure at the expense and under the fostering care of the Federal Government such training as he needs to overcome the handicap of his disability and to resume his place as a civilian able to earn a living upon something like equal footing with those with whom he was associated before he made his great sacrifice for the honor and defense of the country.

The work of rehabilitation under this admirable law is now at its height, and was to have been given greater speed and certainty by the amendment to section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation bill, which I have to-day signed, and which places the whole responsibility for vocational training in a single agency, virtually transferring from the War Risk Insurance Bureau to the Federal Board for Vocational Education $6,000,000 with which to support disabled men in training at the generous figure of $80 a month for a single man and $100 a month for a man and his wife.

It is a matter of very grave concern, therefore, that at the very moment when these disabled men are coming in constantly increasing numbers to the Government to avail themselves of this generous plan that there should appear in the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I now return, limiting clauses which will do much more than seriously cripple and retard the beneficial work of restoring these men to useful and contented lives. Those clauses would probably, in fact, if put into effect, nullify the whole purpose of the act and render its administration practically impossible. The section of the bill which I now return, which governs the appropriation for this work, provides the sum of $6,000,000 for all the expenses of rehabilitation, including the support of the disabled men in training, and this sum is stated to be "in lieu of the appropriation contained in the act approved July —, 1919, amending section 2 of the act approved June 27, 1918." Inasmuch as there are already over 4,000 disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines in training, and inasmuch as another 4,000 will be put into training now that the amendment to section 2 has become law, it is clear that even at the rate of only $80 a month a sum approximating $8,000,000 will be required for the mere support of these men, and that under the present appropriation nothing will be available for their tuition and travel or for placing them where they can earn a living, and it will be impossible to meet the needs of the new thousands who are every week seeking the benefits of the rehabilitation act. In the offices of the board in the District of Columbia and in 14 great centers of the United States immediate help is being given to men in need of these services, and these offices are used for the essential purpose of keeping accurate records, of providing proper medical survey of the men, of caring for them in their illnesses, and for various administrative costs inseparable from difficult work of this kind, which must, in the present circumstances, reach to every corner of the United States.

Furthermore, the same section of the sundry civil bill places such limitations upon the salaries which the Federal Board for Vocational Education is permitted to pay that it will inevitably result in the loss by the Vocational Board of a very large number of men who have made themselves especially valuable, and, indeed, indispensable, in this new work by reason of their native ability, their proven general experience, and their special training, and to whose advice the disabled men must look as well as for superintendence in the matter of training and employment. Among these are the vocational advisers, whose special duty it is to study the men in the hospitals, confer with them, and lay out their vocational plans. These hospital cases must, if these men are to be dismissed or allowed to resign, get along entirely without such advice and supervision until they have been able, after their discharge, to make their way on their own initiative to the distant offices of the Federal board.

These serious limitations upon the amount of money available and the uses to which it is to be put involves, therefore, an actual disruption of a carefully built up service at the very moment when the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines now in the country or returning to it are most immediately in need of help. This is a matter of the gravest consequence. It can not but have far-reaching and disastrous effects upon the plan so carefully thought out for the immediate and thorough rehabilitation of men in the service of the country.

I want my good friends on the other side now to note the admonition that the President gave to Congress on July 11, 1919:

I therefore return the bill with the hope that the Congress will reconsider this section of the law, restore the six millions appropriated under the act amending section 2, and most liberally revise the salary limitations, so that this beneficent work may go on and go on at once. I am convinced that in this matter I speak the sentiments and the hopes of those who have most carefully studied the needs of the returning soldiers and who are best qualified to carry out a purpose which I am sure the country has very much at heart.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
11 July, 1919.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to engage in anything which even smacks of partisanship, but if there has been any want of efficiency for lack of funds or suffering for lack of proper allowances, what would there have been had this bill been signed by the President and had he not vetoed it and returned it to the Congress in order that proper appropriation could be made for the work which he outlined? Did not the President have vision at that time which took into consideration the very obstacles which have appeared in the hearings before our Committee on Education, which have been going on for several weeks? What would have happened to our disabled men had they been denied the money which was absolutely necessary, and which the President himself caused to be provided by Congress by vetoing and sending back to this House and to the Senate the entire sundry civil appropriation bill, with all of its many appropriations, in order that this one single item might be corrected and increased? I merely call that to the attenton of my partisan friends on the other side of the aisle, hoping that in consideration of the peculiar circumstances of this case in the future they will leave out of their many arguments on the floor so much partisanship with respect to the Democratic administration and especially the action of the President of the United States.

I am glad that there is no opposition to this bill. The hearings before our committee show that the men can not exist on the present allowance that has heretofore been allowed them in cities like New York and elsewhere. They could not get the actual necessities of life in such places. I am glad that this bill will go through without opposition. No opposition has appeared on the floor up to this time.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], the author of the bill.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any necessity for argument on this bill. A plain statement of fact is all that is required to insure its unanimous passage by this House, for I assume that every Member of the House is sincerely solicitous of the welfare of the wounded and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines who have taken part in the recent war. I assume that everyone wants to see them rehabilitated so that they can return to civil life and become self-sustaining and self-respecting members of society, and I also assume that everyone familiar with present living conditions—and I think we have had some personal experience—knows that the present amount allowed by the Government under the act of July 11, 1919, is not sufficient to meet the high cost of food, clothing, lodging, and other necessary expenses they may have to meet, particularly in the large centers of population, like New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, and other cities, where most of this training is carried on.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARROW. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman from New York a few moments ago asked if the board was not allowing the full maximum amount of $80, which is provided under the present law for a single person and $100 for a married person. Is it not the gentleman's observation that the full amount allowed is necessary?

Mr. DARROW. I should imagine that the full allowance would be necessary in any place where these boys are undergoing this training. Whether the increased allowance will be I do not know.

I introduced this bill at the request of the American Legion. It was framed in accordance with the provisions of a resolution passed at their convention in Minneapolis. It is the first official request that has come to Congress from that body. It has been approved by the veterans of foreign wars and by nearly everyone, so far as I know, who knows anything about this situation. The Committee on Education, which granted us a hearing, came to a unanimous conclusion that we had proven our case and reported it out of committee without a dissenting vote and recommended its passage. The Committee on Rules was also unanimous in reporting a rule for its prompt consideration, because they thought it was urgent, if we want these men to continue the training they are now taking, to have this bill immediately enacted into law.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the evidence before the Committee on Education absolutely establish the fact that it is necessary?

Mr. DARROW. Absolutely. The question was asked a few moments ago what other countries are paying. My recollection is that in Canada men who are receiving this rehabilitation training are receiving $165.83 per month, made up, of course, in various ways. That was brought out before the Committee of the Whole when we had the former bill under consideration.

I tried then to have an amendment adopted to it which would grant approximately the amount which we are now seeking to establish in this bill. This is none too much to meet the requirements of these men. I want to direct your attention to the budgets submitted to the committee by the young men who are taking courses of training; some of them are printed in the hearings. It is true that they apply to conditions prevailing in Philadelphia and New York, but like conditions are found in most of our cities. In these budgets they have shown only their unavoidable expenses down to the penny, and had they not received outside aid from such splendid organizations as the Carry On Association, the Rocky Mountain Club, the Red Cross, and other benevolent institutions they would have been forced to give up long ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DARROW. Can the gentleman from Ohio yield me a little more time?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to say that I have no time to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas very much, but I can not make much further statement in one minute. I wanted to say that this had been confirmed by the testimony of Mrs. Wendell Phillips, president of the Carry On Association, and Mr. John Hays Hammond, president of the Rocky Mountain Club, representatives of the American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The evidence showed that the Carry On Association was furnishing food and lodging at wholesale cost without any overhead charges, and then the expense per man was $100.33 per month.

I have received many appealing letters from all over the country, letters that touch the heart and excite the sympathy of every appreciative American. These letters often tell a pathetic story of wounds that prevent their return to their old vocation. These brave men who have suffered so much do not want to be wards of charity; they simply ask to be placed where they can again be an asset to their country in civil life. But, gentlemen, it is not necessary for me to appeal to your sympathy; your good judgment and sense of right will impel everyone present to vote for the passage of this bill, and everyone absent would also vote for it if present. These men have suffered much, and it is our patriotic and solemn duty to bind up their wounds and replace the scars of battle by opening the door of new opportunity.

By unanimous consent Mr. DARROW was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL].

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who, despite the limited time at his disposal, has very courteously allowed me a few moments in which to be heard on this bill. The bill seeks to increase the amount of pay to soldiers who are students under the Government from $80 to $100 for single men and from $100 to $120 for married men, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12266) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, be hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That every person enlisted, enrolled, drafted, inducted, or appointed in the military or naval forces of the United States, including members of training camps authorized by law, who, since April 7, 1917, has resigned or has been discharged or furloughed therefrom under honorable conditions, having a disability incurred, increased, or aggravated while a member of such forces, or later developing a disability traceable, in the opinion of the board, to service with such forces, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability shall be furnished by the said board, where vocational rehabilitation is feasible, such course of vocational rehabilitation as the board shall prescribe and provide.

"The board shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to furnish the persons included in this section suitable courses of vocational rehabilitation, to be prescribed and provided by the board; and every person electing to follow such a course of vocational rehabilitation shall, while following the same, be paid monthly by the said board from the appropriation hereinafter provided such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support and for the maintenance and support of persons depending upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course shall be more than $100 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $120 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act."

It is a most commendable piece of legislation, one that is certain to enlist the support of the Congress, regardless of party, and one that will bring the greatest good to the greatest number. It is gratifying to note a disposition on the part of this body to help the disabled soldier of the World War to help himself. Every Member of this House remembers that on July 12, 1919, the President of the United States returned to Congress the sundry civil bill with his veto, predicated upon the fact that it did not provide adequately for the vocational rehabilitation of the soldiers of the World War. I quote, in part, from that veto message:

It is a matter of very grave concern, therefore, that at the very moment when these disabled men are coming in constantly increasing numbers to the Government to avail themselves of this generous plan that there should appear in the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I now return, limiting clauses which will do much more than seriously cripple and retard the beneficial work of restoring these men to useful and contented lives.

I rejoice that we are all now in accord in our efforts to adequately provide for these men; that we recognize the debt we owe for the inestimable work they did and the sacrifices they made for the benefit of mankind. So far as I am able to ascertain, there is no opposition to the bill on either side of the House. I do not see how there could be after listening to the statements made on the floor to-day, to the effect that many of these disabled heroes pleaded their own cause before the Committee on Education, and that as a result that committee unanimously voted to report the bill now before us bearing the name of my distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], who possesses to an exceptional extent the esteem and admiration of this House. As one who believes that there is no gift within the ability of the Nation sufficiently adequate to compensate these men for their service to their country, I earnestly hope and trust that this bill will pass by acclamation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. FESS. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the first bill passed by Congress looking to the relief of disabled soldiers was the war-risk insurance bill, which became a law October 6, 1917. That bill included a provision which contemplated vocational rehabilitation for our disabled soldiers and sailors.

Under the original act, no disabled soldier or sailor could receive more than $65 per month with which to pay his expenses while taking training. The new Republican Congress met in May, 1919, and in July, 1919, the original act was amended, which provided that single men could receive as much as $80 per month and married men $100 per month, with allowances for their wife and children, while taking this training—that is, $15 per month for the wife, $10 for the first child, and $5 per month for each additional child. If there is no wife, but two children, $12.50 per month. If there is no wife, but three children, $20 per month. If there is no wife, but four children, $30 per month, and $5 per month additional for each additional child.

INCREASE OF $20 PER MONTH.

This bill proposes to increase the allowance for each single man and married man $20 per month, so that the single man may receive as much as $100 per month and the married man as much as $120 per month, with the allowances for wife and children heretofore spoken of, to pay his expenses while taking training. The Vocational Board may limit them to the actual amount necessary to meet their expenses while taking this training. Is this increase necessary? Our Committee on Education, which reported this bill to the House and is now urging its passage, took a great deal of testimony from persons who were competent to speak on this subject. We had the representatives of soldiers who are taking the training in 53 colleges and training schools. They produced itemized budgets showing their necessary expenses. There also appeared before our committee national representatives of the American Legion, World War Veterans; Mrs. Wendell Phillips, president of the Carry On Association for World War Soldiers; Hon. John Hays Hammond, representing the Rocky Mountain Club; Mr. E. H. Hale, representing the Veterans of Foreign Wars; representatives of the Elks Lodge and other charitable and welfare associations. All of these organizations have been actively engaged in this vocational work in behalf of the disabled soldiers. All of them have made a careful study of this question. They prove conclusively the necessity for this increase. They all indorsed this bill and urged its immediate passage.

It was proved beyond doubt that a great many disabled soldiers and sailors were forced to give up their training because the sum allowed under the present law was inadequate to pay their expenses while taking training. In many other instances the Elks Lodge, the Carry On Association, the Rocky Mountain Club, and other fraternal and charitable organizations had to loan money or contribute money to our disabled soldiers and sailors in order that they might meet their expenses while taking this training.

OUR DISABLED HEROES SHOULD NOT HAVE TO DEPEND UPON CHARITY.

While I greatly appreciate these efforts and contributions and applaud the purpose of the Elks Lodge, the Carry On Association, the Red Cross, the Rocky Mountain Club, and other charitable and patriotic organizations for and in behalf of the disabled soldiers and sailors of the World War, yet since these boys became disabled in defense of our common country this great, rich Government of ours should so generously provide for these disabled heroes that it will not be necessary for them to depend upon the generosity or charity of any organization or association. [Applause.]

OUR DUTY—A GREAT PURPOSE.

Hundreds of thousands of men crippled and broken in health in defense of the Union returned to their homes in the Civil War and were forced to drag their lives out in that disabled condition without training and without being able to return to civil employment and earn support for themselves. This same condition prevailed after the Spanish-American War and other wars of our country. One of the very greatest thoughts of the century is the purpose of the American people to retrain, rebuild, and rehabilitate the men who became crippled and disabled in the defense of our country. An enlightened humanity throughout the ages must applaud this great purpose. It must be approved, and will be approved, as a sound economical policy of the Government. These boys have not only returned to us broken in body but greatly depressed in mind and spirit. They can not return to their usual vocations and professions. Everything looks dark to them. Let us give to them this training. Let us point the way to them whereby through this training they can earn more money and be more useful to the Nation than they were before they entered the service. Let us develop to the fullest their minds and hearts, that part of their being which is divine and which is in the image of God himself. Let us fire them with a new ambition and inspire them with a new hope and courage. Let us prepare them to win victories in peace for our Nation equally as glorious as they won across the sea. Something has been said on the floor of the House to-day about the depleted condition of our Treasury. This is a matter of deep concern to every thoughtful Member of this House. If our soldier boys can gather enough courage to begin the struggle of life over again under their great handicaps, the American people should not think about the money or labor necessary to retrain these disabled boys. We owe to them a debt of gratitude which we can not fully repay, let us do ever so much. Our duty is the first and highest consideration. It should be a labor of love to every true American to reward to the fullest those who gave so much and sacrificed so much and triumphed so gloriously in the defense of our country. [Applause.]

IS THIS TRAINING NECESSARY AND WILL IT BE A SUCCESS?

We must look at this question from the viewpoint of the disabled boy. Our soldiers and sailors were the pick of the Nation, both physically and mentally. Nearly all of them were trained for certain work. They were taken from the farm, the factory, the mine, the office, the store, the school, and every other walk of life. They went forth full of ambition and hope, but the young man who was splendidly fitted for farming has given a leg, an arm, or both legs and arms to his country. He has a good mind, but he can no longer be a farmer. The purpose of this law is to allow him a sufficient sum to pay his expenses while he is learning to be a bookkeeper, teacher, or learning some other trade or profession suited to his present condition.

Here is a young man who had fitted himself for teaching or office work. He was gassed. His lungs are affected. He has a touch of tuberculosis. He must have the open air. He is not able to return to his indoor employment. He must now be trained to be a farmer, forester, gardener, civil engineer, or some other work that will enable him to make his living in the open air.

Here is another young man that has been disabled in some way, but if he were trained he would make a fine wireless operator. Here is another young man that would make a fine automobile mechanic, another a machinist, a draftsman, a druggist, or a factory foreman, mine foreman, or timekeeper, if he had the training.

There are about 130,000 of our soldier boys that were so crippled or whose health has been so much impaired that they can not return to their usual vocations, trades, or professions, and they must be trained for some other trade or profession suitable to their physical condition and for which they appear to be best fitted. Now, the purpose of this law is to provide the necessary expenses for these disabled boys while they are taking this training. The average time required for these boys will be about 12 months, and the average cost per man will be something like $1,800, and, altogether, it will cost the Government something like $250,000,000 if all of these boys take the training. This money will be well spent. It will make these splendid boys self-sustaining and self-respected American citizens. It will inspire them with new hope and courage, and, above all, we shall in a small measure repay a part of the great debt of gratitude which our country and we owe to the proudest, best, and bravest army that fought on either side in the recent World War. Not a single vote should be, and I feel not one vote will be, cast against this bill.

Mr. FESS. We have only one more speech.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield such time as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN] wants to use.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think that the necessity for this legislation is epitomized in the statement of Mr. Crampton, a wounded soldier, who appeared before the Committee on Education, and which statement is on page 31 of the hearings, under date of February 17, 1920.

I read therefrom:

> I feel that we are all very, very thankful to the Carry On Association for all they have done for us, but we feel that the Government has fallen down; that is our feeling, and that it should not be necessary for us to have money advanced to us by the Carry On Association, or anyone; the Government should do that.

What is the situation here, gentlemen? It is this: Here is this young disabled soldier, who lived under the auspices of the Carry On Association, of New York, which is an association incorporated under the laws of New York, and runs its business not for a profit but alone for the benefit of the disabled soldier. Its sole and entire object is to furnish a suitable place for the maintenance, housing, and furnishing laundry needs for the crippled man.

Who else is doing this work that the Government should do? It is the Red Cross and kindred organizations. The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks has done its full share. What has it done? Why, gentlemen, if you needed any argument to clearly show you the necessity for this legislation, you need but read the hearings to learn what we of the committee know, that that great order has made advancements amounting to over $300,000 to these crippled boys, to house, and maintain them during the period of their rehabilitation training, simply because these boys were unable to support themselves under the Government maintenance allowance.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], in reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], said in substance that at the time the President sent in his message, giving his reasons for vetoing the sundry civil bill, that the message did not disclose the degree of benefit for the crippled soldier which the gentleman from Texas claimed for it.

In reply I would say that the words of the President used at that time, giving the reason for his veto, to me, now seem almost prophetic.

Let me read from pages 2493–2494 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 12, 1919:

> Inasmuch as there are already over 4,000 disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines in training, and inasmuch as another 4,000 will be put into training now that the amendment of section 2 has become law, it is clear that even at the rate of only $80 a month a sum approximating $8,000,000 will be required for the mere support of these men, and that under the present appropriation nothing will be available for their tuition and travel or for placing them where they can earn a living, and it will be impossible to meet the needs of the new thousands who are every week seeking the benefits of the rehabilitation act.
> Furthermore, the same section of the sundry civil bill places such limitations upon the salaries which the Federal Board for Vocational Education is permitted to pay that it will inevitably result in the loss by the Vocational Board of a very large number of men who have made themselves especially valuable, and, indeed, indispensable, in this new work by reason of their native ability, their proven general experience, and their special training, and to whose advice the disabled men must look as well as for superintendence in the matter of training and employment. Among these are the vocational advisers, whose special duty it is to study the men in the hospitals, confer with them, and lay out their vocational plans. These hospital cases must, if these men are to be dismissed or allowed to resign, get along entirely without such advice and supervision until they have been able, after their discharge, to make their way on their own initiative to the distant offices of the Federal board.

We are to-day confronted with this condition. The Committee on Education is holding hearings on the alleged or real falling down in the administration of the law by the Federal Board for Vocational Education. The reason, in my opinion, why the hearings are held is that because of the shortsightedness of the Congress in limiting the appropriation, as referred to in the message of the President, that the trained men who were then administering the law soon thereafter severed their connection with this work, and this is largely responsible for the condition of which we to-day are hearing great complaint.

The Carry On Association, of the city of New York, spent over $150,000 in its great work in dealing and caring for over 2,000 wounded service men; has conclusively demonstrated that under its management, buying all its supplies at wholesale, with no overhead charge, with the employment of one of the best business systems imaginable, that it costs to feed, house, and care for a crippled man while in training, without a cent for clothing or pocket money, $67.38 a month.

It will be readily seen that $80 a month is wholly inadequate when maintenance is to be supplied at the retail price in such cities as New York, Chicago, Boston, and Philadelphia.

It is a most commendable work, in which these great volunteer organizations are engaged, but the words of our young friend Crampton are potent with meaning when he says, "We feel that the Government has fallen down."

This condition should not prevail, and yet if it were not for these great organizations which have stepped into the breach these boys who have given the best they had to save the country, and have come through the crucible of war crippled and maimed, would have been practically destitute, and should have been provided for by the Congress representing the grateful American people.

We can now, however, retrieve to some extent what faults may exist by insufficient legislation to date by the passage of this proposed amendment, which gives both the single and the married man a $20 maintenance increase. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have two minutes remaining. I want to remind the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] of the record. What was known as the Buchanan motion when this bill came back to the House under the President's veto would have provided $12,000,000 for this work. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] offered a substitute to make it $8,000,000 instead of $12,000,000, and the vote came on a roll call on the Mondell substitute for the Buchanan motion. Let us see what the vote was in that respect. The question was whether there should be $8,000,000 or $12,000,000, and I find my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] voting, on page 2773 of the RECORD, for the Mondell substitute, which was adroitly framed so as to make it appear that it was giving $8,000,000 instead of only $6,000,000, when, as a matter of fact, the proposition of Mr. BUCHANAN would have given $12,000,000 instead of $8,000,000, as proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming. Here is the vote. There were 202 in the affirmative for the Mondell substitute and 184 against. This will be found on page 2773 of the RECORD of July 17, 1919. It was a partisan vote on that measure. My good friends, the Republicans, voted for the $8,000,000 proposition, and my Democratic colleagues on this side of the aisle, who unfortunately were in the minority, to the detriment of the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of this country, were for the $12,000,000. There are the facts. You can not disguise or change the RECORD, regardless of the adroitness with which the Mondell substitute was worded and framed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FESS. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised at the attempt of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to bring partisanship into this debate. Now, what are the facts as to what happened at the time to which the gentleman from Texas refers? With the passage of the Mondell amendment this House gave to the Vocational Board, for the purpose of taking care of all of these disabled soldiers, $14,000,000, when the largest amount that had ever been asked for by the Vocational Board itself—a Democratic board, which had charge of the administration of this law—was $10,000,000. [Applause on the Republican side.] Those are the facts. And if there is any complaint or any trouble with the administration of this law in regard to disabled soldiers, the fault lies with the Democratic administration of the law. Mr. Griffin, who comes from the city so ably represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN], resigned from his post as district vocational officer of the New York district because, as he testified recently before our committee, he was dissatisfied with the way in which the Vocational Board was administering the law. Among other things, he said that he had prepared a budget showing that the Vocational Board needed $50,000,000 for this important work, and yet the board itself and the administrative officers of the board here at Washington told the Committee on Appropriations and Congress that they needed only $10,000,000.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I regret that I have not the time.

And right here, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of all the Members of this House, Democrats as well as Republicans, I desire to state most emphatically that this Congress has always been willing to vote every cent that has been asked for by the Vocational Board for carrying on the all-important work of caring for our disabled soldiers. If the board has not asked for enough money, or if the members of the board or the director have ignored the recommendations of their own subordinates and the work has been handicapped, then the fault is with the administration of the law and not with Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I desire further to make it clear that there has been no delay on the part of the Committee on Education in regard to this bill. It will be remembered that last July the President of the United States in his veto message, which has been read by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], said that $80 a month was a liberal amount. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] introduced this bill and a hearing was held by the committee in February. At that hearing a number of disabled soldiers appeared and satisfied the committee that $80 per month was inadequate and that they ought to have $100 a month instead of $80. On that very day, at the close of the hearing, the committee unanimously voted to report the Darrow bill, which has now come before this House under a special rule. As one who believes that we can not do too much for these men who were disabled in the service of their country I sincerely trust and expect that it will receive the unanimous approval of this body. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The bill was read in full for amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FESS: Page 1, line 8, after the figures "1918," insert the following: "as amended by the act of July 11, 1919."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, that is simply to complete the record. This law of July 27, 1918, was amended on July 11, 1919, and in order to make it complete we do not amend the original act but we amend the act as amended.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The act of July 11, 1919, has a title. Should not that be incorporated in the amendment? There might be three or four acts of July 11, 1919.

Mr. FESS. The title is simply in the form of an amendment and——

Mr. WALSH. What I am getting at is, was the act of July 11, 1919, simply an act to amend the law of July 27, 1918?

Mr. FESS. It was. It was simply an amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would just like to make a suggestion about an amendment that I think would be very proper to put in this bill. We had the same trouble with every amendment to the war-risk insurance act until we added an amendment that the act should be cited as the war-risk insurance act. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to cite each amendment by a numeral and a letter, and have it stated that "This bill shall be cited as the vocational-rehabilitation act," and then the amendment of that date? I feel quite certain it is not the last amendment we are going to have to this act. It is just a question of procedure.

Mr. FESS. My own opinion is that it is a very good suggestion.

Mr. RAYBURN. We have had various amendments to the war-risk insurance act, and we would have come very soon to the point where the caption of the bill would have taken up the whole page, but since that time all we have to write in an amendment is that "the war-risk insurance act is hereby amended to read as follows."

I was thinking that probably it would be a good thing for this bill.

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend from Texas that the war-risk insurance act is a permanent affair and will run on for years. I doubt very seriously whether this work for the disabled soldier will not all be completed within four years and further work discontinued.

Mr. RAYBURN. I know. It is just a question of easy enactment.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will offer that amendment, so far as I am concerned I would be very glad to accept it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. For the purpose of keeping the record straight, I know the gentleman from Ohio is always fair, and I want to ask him if it is not a fact that in the final passage of this bill there was an effort on this side of the aisle to give to this work $4,000,000 more than the gentleman's side of the aisle finally agreed to. Is not that a fact?

Mr. FESS. I think that my friend is entirely in error.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not admit that?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not admit that the purpose of the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] was to make this appropriation $12,000,000 instead of $8,000,000?

Mr. FESS. I think that statement is correct. Some one did offer an amendment to make it $12,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman admits that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] would give $12,000,000 instead of $8,000,000?

Mr. FESS. The amendment was to give $12,000,000, or $4,000,000 more than was asked for. This side of the House is not dealing with public funds in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to ask a question. Does the gentleman from Ohio know whether there is any rule by which this allowance is discontinued? Suppose the soldier refuses to continue his studies.

Mr. FESS. That is in the law.

Mr. McKEOWN. I have had some complaint about soldiers who went in and started their studies, and then, without any apparent excuse at all, quit. Then they could not get paid.

Mr. FESS. The law requires the compensation to be cut out. In other words, that is the penalty for their not taking the vocational training.

Mr. McKEOWN. Then what takes place? Does such a man take his regular allowance under the war-risk insurance?

Mr. FESS. He does not lose his allowance under the war-risk insurance.

Mr. McKEOWN. That continues?

Mr. FESS. That continues.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. The allowance does not continue while he is drawing his vocational-training money.

Mr. FESS. What do you mean by his "allowance"?

Mr. PARRISH. I mean his compensation. The law provides $30.

Mr. FESS. The law provides that he shall receive the amount that is greater. If it is the compensation, it shall be that; if it is vocational aid, it shall be that.

Mr. PARRISH. But it is only one?

Mr. FESS. Only one.

There is one question that has been raised frequently, and I think it ought to be cleared up, because there has been some misconception about it. If a man in vocational training, receiving an allowance from the Government, spends part of it while working for wages, he is not penalized by having cut off the amount he receives in wages from his allowance. That question has come up, and I understand the board does not do that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Assume this sort of a case: That a man was injured in the service to such an extent that he was given a 50 per cent permanent disability, entitling him to a certain specified allowance in the war-risk insurance. Now, in the event he takes up vocational training he gets the $80 a month while he is in training?

Mr. FESS. That is just for his keep.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But does he not at the same time get his allowance from the War Risk?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. His disability allowance?

Mr. FESS. No; not unless the allowance that he gets from the Vocational Board is less than the other. He gets whichever is greater.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. His family would get the regular allowance from the War Risk?

Mr. FESS. Yes; if it is in the form of an allotment under section 2.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is talking about compensation, and the gentleman from Texas is talking about an allotment allowance.

Mr. FESS. He gets the compensation if it is larger than the aid from the board. He gets whichever is the larger.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That was my impression. But in reading the latter part of page 2 and page 3 I got the impression hurriedly that this changes that.

Mr. FESS. No; this amendment does not change the ruling of the board.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. This training is only given to discharged soldiers, is it not?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that the families of men who have been discharged from the military or naval service get an allowance from the Government?

Mr. FESS. Only in case they are beneficiaries under section 2 of the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. WALSH. That is compensation.

Mr. FESS. Section 3 is compensation. Section 2 is the allowance and allotment.

Mr. WALSH. The allowance and allotment are only continued while the soldier is in the service?

Mr. FESS. We have a provision that when a person goes into the training, if he happens to have a dependent there will be an allowance made to continue for the family while he is taking the training.

Mr. WALSH. That will be the same as provided in section 2, which was operative while he was in the service?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Now, then, assuming a case where a discharged soldier undertakes vocational training and then decides to give it up, and the pay while under training is greater than the allowance, when he gives up the training does the compensation automatically decrease?

Mr. FESS. I understand so. The allowance for the family stops, but the compensation continues.

Mr. WALSH. I was not quite clear on that from what the gentleman said in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In the event a man starts training and receives this $80 a month allowance, and then for some reason or other drops out of the training, he ceases then to have the $80 allowance?

Mr. FESS. Yes. That is the penalty. The law does not compel anyone to take training. If he enters and later gives it up his allowance is cut off, and rightly so.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; but he is then entitled to disability compensation, to which he would be entitled previous to taking the vocational training?

Mr. FESS. He is.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman tell me just what method is used to notify the War Risk Bureau that this man is again entitled to compensatory allowance?

Mr. FESS. There is the very closest correlation between the two bureaus, the Vocational Board and the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and when a person drops out notice of discontinuance of the allowance to him is given whenever that penalty is announced. The board announces to the War Risk Bureau that they have discontinued. Or they apply to the board for compensation and get it that way. We find that there are persons who had taken up the work and discontinued it and then have not been receiving compensation, seemingly because they have missed connection somewhere.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I have run across those cases.

Mr. FESS. Yes; we have several of them disclosed in the present investigation now in progress.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I wondered what the reason for it was.

Mr. FESS. Evidently this is an interruption in the orderly process.

Mr. Chairman, if the committee will permit, I will say that in the investigations we have been conducting evidence has come in showing some lapses and some irregularities, just as was suggested a moment ago, but this is largely due to a clerical matter, I think not at all due to the law, and I take the time to state that I regret that my friend Mr. DONOVAN intimated that the board was breaking down due to a lack of congressional support. I am sure if he would think a little longer on this matter he would be cautious about making that statement.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. What I intended to say was that in the President's message as it was read and as I quoted it he stated that lots of good men were going to be cut off from the service on account of the limitation of salaries, and I think the gentleman will agree with me that that fact is brought out by the evidence in the hearings, that the amount of the pay was limited and therefore these men left it.

Mr. FESS. I can not agree with my friend on that.

Mr. DONOVAN. I can show it in the hearings.

Mr. FESS. And also I regret that a note of that sort should be injected here at this stage of the investigation, for the simple reason that we are making a desperate effort to make that investigation not only absolutely nonpartisan but also entirely thorough and exhaustive, and there ought not to be any statement of that sort at this stage. We have only heard one side of the story.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. DONOVAN. If the gentleman will recall, I did not make that statement until after the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] had made some reference of a partisan character, in reference to President's message explaining his veto.

Mr. FESS. I am sorry that this element was injected.

Mr. DONOVAN. I am myself, but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] invited it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the chairman of the committee has been so busy with other matters that he has not had time to review the many questions injected into the hearing from time to time by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. FESS. The chairman of the committee will state that he has been in attendance upon the hearings every minute of the time and has heard all the questions. I have not reviewed them, but I heard them.

Mr. BLANTON. Did they not appear to the gentleman to be rather partisan?

Mr. FESS. That depends entirely on the angle from which you look at it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I want to say that the gentleman from Kentucky refrained from referring to the investigation now being made of the Vocational Board because we had heard only one side, and in a few days we will begin hearing the other side. I want to say that I made no reference to that investigation on the floor of the House here and do not intend to make any reference to it.

Mr. FESS. I thank the gentleman for that. I think there ought not to be anything of that kind injected into the debate at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House as amended, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GOODYKOONTZ, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12266) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FESS. The previous question is ordered under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, would it be out of place to let the RECORD show that the bill passed unanimously?

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman can demand a division.

Mr. FESS. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes none.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FESS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE AT SUNDAY SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will designate the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to preside over the House tomorrow during the memorial exercises for the late Mr. THOMPSON, of Oklahoma.

TO REGULATE DEALING IN LEAF TOBACCO.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 13432.

Mr. WALSH. Is that a privileged motion?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; it is a revenue measure. Pending the motion, I should like to arrange for a division of time. We have all the afternoon before us anyway.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I have not heard of requests for more than about half an hour on this side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then, pending the motion, I ask unanimous consent that there be one hour for general debate; and if there is no objection, I should like to control three-quarters of an hour, with 15 minutes on the other side.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] wanted 25 or 30 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, half the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13432) to regulate dealing in leaf tobacco, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this bill to regulate dealing in leaf tobacco is made necessary by a situation which arises under the revenue law of 1918.

Under the revenue law of 1909, commonly known as the Payne bill, retail dealing in leaf tobacco was permitted without any tax, but there were regulations, as there are in the present bill, with reference to such dealers, requiring them to conform to certain rules prescribed in the law and other rules made by the Treasury for their regulation.

The last revenue bill was so framed that retail dealing in leaf tobacco was not permitted by anyone except the farmer or producer. He could sell it, but nobody else could sell leaf tobacco at retail. Now a situation has arisen so that the farmers who formerly dealt in leaf tobacco are unable to dispose of their product. I shall not go into the situation extensively, because it will be more fully explained by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who comes from a tobacco district and can fully describe it.

This situation having arisen, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] introduced a bill, which was in effect the provision of the Payne bill, which permits retail dealing in leaf tobacco without any tax. The Ways and Means Committee, however, thought this kind of dealing ought not to be permitted without some tax being imposed thereon. This bill of the gentleman from Tennessee was framed to permit retail dealing in leaf tobacco by others than the farmers.

The committee will understand that the farmer and grower was always permitted to sell it at retail, and he is now. But when it passes into the hands of some other party than the farmer or the grower, then the retail dealing in leaf tobacco is not permitted. This bill so modifies the present law that this leaf tobacco may be sold at retail by the dealers by paying a tax of 7 cents a pound. This tax may seem very light, but from the testimony before the committee it developed that the trade would have to be carried on largely by parcel post, which would add a further tax amounting to from 4 to 6 cents a pound, and that very little of it would be sold in the immediate tobacco zone, almost all of it being sold at a distance. How much revenue this bill will provide no one can tell, because we have no data upon which to base any figures. But that it will produce some revenue and permit the farmers who now have tobacco on hand to have an outlet whereby they can dispose of their product is beyond question.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has explained quite clearly the purpose of this measure, but perhaps it will not be amiss to add a few words to what he has so well said. Along the northern border of Tennessee and the southern border of Kentucky, through the western and central parts of those States, there are about 25 counties in which there is produced a type of tobacco which differs from the tobacco grown in any other part of the United States or of the world. It is a course, heavy, dark, tobacco, and that section composed of these 25 counties is known as the black patch, as distinct from the Kentucky and Tennessee Burley and other tobacco sections or districts.

It had been my impression, and I so stated in the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means, that not over 5 per cent of this tobacco found a market among domestic manufacturers. That was my impression, but I find upon inquiry that there is a somewhat larger amount than that which finds its way into domestic manufacture—into snuff and wrappers for a certain quality of cigar. But it is safe to say that from 75 to 80 per cent of this tobacco grown in the black patch finds no market except in European countries, principally in Italy, Austria, and France. It is a tobacco which will bear ocean shipment and which meets the taste of the population of those countries. The market for it is found there. I think I am correct in saying that 75 per cent of that which is exported goes to Italy.

Now, by reason of the depreciation in the currency of those foreign countries, by reason of the difference in exchange with which we are all familiar, it has resulted that the foreign market has been absolutely demoralized. These Governments that I have named themselves purchase this tobacco. It is a Government monopoly. The Government buys the tobacco and resells it to the consumers, deriving a large amount of Government revenue from that business. We get much of our revenue by a tax on tobacco. They do not impose a tax but have it as a Government monopoly, buy it in this country, manufacture it, and resell it to consumers in foreign countries.

Now, with not over 25 per cent at the outside for which there can be any market in manufacture found in this country, and with the foreign market demoralized on account of the condition of the currency of these countries, it results that our local market in the black patch is absolutely demoralized. To-day such little tobacco as is being sold throughout these 25 counties is being sold in the main at less than cost of production. However, there is a demand among many of the people in the United States for this tobacco in its natural state without having been manufactured or having anything done to it beyond the condition that you see in this package which I hold in my hand. And, by the way, this is known as a "hand" of tobacco.

But in order to create a demand for it a certain amount of advertising is essential, and it requires money to do that. It requires capital to be invested in order to find a market among the consumers for this natural leaf tobacco.

In the act of 1909, commonly called the Payne Act, a provision was inserted—and, by the way, Members who were here prior to that time will recall that we had a long fight in the House of Representatives—that was when I first became a Member of the House—to secure the privilege of dealing in the natural unstemmed leaf tobacco. We passed the measure, as I remember it, through the House two or three times prior to 1909, but did not succeed in securing its passage through the other body until the Payne bill was under consideration, at which time there was inserted in it a provision which admitted of this loose-leaf retail dealing without the payment of any tax whatever. In other words, an individual could go out and buy the farmer's tobacco and could advertise this tobacco and could resell it to the consumer without the payment of any tax so long as it remained in its natural condition, stripped but unstemmed.

When the revenue act of 1918 was under consideration, and during the very last days of its consideration in the Senate, an amendment was inserted which none of us discovered in the House until it was too late to remedy the situation, which absolutely destroyed the possibility of engaging in this business, except that the producer, the grower of tobacco, could himself sell his own production without the payment of any tax. This act did not impose a tax on this dealing. It simply provided in effect that this character of dealing should not be carried on, and even though one qualified as a manufacturer he could not sell in excess of 1 pound and had to pay a tax of 18 cents per pound on that, the same as upon the manufactured product. So soon as the special session of the Congress convened in May last a number of us from the tobacco sections introduced bills designed to remedy this situation. I do not recall all of the bills that were introduced. I know that my colleagues from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS and Mr. BYRNS] and the gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. KINCHELOE] and doubtless others from the tobacco section, as well as myself, introduced measures, all of them designed to restore the law as it stood under the Payne Act of 1909 and permit this dealing to be resumed without the payment of any tax. Recently the Committee on Ways and Means kindly gave a hearing upon my bill and after considering it the committee concluded that it was equitable and proper that dealing in this character of tobacco should be permitted, but that it was legitimate that a tax should be levied and that the Government should derive some revenues from it. We, of course, are not prepared to contest the equity of that conclusion. So long as we are raising revenues upon tobacco sales I should say that much as we might desire that this dealing be permitted without the payment of any tax, yet logically and correctly a tax may be levied. Therefore the bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] in lieu of the several bills pending before the committee will restore the right to one qualifying as a manufacturer to engage in this dealing and sell in packages of 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, and 18 pounds upon the payment of a tax of 7 cents per pound. That seems to be an equitable tax. The tax upon manufactured tobacco is 18 cents per pound.

The tax that it is proposed to levy on this is 7 cents per pound. There will be added to that the postage upon the packages, because the great bulk of this will be shipped by parcel post, and the postage which will be paid upon it, plus the tax that is levied, will probably just about equal or it may exceed slightly the tax of 18 cents per pound.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman state what will be the use of that tobacco? Will it be manufactured by the consumer into twist or plug, or something of that kind, and used for chewing purposes, or will it be made up into smoking tobacco? What is the market for it?

Mr. GARRETT. It will be, of course, sold to the consumer, and this bill contemplates sales to the consumers. It will be used for smoking, and chewing tobacco by those who desire to chew it. That is all that will be done with these small parcels authorized to be sold under this bill.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. With pleasure.

Mr. CANDLER. This tax of 7 cents a pound is only levied on those dealing in the tobacco?

Mr. GARRETT. That is all. It will not affect the farmer.

Mr. CANDLER. Nor affect the producer of the article himself. He may sell it in such quantities as he sees proper to supply the trade he may have.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes. It does not interfere in any way with the present right of the farmer to sell without the payment of any tax the product of his own growth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Surely.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state why it is shipped by parcel post? What is there about this tobacco that makes its shipment different than others? The gentleman said a large bulk will be shipped by parcel post.

Mr. GARRETT. By parcel post or by express. The way the business is done is this: These gentlemen who deal in it advertise extensively through the newspapers, and small quantities will be ordered, 3 pounds by this consumer, 6 pounds by this, and so on, and most frequently he will send a post-office money order to pay for it, and the dealer simply wraps it in a package and mails it by parcel post for convenience. Of course, he can send it by express or in any other way in which it can be transported.

Mr. WALSH. Then, it is not purchased by the large manufacturers in large quantities.

Mr. GARRETT. No. This bill is simply to enable sales to consumers. The gentleman from Massachusetts will understand that the relief that will be given by this is not very large, because the great bulk of the crop is purchased by those who obtain contracts from these foreign Governments for its purchase. This form of dealing will probably not be engaged in by the manufacturers; that is, those who intend to manufacture it at all.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Gladly.

Mr. MILLER. If I understand the bill, the growers of this tobacco have the privilege of selling it without the payment of a tax.

Mr. GARRETT. That is true now.

Mr. MILLER. If the growers of this peculiar form of tobacco form a sales agency among themselves and thereby market their tobacco from this sales agency, this entire agency, then, will be disposed of and this entire output of tobacco will be disposed of without any revenue to the United States Government.

Mr. GARRETT. Not at all. They may, and do now, pool their crops and employ an agent to make sales.

Mr. MILLER. That is what I understand.

Mr. GARRETT. But they must pay that agent a salary. The agent can not work, under the rulings of the Treasury Department, in any other way. Construing the act of 1918, an agent of any group of farmers can not work on a commission basis; he has to receive a fixed, stipulated, definite, well-determined salary before he can represent them, and he must keep all sales separate. That can be done now, and this does not change that law in any respect; but here will be a result of this, I think. There are men scattered throughout the black patch, who are quite anxious to engage in this dealing, and they will organize a business if they feel that they can be on something like a permanent basis, with a revenue laid, and not be apprehensive about the future, and they will immediately proceed to buy out of this year's crop, if we can get this bill passed in time, a supply sufficient to carry them over until the next year's crop will be ready.

And they having a certainty will invest their capital and advertise and pay this tax. As the situation now stands gentlemen can readily understand that it is not practicable for the farmers in any very great degree to organize their pools and employ an agent and pay him a fixed salary when they have no idea how much business he will do and thus dispose of their crops, but under no circumstances, either under the pooling and individual producer's sales, or under the operation of sales by the purchasers, as this bill will allow, or under both combined, will there be anything like half of the crop ordinarily raised in the black patch disposed of to consumers in the United States. It will continue to find its chief market in European countries, and, of course, we derive no revenue from that. This year's crop in the 25 counties is estimated to be about 175,000,000 pounds.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for another short question?

Mr. GARRETT. I do.

Mr. MILLER. Is it impossible under the regulations of the Treasury Department for the producer to be that sales agent?

Mr. GARRETT. A producer can be the sales agent of other producers, but he must for his services for his neighbors, if there be a group of neighbors, receive not a commission but a fixed stipulated salary, and he must keep records of his sales of the different crops separate and a record of his receipts separate in every way.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. If I am correctly informed, this tobacco is grown principally by tenant farmers?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, yes; that is a fair statement.

Mr. HAWLEY. And there are some 80,000 heads of families, or families, involved in this?

Mr. GARRETT. Quite that many.

Mr. HAWLEY. And about the average amount they receive for their crop is $700 to the family?

Mr. GARRETT. I doubt if it is that much.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is their principal means of livelihood?

Mr. GARRETT. It depends, of course, on the price at which the tobacco is sold.

Mr. HAWLEY. Take the price sold about December last.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me say this: It is the principal money crop in the 25 counties.

Mr. HAWLEY. And those tenant farmers have already borrowed money in advance to make this last crop and will owe the money, and they can not sell their crop——

Mr. GARRETT. Precisely.

Mr. HAWLEY. This will afford a means of getting a small part of their necessary living.

Mr. GARRETT. It will, and it will afford some competition, too, to these foreign buyers. If time permitted I could tell this House a story that would——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes additional.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. GARRETT. I could tell this House a story that would perhaps surprise you. Briefly, by reason of the fact that the selling market for this is found abroad and that there is what is known as the French type and what is known as the Italian type and what is known as the Austrian type, there really exists no competition at all, and buyers—that was true in the past and so far as I know may be true now—in some sections of the black patch who held the contracts to purchase for the foreign Governments will go out riding the country and purchase it, because a great deal is bought from the buyer going out from the town and going to the farmers' barn, as it is called, and making his purchases there, and it has happened again and again in my own county, so I have been informed, and throughout the various sections of the black patch, that the territory was so divided that a tobacco buyer would go to a barn upon one side of the road, look at the tobacco and make an offer upon it, and decline to cross the road and see another barn belonging to the same farmer and probably raised in the same field. So that the thing called competition in the purchase of this black tobacco is practically an unknown thing, and by the passage of this measure, if we can have reasonable assurance that it will be permanent law, dealers will build up a business, because there are innumerable persons who prefer the tobacco in just this shape for their use in their pipes and for chewing purposes, and dealers will advertise and build up a market in the United States for very considerable quantities, and the Government will be deriving a revenue which it does not now derive from sales of this character, and there will be competition.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes, indeed.

Mr. KINCHELOE. As a matter of fact the gentleman knows the relief given by reason of the passage of the bill in comparison with the proportion of the great crop is infinitesimal.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; so far as the immediate future is concerned.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But where the farmer will be benefited is by reason of the fact that the dealers work up specially this trade and can afford to pay the farmers a better price because of the special type that the consumers want.

Mr. GARRETT. There is in one town in the county in which I live a dealer who at the time of the passage of the act of 1918 had an immense quantity of tobacco on hand. He had a trade which he had built up for a number of years, and his postage bill for parcel-post packages alone amounted to more than $100 a day on account of the quantity he was sending. That same condition was true in the district of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE], and my other friend from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and the surrounding counties in my State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. I very much hope this bill will pass, and I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. The bill in effect simply means that persons by qualifying under the manufacturing provisions of the internal-revenue laws shall be permitted to sell unstemmed loose-leaf tobacco in packages of 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, and 18 pounds by the payment of a tax of 7 cents per pound.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW]. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the man in overalls has always been my hero. I received a telegram from John W. Ham, a great friend of humanity in my home city of Atlanta, telling me that under the leadership of John A. Manget, a great humanitarian, the fair-price commissioner of Georgia, that they will organize to-morrow in the Baptist Tabernacle a club of something like 4,000, who agree simply to join hands to try to combat the high cost of living.

They ask me to wire an indorsement. Naturally I could not indorse it without practicing what I preach. So I went down town and spent $4 for this good suit of overalls, which I am now wearing, and have wired them that I am going to urge Congress that I think it would be an eminently sensible thing and set a far-reaching example if the Members of Congress would either join the overall club or the old-clothes club, as I have done.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he thinks that Members of Congress have $4 apiece to spend as he has? [Laughter.]

Mr. UPSHAW. I want to say to the gentleman that if he has not the $4, I will go on his note. [Laughter.]

Seriously—nothing sensational about this—all over the land this thing is going to be done. Let us set a good example and help still the tempest of unrest and bring a speedy return of peace to the land we love so well. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CANNON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12260) to amend section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 9629) for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to cancel his signature to the enrolled bills:

S. 1005. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Matoa; and

S. 1222. An act for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett.

That upon the cancellation of such signature the Secretary of the Senate be directed to reenroll said bill S. 1005 with an amendment as follows: Strike out of section 2 the following words: "That should damages found to be due from the United States to the owner of said steamship Matoa, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided,"

And further, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to reenroll the said bill S. 1222 with an amendment as follows: Strike out of section 2 the following words: "That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said schooner Henry O. Barrett, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided."

TO REGULATE DEALING IN LEAF TOBACCO.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICKETTS].

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the charge has been openly made on the floor of this Chamber many times during this session of Congress and the previous special session, which convened on the 19th day of May last year, that the Republican majority of the House was responsible for the great army of unnecessary employees in the various departments of Government, and that owing to the failure of the majority to enact proper legislation and to reduce appropriations this vast number of unnecessary employees had not been reduced. In short, the charge is made that the Republican majority is, and has been, responsible for the gross extravagance and the unnecessarily large army of countless and inefficient employees in the various departments of Government. No claim could possibly be further from the fact. Such contention is absolutely erroneous and without the slightest foundation. I can not remain silent longer and allow this false assumption and erroneous claim to go unchallenged.

The membership of this House and the country are entitled to know the truth, and it is my purpose to give a clear statement of the actual facts and to recite the law in the short time allotted to me in which to address the House.

THE LAW.

Provisions applicable to all executive departments: Section 158 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878, contains the following provisions:

The provisions of this title shall apply to the following executive departments:

"First, the Department of State; second, the Department of War; third, the Department of the Treasury; fourth, the Department of Justice; fifth, the Post Office Department; sixth, the Department of the Navy; seventh, the Department of the Interior."

It will be understood, of course, that there are now a great number of commissions and bureaus and subdivisions of these various departments. I am particularly concerned in calling attention of the House to the fact that section 169 provides as follows:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Section 194 of the same statute provides:

The head of each department shall make an annual report to Congress of the names of the clerks and other persons that have been employed in his department and the officers thereof, stating the time that each clerk or other person was actually employed, and the sums paid each; also whether they have been usefully employed, whether the services of any of them can be dispensed with without detriment to the public service, and whether the removal of any individuals and the appointment of others in their stead is required for the better dispatch of business.

Section 198 of the same statute provides:

The head of each department shall, as soon as practicable, after the last day in September of each year in which a new Congress is assembled, cause to be filed in the Department of the Interior a full and complete list of all officers, agents, clerks, and employees employed in his department, or in any other of the offices or bureaus connected therewith. He shall include in such list all the statistics peculiar to his department required to enable the Secretary of the Interior to prepare the biennial register.

The last paragraph of section 4, of chapter 3514, of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, 1906, reads in part as follows:

Hereafter the heads of the several executive departments, and all other officers authorized or required to make estimates for the public service, shall include, in their annual estimates furnished the Secretary of the Treasury for inclusion in the Book of Estimates, all estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year for which they are prepared and submitted.

It occurs to me that the above provisions of the law are clear and convincing. There is nothing in any of the above sections or anywhere in the law that requires Congress to determine the personnel of any department; that duty is lodged with the head of the department. Neither is Congress required to estimate the amount of money that should be appropriated for any department. That duty also rests with the head of the department, to determine what is needed in order to carry on the work of his department in an efficient manner. It is also the duty of each head of a department to state what number of employees in his department are necessary. No one else has the authority or the ability to determine just what employees should be retained in any department in order that the work of that department may be faithfully and efficiently performed. This duty is clearly defined by the statute, and it is incumbent upon the head of each department to carry out its provisions. Under the present system of making appropriations, there is only one way by which the appropriations committee or other committees having to do with appropriations can determine what amount of money should be appropriated for any department of Government, and that is through the recommendation of the head of that department. By law it is made the plain duty of the head of the department to report to the various committees of Congress, which have the authority and power to make appropriations, the amount of the appropriations that should be made in order that his department may pay the employees therein the salaries to which they are justly and legally entitled for the services which they render. Every Member of Congress knows full well that it has been the policy of the Republican majority from the time Congress convened in special session on the 19th of May, 1919, to economize as far as possible in making appropriations, but not to reduce appropriations so as to destroy or impair in any manner the efficiency of any department.

Congress has no way of determining just what appropriation should be made except through the recommendations made by the various heads of departments to the Secretary of the Treasury, who in turn submits the claims of the various departments in a book known as the Book of Estimates. Now, it is true that Congress could refuse to make appropriations necessary to continue the personnel of the department, but in doing so Congress might easily destroy the efficiency of the personnel of that department, which would result in a great injury to governmental service; and by reason of that fact the various committees of Congress called upon to make appropriations for these various departments must, as a matter of fact, depend upon the recommendations of the head of the department as to the needs of a department.

Prior to the war there were 39,000 employees in the various departments of government. At the time of the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918, there were 117,000 employees in the various departments of government. Inasmuch as the war was over it was generally understood throughout the country, and especially among the taxpayers of the country, that the personnel of these departments would be reduced by the heads of the respective departments, but 17 long months have elapsed since the armistice was signed and since the war was actually over and yet these various heads of departments have not reduced the personnel of their respective departments, as they should have done, under all the circumstances, which fact is known to every Member of Congress, the administration, and to the country as well. However, this has not been done. Instead of decreasing the personnel in several of the departments, the personnel has been increased; for example, on November 11, 1918, the Treasury Department had on its rolls in Washington 29,000 employees; to-day it has 37,000 employees. This is only one of many instances that I could recite as examples.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. RICKETTS. I have heard it repeatedly asserted on the floor of the House by our friends on the other side of the aisle since Congress convened on the 19th day of May, 1919, that it was up to the Republican majority to reduce the personnel of the various departments of the Government. It has been most ingeniously urged—no doubt for political purposes—that the Republican majority has been derelict in the performance of its duty; that it has neglected to enact legislation tending to reduce the great army of employees in the various departments, bureaus, and commissions of the Government under the present administration. I can not understand why our friends on the other side of the aisle do not address themselves with the same zeal to the various heads of the departments of the Government, who represent their party in the present administration. It strikes me it would have been very much more relevant for them to have urged upon the various heads of departments that they were a part of the present administration, and that it was necessary for them to reduce the personnel of their departments, because the taxpayers of the country were groaning under the great burden of taxation; that a deficit in the Treasury of the United States, under the present administration, amounting to something like $3,650,000,000, is staring the taxpayers of the country in the face, and will have to be met in the year 1921, either through the sale of bonds or by an increase of taxes, which will add greatly to the burden that the taxpayers of the country are already bearing.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I understand it, the gentleman holds that the law explicitly states that these heads of the departments shall themselves make up the list of employees that are not necessary?

Mr. RICKETTS. That is exactly true.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And the reduction in the number of employees must come through the administration?

Mr. RICKETTS. Certainly. The heads of the departments have the right to increase or decrease the personnel of their departments according to the requirements of their departments.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if Congress does not now have the right to limit the amount of money that can be appropriated for these employees? Could not the Congress cut off the appropriations for all the employees, irrespective of what the departments want?

Mr. RICKETTS. That is true. The gentleman is correct about that. The Congress has the right to do that, but the law requires the heads of the departments of the Government to determine the number of employees that are necessary to carry the work of their departments and requires that the heads of the departments make a recommendation to Congress as to how much money is necessary in order to carry on the work of the departments. It further requires the heads of the departments to certify to Congress whether or not any of the employees in their departments can be released or discharged, and that has not been done. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any law binding Congress to accept the recommendations of these heads of the departments?

Mr. RICKETTS. Most assuredly. That is the spirit and intent of the law. That is why Congress 38 years ago passed this law. And let me say to the gentleman, if the law of 1878 was good for 38 years before the late war broke out and kept the personnel of these various departments down to 37,000, why would not that same law be sufficient after the war was over and why would not the same law cause the heads of the departments to reduce the personnel of their departments? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. RICKETTS. I do not mean to criticize my friends, for they have rendered a very valuable service in this House in many instances during the sessions of the Sixty-sixth Congress, but I believe they are entirely mistaken in the deductions that they have made with reference to the method to be employed in order that the great army of employees in the various departments of Government might be reduced. They have evidently overlooked the fact that their party and the present administration are absolutely responsible for the unnecessary employees that are now being retained in the various departments of Government without just cause or excuse. I am sure that they want to be fair, and I know that I have no disposition to be unfair, but I do want the people of the country to know the truth so that they can place the blame for the increase in taxation, which is sure to come in order to make up the deficit, where it really belongs.

The extravagant expenditure of the people's money by these departments in retaining this vast, useless, and unnecessary personnel is appalling and astounding. It is a colossal waste of money that must be and should be charged up to those who are responsible for the unlawful expenditure.

This Republican Congress has reduced each and every estimate for appropriations that has come before it during this session, and I defy anyone to deny it, be he Democrat or Republican, as the following statements and comparisons will clearly show:

Comparison of the amounts of the appropriation bills as agreed upon with amounts asked for and considered during the Sixty-sixth Congress.

FIRST SESSION.

Title of act.	Amounts as agreed upon, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.	Amounts asked for and considered, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.	Decrease of amounts agreed upon, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, under amounts asked for and considered.
Agriculture	$33,899,761.00	$34,993,685.00	$1,093,925.00
Army	772,324,877.50	1,268,322,269.04	495,997,391.54
District of Columbia	15,364,421.00	15,635,701.00	271,280.00
Indian	11,131,397.03	11,939,813.89	808,416.86
Navy	616,096,838.88	975,903,621.28	359,806,782.40
Sundry civil	605,160,207.95	964,591,556.25	359,431,348.30
Railroad deficiency	750,000,000.00	1,200,000,000.00	450,000,000.00
Third deficiency	24,305,929.40	[1] 42,764,678.94	18,458,749.54
War Risk Insurance and pension deficiency	45,044,500.00	45,044,500.00
Expenses incident to first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress	385,720.00	385,720.00
Total	2,873,713,652.76	4,559,581,546.40	1,685,867,893.64

[1] This amount does not include $45,044,500, estimated in connection with the bill making urgent deficiency appropriations for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and for the payment of pensions. Of this sum, $42,615,000 was not estimated at the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and therefore not included in the total of $42,764,678.94, which sum does include $2,429,500 for above-mentioned purposes.

SECOND SESSION.

Title of act.	Estimate.	Appropriation.	Saving.
Agriculture	$42,098,238.00	$30,540,034.00	$11,558,204.00
Army	982,800,020.00	377,246,944.00	605,553,076.00
District of Columbia	20,329,428.87	18,190,487.87	2,138,941.00
Fortification	117,793,330.00	18,833,442.00	98,959,888.00
Indian	17,471,763.39	13,135,013.39	4,335,750.00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	122,453,685.52	103,650,016.11	18,803,669.41
Military Academy	6,778,637.20	2,141,712.70	4,636,924.50
Naval	647,631,254.80	425,289,574.00	222,341,680.80
Post Office	467,497,573.00	461,728,368.00	5,769,205.00
Rivers and harbors	48,841,565.00	12,000,000.00	36,841,565.00
Second deficiency	117,662,511.87	88,684,342.14	28,978,169.73
Total	2,591,358,007.65	1,551,440,934.21	1,039,917,073.44

It will be understood, of course, that the above tables are not official, as the official figures are not available until the close of the session. [Applause.]

The above tables and comparisons show clearly that estimates for appropriations have been slashed materially. The difference between the estimates submitted by the heads of departments to the Secretary of the Treasury and appropriations actually made shows a saving to the taxpayers of the country of $2,725,784,967.08.

Why have the departments submitted estimates for such claims of appropriations at this critical time of financial distress? What is the purpose or the end to be attained? The answer is simple. The heads of the various departments are determined to maintain the war-time personnel of their respective departments, regardless of the tax burden upon the people. Will any fair-minded man claim or contend for a minute that the present Republican majority in Congress is responsible in the slightest degree for this condition or state of affairs? Is the Republican majority to function only when it assumes the rôle of conducting the affairs of the various heads of departments of this administration? Certainly not. Then let the responsibility rest where it belongs, with the present administration; let the heads of departments carry out the provisions and requirements of the law and further discussion of this subject will be unnecessary, and the taxpayers of this country will be greatly relieved of an unnecessary burden that is thrown upon them by the failure of these departments to comply with the requirements of the law. The fault is not with the law. The law is ample. The fault is with the heads of the respective departments.

I hope it will be borne in mind that the present law was adequate in every respect to control the heads of departments as to the number of employees in each department before the late World War. Then why should not the same be adequate to control them in this matter since the war has ended? If this law was wholesome and effective for 38 years before the late war, why is it not just as wholesome and effective under similar conditions since the war?

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. I respectfully decline to yield, Mr. Chairman. I have only a short time in which to complete my address. I regret that I can not yield.

No Member of this House has the right to camouflage on so serious a matter as this to the taxpayers of this country. We must face this matter in the light of the law as it is, not as we would prefer to have it for political purposes. This law has been supplemented from time to time, but the above provisions remain the same.

During my service here I have stood out stoutly for economy, because I felt that I knew the necessity for economy, arising out of the fact that gross extravagance has been practiced in the management of the affairs of this Nation during the past two and one-half years, and especially since the armistice was signed on the 11th day of November, 1918. This is a time in our national history when every American should be at his best; when every official of the Government, including Members of Congress, should subscribe strictly to a policy of economy and perform his full duty to his country; when a substantial business policy should be pursued not only by the Government but by all men as well in order that normal conditions may be reestablished and our country again made whole. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has been exhausted. The gentleman from Tennessee has two minutes remaining.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], I read the following from the chief of the Capitol police:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1920.

The undersigned is captain of the United States Capitol police and has been employed in and around the Capitol for the past 23 years, having once been Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Both the flag on the east end of the Capitol and the flag on the west end of the Capitol Building are lowered each evening at sunset and are raised each morning at sunrise. The statement that same are never lowered and raised each day is incorrect.

JAMES A. ABBOTT,
Captain United States Capitol Police.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to answer the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICKETTS]. In the discussion of the Agricultural appropriation bill and in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill I called attention to the fact that our Republican committee provided in the Agricultural bill for 754 messengers and for 76 watchmen for one department, and in the legislative bill for 1,076 messengers and 515 watchmen, and I offered amendment after amendment from the floor to cut them down, a thing which this Congress had a right to do, and each time my friend's side of the House, with only a handful of Members present here in charge of these two bills, voted to keep that big bunch in, because they were afraid of the organizations to which they belonged. Most of these heads of departments are Republicans anyway, there for years under the civil service.

Why should he now get up here and camouflage to the public that he and his party are not responsible? You let us Democrats get in here once more [laughter on the Republican side] and I am going to help to get them out, and we are going to get in power after the next election. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 701 (a) of the revenue act of 1918 be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 701 (a). That upon all tobacco and snuff manufactured in or imported into the United States, and hereafter sold by the manufacturer or importer, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of 18 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer thereof; and upon all unstemmed leaf tobacco sold or removed for sale to the consumer, except by growers thereof, on and after the date of the passage of this act, a tax of 7 cents per pound to be paid by the person so selling or removing such leaf tobacco."

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is only one section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I made the pro forma motion for the purpose of referring to one of the alleged savings to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICKETTS] referred awhile ago, and that was on the Army bill.

It is true that the Army bill, as it passed the House yesterday, carried $600,000,000 less than was estimated for in October. Attention was called yesterday to the fact that the estimate was made in October, the time required by law, when the country had no settled policy as to what the size of the Army should be or would be. It was the idea of the Chief of Staff at that time and those advocating military training that we should have an Army of 500,000, and in order to have universal military training about 25,000 officers. The Congress did not accept that proposition. The Army was reduced to 175,000 men instead of 500,000, as contemplated, and compulsory universal military training was killed by the action of the respective parties in this House.

But let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the first action to accomplish that result was taken by the Democratic Party when we met in caucus in this Chamber and went on record against the proposition of compulsory universal military training by a vote of 106 to 17. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Did not the Secretary of War recommend an Army of 575,000? And did he not make a recommendation for an appropriation to support an Army of that size? If the department had had its way, would we not have such an Army, and would it not be necessary to make an appropriation for such an Army?

Mr. FIELDS. I am calling the gentleman's attention to the action taken by the Democratic Members of Congress on this proposition.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Was not that the action of the Secretary of War?

Mr. FIELDS. As I now recall, the Secretary of War did after some delay indorse the recommendations of the Chief of Staff for an Army of 500,000 men, giving as his reason for his action that, in his opinion, the unsettled condition of affairs in the country warranted the maintenance of an Army of that size until the restoration of normal conditions, at least; but that was not a partisan proposition, for while the Secretary of War is a Democrat the Chief of Staff is a Republican. But since you gentlemen of the Republican side inject politics into every question relating to the Military Establishment, I will ask you this question: If your champion of universal military training, Gen. Leonard Wood, should be nominated for the Presidency by your party, what are you gentlemen going to do? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. In answer to the gentleman's question I will say we are going to elect him, if nominated. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, my young friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], with something more than his ordinary composure, and yet with a struggle and a rather hurried effort, a moment ago attempted to escape from the tight place in which he found himself under the fence yesterday by calling in a policeman to verify his erroneous statement.

I will not take up much time, but notwithstanding the message the gentleman received from the policeman, as a matter of fact the statement was made yesterday—and I thought I was making a friendly correction of an error made by two distinguished gentlemen from Texas about the raising and lowering of the flag from the dome of the Capitol in the morning and evening. I undertook to say that the flag on the front of the Capitol and at the rear of the Capitol was never lowered, but that it floated there continuously, and was always there, to be seen day and night. The gentleman has read a statement from the chief of the Capitol police, who had previously called me on the telephone. I do not know the policeman. I never saw him. I do not know how much he knows about the history of the flag nor about this particular duty as a Capitol policeman, but I do know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] is an authority on this question of the flag. I will give the gentleman the information as to where I got the authority for my statement and what I predicated my remarks on. I call the gentleman's attention to the celebrated, really marvelous lecture on the American flag delivered on the floor of this House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]. If he will turn to page 36 of the pamphlet edition of that speech he will find there a paragraph which reads:

Officially over only three buildings does the flag fly continuously, day and night—the National Capitol at Washington (east and west fronts) and over the adjacent office buildings of the Senate and House of Representatives.

With all respect for the policeman, whoever he may be, whether he is performing his duty or not, or whether he has not been apprised of his duty with regard to keeping the flag up, if he does not know it I would recommend him to see Mr. HICKS and find by what authority he made this statement in one of the greatest public documents ever issued in the history of this country, and learn to do his duty; and then if the Member from Texas will do likewise in the future he may not be so far misled as to charge the gentleman from Pennsylvania with being unaware of this official form as it pertains to the display of the flag over the Capitol.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is wholly out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It will take only two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas will be recognized.

Mr. FOCHT. I will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] butted into the colloquy between myself and the gentleman from Texas yesterday ostensibly to give us some information, and I presumed that his information was correct; but the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] made his speech under a Democratic régime. Then possibly the flag never ceased to wave over the Capitol. The present régime in the Capitol is Republican. Whatever is done with the flag now is done under a Republican régime. This chief of the Capitol police is under a Republican régime. He tells us in this written statement that, regardless of what used to occur under a Democratic régime, when Mr. HICKS made that speech, the flag is now raised every morning at sunrise on the east and west fronts of the Capitol and every evening the flag is lowered. It is like the case of the lawyer who said to his client, "Why, they can't put you in jail for that"; and the fellow said, "Faith, and don't ye see me lookin' at ye through the bars?" The flag is raised and lowered now, regardless of what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] said; and if the procedure described by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] is the correct one, then my friend ought to get his Republican régime to work and have the flag fly all night, as the gentleman asserts is proper according to what he asserts was stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania should not attempt to give information by asserting that the flag is not raised and lowered every day when, as a matter of fact, it is so done, according to the employee who has it in charge.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13432) to regulate dealing in leaf tobacco, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I move the previous question on the bill to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title of H. R. 12266 be amended in accordance with the text. That was overlooked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the title of H. R. 12266 be amended in accordance with the text. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOVAN. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on that bill, on which I spoke this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 9065. An act to amend certain sections of the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916;

H. R. 11877. An act granting the consent of Congress to Madison and Rankin Counties, in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River between Madison and Rankin Counties;

H. R. 12889. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River, at or near Division Street, in the city of Youngstown, Ohio;

H. R. 795. An act for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert; and

H. R. 6025. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

CORRECTION OF POST-OFFICE BILL.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11578) entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to number the sections consecutively.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, April 18, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a proposed paragraph of legislation required by the United States Coast Guard for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 730); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting request that section 34 of the proposed bill providing for the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps be eliminated; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, April 18, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. CARTER as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, incline Thine ear, attend our prayer. We are here on this holy day to fulfill a sacred duty. Cleanse our minds, purify our hearts, and fit us for the service.

A faithful Member of this House has fallen asleep, and we mourn his going. Wise of judgment, strong of will, with ever a laudable purpose in view, he was a servant of the people and gave his best thoughts and acts to their interests in State and Nation.

Comfort the hearts of his many friends, his loving wife and children, with faith, hope, love, which are ever coming down from heaven into the heart of man.

He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. His faith therefore was unbounded, his hope buoyant. His body is still, but his soul goes marching on to larger life and greater attainments.

Help us to look forward to a blessed reunion beyond the stars in Thine own good time; and everlasting praise be Thine, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be deferred until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be deferred until to-morrow. Without objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE THOMPSON, OF OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This Sabbath day has been, by special order, set apart for appropriate exercises in commemoration of the life, character, and public service of the late Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, a Member of Congress from the State of Oklahoma, and the House is now in session for that purpose. The Clerk will read the special order for the day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. McCLINTIC, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That Sunday, April 18, 1920, be set aside for memorial services in memory of the late Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, a Representative from the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 525.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, late a Member of this House from the State of Oklahoma.
Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.
Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the late JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, of Pauls Valley, Okla., was born in Texas on April 29, 1871, and died on the 18th of September, 1919, on a Baltimore & Ohio train en route from Washington City to his home in Oklahoma.

He was a lawyer by profession and was a practicing attorney for 28 years in Indian Territory, which after admission into the Union became a part of Oklahoma. He was a successful practitioner of the law—honest, honored, and just.

He was always a Democrat—not a Democrat in name only, but in truth and in fact a Democrat, and all the term implies—always active in party councils, both State and National; was chairman of the State Democratic committee, delegate to the national convention, State senator, Congressman at large, district Congressman, always faithful, always capable, always devoted to duty. He was a man.

Oklahoma was admitted into the Union in November, 1907, and this is the first time the death angel has called one of our delegation to that realm from which no traveler returns. This was our first great loss; we felt it keenly then, we have felt it keenly every day since it occurred. His going was a distinct loss to the Oklahoma delegation in Congress—a distinct loss to the citizenship of the State and to the Nation.

My long acquaintance with Congressman THOMPSON makes me feel free to embrace the opportunity to bear witness to his devotion to duty, to friendship, and to the common man.

In my service here, aggregating almost 14 years, I have seen many Congressmen come and go; I have seen four-fifths of them sworn in and retired to private life. Still, as my mind runs back over the long list of friends made and friends departed, I can not recall a single instance of a member more devoted to the aches and pains of mankind than he. Never a vote, a bill, or a speech that was not in their interest, for their welfare and for their advancement.

Chosen to this high calling, and it is a high calling to sit in this historic Hall as a Member of Congress in a great Republic like this one, he was never too busy to minister to the aches and pains of the humblest constituent who sought his encouragement, counsel, and advice. Others less considerate than he would allow themselves to be engrossed in the larger things and let the aches and the pains of the meek and the lowly go unattended and untouched. How refreshing it is to observe in this busy, thriving, teeming, selfish world a character who thus stands out, it seems to me, quite alone—who was always willing to care for little things and worry about the humble things, to aid and comfort the heartache, the cares, and lighten the load of the everyday man.

It was a known fact among our delegation for many months that Congressman THOMPSON needed rest—needed to absent himself from his cares and worry of the great office he, with devotion, held. Those of us who knew him best had observed his loss in weight, his deterioration of body—still he toiled on, still he labored on, in the interest of his constituents, his State, his Nation. It may well be said that he fell a sacrifice to his work, to this all-controlling desire of devotion to duty. He died in the harness in the midday of life, enjoying a splendid career, rendering a noble service; all this makes his going the more abrupt, the more consuming.

In my long service here I have seen many of my colleagues fall from this lofty position to honored graves; but few have gone on before or will go in the future who leave behind them a longer train of friends, both in and out of Congress.

Death always comes too soon, but when we meet it face to face it seems the more unbearable, the more abrupt; and when we observe it in our friends and when they are called in the zenith of their powers, it makes the problem of the human life more difficult and hard to understand.

I repeat, his death was a loss to his delegation, to his family, consisting of a brilliant, devoted wife and two sons fashioned in his very image, a loss to his State where his friends are everywhere in abundance, a loss to his Nation that to-day needs good, true men fully as much as they did in the days of yore.

The grave, whose ponderous jaws are ever open to envelop us has enveloped our friend; still the grave is not the end, everything about us is but a solemn testimonial of a life beyond the grave and the sweet assurance of the Book of Books which has ministered to the sorrowing hearts of men for more than six thousand years gives us the sweet assurance of a better life, a fairer day, where there is no sorrow, heartaches, disappointments, and deaths.

As we view the House of Representatives from a circumscribed area—many come here, many go. But when we view it from the broader arc of the circle of a Nation, but few are called to stand at the head of this Government in the Halls of Congress to serve a great, growing, thriving Nation, teeming with this great constituency who believe in free government and the liberties of mankind. Two thousand years ago Cicero, sobbing above the dead body of his daughter, Tulia, exclaimed: "Is there no meeting place for the dead?" Well may we of this generation ask, What is to become of the seven and one-half million soldier boys who died on the threshold of life that free government and a better world might live? What are to become of these young men with genius, who in the morningtide of life gave their life that free government might live? What became of the Carpenter of Nazareth dead at 30 years of age? There can be but one answer—there is but one answer—the Book of Books tells us, and it has never been supplanted and never will be, that there is life beyond the grave; and who is there who either in logic, truth, or reason will attempt to supplant the blessed assurance this book affords. No, to me I prefer to believe that those who have passed through that incident of nature called death have but passed through the black waters that reach the summerland beyond—that they will be ushered into the glories of those who have gone beyond. To me they have gone to a land unstained by the smoke and din of battle, where they may write their books, invent their tools, fashion their songs, and guide the tramping, treading multitude to a better way—a fairer day in that land of perfect knowledge—in that land of love and peace. To such a destiny I would commit my friend—to such a destiny his footsteps will travel.

Mr. Speaker, while no one of right mind ever welcomes death, still its rigor loses strength as the years pass by. In the language of the poet, and thus the poet sings—

All are scattered now and fled,
Some are married, some are dead;
And when I ask, with throbs of pain:
"Ah! when shall they all meet again,
As in the days long since gone by?"
The ancient timepiece made reply;
"Forever—never;
Never—forever."

Never here, forever there,
Where all parting, pain, and care,
And death and time shall disappear
Forever there, but never here;
The horologue of eternity
Sayeth this incessantly:
"Forever—never;
Never—forever."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, we have met to-day to conduct memorial services in honor or our departed friend and colleague, Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMPSON was born in Grayson County, Tex., on the 29th day of April, 1871, and departed this life on the 18th day of September, 1919. He passed away before he had attained the age of 50 years. His life was short but it was full of honorable achievement. His death came suddenly and unexpectedly. The sad news brought deep sorrow and great regret to all who knew him. I recall very vividly the time, place, and manner in which the sad news was conveyed to me. About 9 o'clock on the evening of September 18, 1919, I was called to the telephone. It was a message from the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, the former Speaker of the House of Representatives, informing me that he had received a telegram stating that Congressman THOMPSON of Oklahoma had died on the train about 6 o'clock that evening, while on his way to visit his home at Pauls Valley, Okla. The unwelcome message came as a great shock to me and brought pain and sorrow to my heart.

When the House of Representatives met the following day, it so happened that the other Members of the Oklahoma delegation had been called away from Washington on a matter of public interest to the State of Oklahoma and that I was the only Representative of the State present. It became my sad and painful duty to rise in the House and announce the death of my colleague, JOSEPH B. THOMPSON. I offered an appropriate resolution at that time in which the House of Representatives expressed its profound sorrow at his death. On the same day the United States Senate passed a similar resolution. The Senate and House of Representatives appointed committees to attend the funeral. As a Member of the House committee, I accompanied the remains of our departed friend to Pauls Valley, Okla. I witnessed the beautiful and impressive funeral services, at which large numbers of constituents, friends, neighbors, and relatives assembled to pay respect to their distinguished fellow citizen and Representative in Congress.

Mr. THOMPSON was elected to the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and Sixty-sixth Congresses of the United States. Prior to his election to Congress, he had demonstrated his ability as a lawyer and his leadership in the public affairs of the State. He had served as a member of the State senate of Oklahoma; he had been chairman of the State Democratic committee; and he had been a delegate to three Democratic national conventions. Those of us who are familiar with the fierce conflict in the political arena know that such honors do not come to one by mere chance or accident. The high recognition which Mr. THOMPSON received from his fellow citizens in Oklahoma were the natural result of his intellectual force, his personal popularity, his integrity of character, and his laudable aspirations to be of service to his State and Nation, and to accomplish in life things that were worth while.

My acquaintance with Mr. THOMPSON was very slight prior to the time he entered the Sixty-third Congress. In politics he was a staunch Democrat. I was a Republican. Whatever may have been our impressions of each other at the beginning of our association in the House of Representatives, it was not long until our personal relations became exceedingly cordial. Later we became close friends. He would often come over to the Republican side of the House, take his seat beside me, and talk with me. In like manner, I would frequently go over to the Democratic side of the House and visit with him. When important questions were to be voted upon we consulted with each other about the question involved and the proper vote to be cast.

No one would question Mr. THOMPSON'S democracy, or his devotion to the principles of his party, or doubt the sincerity of his belief that the supremacy of those principles would contribute to the general welfare of the country. With all this, he was independent in his character. He reached his own conclusions as to what constituted democratic measures and always had the courage to vote as he thought was right regardless of the Democratic leadership in the House.

Mr. THOMPSON was born and reared on a farm. Within his congressional district was the largest city in the State. The large majority of his constituents were farmers. He was never unmindful of the welfare of his city constituents, but his farmer constituents were his favorites. He was always loyal to them and their industry. He sought to render agriculture the best service of which he was capable. He took a deep interest in every proposition and measure that would promote agricultural development or contribute to the prosperity of the farmers.

He possessed superior intellectual endowments. His mind grasped political questions quickly and easily. With almost unerring precision he reached correct conclusions. Once settled in his opinions, he was not easily changed. He was a conscientious legislator. He voted as he thought was right. He liked to be in harmony with his party; he respected leadership; he had due regard for the opinions of others. But he would follow no one in a course which to his mind ran counter to the good of his constituents or the welfare of his country. He had courage in a high degree. He was fearless in defending what he deemed right. He was honest, sincere, and upright. He was kind and generous in his disposition, cordial and companionable in his relations with others, and his life was full of good works and unselfish deeds. He was called from the conflict of this life in the prime of manhood. Measured by the years he lived, his life was short. But a man's life is not measured by the number of years he lives. The true measure of a man's life is what he has done. Measured by this standard, his was not a short life. He rose from a comparatively humble position in life to prominence in the legal profession, to a position of great influence in politics in his State, and for more than six years rendered highly useful and eminently honorable service in the greatest legislative body in the world.

He was not a man of narrow views. Primarily he thought first of his own home, his neighbors and friends to whom he felt most deeply indebted. In passing upon a legislative proposition, he thought first about how it would affect the people of his own congressional district who had commissioned him to come to the National Capital and participate in directing the affairs of the greatest Nation on the earth. But he was broad enough to recognize that in part he was legislating for more than a hundred million people. He loved devoutly his home people, he was deeply attached to the State of Oklahoma and all her citizens, but with all this he was intensely patriotic and supremely loyal to the Nation. In the enactment of war legislation, he did his part well. The record of his votes will show that the honor of our country was safe in his hands. He believed in protecting the rights of American citizens at all hazards. Regardless of how his votes might affect his political future, he voted for every measure that would facilitate the vigorous prosecution of the war, that would aid in its successful and victorious conclusion, or that would contribute to the safety and welfare of the brave and heroic soldiers, seamen, and marines who constituted the American Army and Navy in the war with Germany.

So closed the life book of JOSEPH B. THOMPSON. In this life volume is revealed the coming and the passing away of the hard-working farmer boy, the dilligent student in college, the successful lawyer, the influential politician, the skillful legislator, and the eminent statesman.

We cherish and honor his memory. We deeply regret his untimely passing away, and we gladly pay this tribute of praise to our departed friend, colleague, and fellow citizen.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, we are met here this beautiful spring morning to pay respect to the memory of our friend, JOSEPH B. THOMPSON. I want to say just one word or two of appreciation.

My acquaintance with Mr. THOMPSON was in connection with the Committee on Agriculture. I found him to be a courteous, generous friend, an agreeable companion, a conscientious Congressman, a hard-working legislator, who knew before he came to the committee meetings about the various matters that were to come up. He would treat with courtesy a Member who differed with him. On the other hand, if he thought he was right he would fully maintain his position. If he was convinced that he was wrong he would concur with the majority in what they decided upon.

In the death of Mr. THOMPSON the Congress of the United States has lost a hard-working, conscientious Congressman, and the country a good, upright citizen.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, of the many things I have done in my 26 years of service in the House, there are many upon which I look back with pride and pleasure. One of these is that for years I did my utmost to bestow the boon of statehood upon Oklahoma. Two of the most pleasant weeks of my life were spent in that beautiful land, hunting and fishing. I drove over a large part of it in a spring wagon and "viewed the landscape o'er" with ever-increasing delight. Anybody could tell that it would some day be a great agricultural State, but the chances are that in that faraway day even the most imaginative and enthusiastic of boomers never dreamed what a rich and mighty Commonwealth she would become within two decades, with fair prospects of becoming one of the greatest and wealthiest States of the Union. Neither Jules Verne nor any other novelist ever wrote a tale so fetching as the history of Oklahoma.

Her population is composed of the very cream of the peoples of the older States—the young, the vigorous, the adventurous, the daring.

From the beginning she has sent a strong delegation to the councils of the Nation, where they have taken high rank. Most of them have been and are young men in the very prime of life. No man past middle life has yet represented her in House or Senate. She has been very fortunate in the fact that until now death has never broken into her delegation.

Everybody at all acquainted with JOSEPH B. THOMPSON sincerely mourned his departure. He was my friend, true as steel, faithful as the needle to the pole. In fact, he was absolutely true in all the multiplied relations of life. He was a fine Representative, honest, industrious, honorable, level-headed, positive and kind, firm in his convictions, and unafraid.

To discharge his duty faithfully and well was his one idea in public life. This he did courageously and intelligently.

His death came suddenly and to most of us unexpectedly. He sleeps in his home city of Pauls Valley, one of the lovliest spots on earth, among the people who loved him so well and whom he served so faithfully. In his death Oklahoma and the Nation lost one of the most dependable of all American public men.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, we are gathered together to-day to pay tribute to the memory of a departed friend. This tribute is prompted by our affectionate regard for him as representative of the people and as our friend.

In the death of JOSEPH B. THOMPSON Oklahoma lost a close friend and patriot who had done much for its upbuilding, and the National Government lost a Representative in the House of Congress whose courageous stand at all times for right and progress was of great benefit to this Nation.

JOSEPH B. THOMPSON was a commanding figure among the leaders in the construction and upbuilding of the State of Oklahoma. It was a great accomplishment to have been of real service, such as he was, to his State and his Nation. It was a great accomplishment to have won, as he did, the confidence and love of all them who knew him and his work.

Mr. THOMPSON was one of the most indefatigable Members of this body in looking after the interests of his constituents, whether those interests took the form of legislation or of some detail requiring attention at the departments. It was this indefatigable industry in all matters large and small, his rugged integrity, his power of speech, his devotion to the interests of his constituents, his high ideals, and his upright life that explains his remarkable hold upon his constituents. No district ever had a more faithful Representative in Congress or one serving them with an eye more single to their interests. He was a valued friend, a kindly neighbor, a delightful host, a dutiful and affectionate son, a true and faithful husband, and a generous and loving father. He truly met all of the near and tender relations of life, and I mourn his loss, feeling that Oklahoma and all who were bound to him by the tie that binds are poorer by his death.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is an old custom of this House and one much honored in the observance to devote one day in commemoration of the life and services of the men who die while serving in this body. This good day has been set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to our departed friend and former colleague, Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, of Oklahoma. His associates called him by his given name when addressing him and in this way testified to the tender regard in which he was held.

His family and mine lived at the same hotel and occupied rooms in the same apartment house for considerable periods. Our offices were not far separated and on the same floor. Together we visited the Allied fronts in the spring of 1918, each of us having a son at that time with the combat troops in France. We were, therefore, closely associated during all of my service here, and I came to know him and the members of his devoted family intimately and well.

Mr. THOMPSON was born in Texas and spent the greater part of his life in the virile young State of Oklahoma. He was brought up in a school where the sterner virtues are cultivated, where the fittest survive, and where men of high purpose and strong character alone are selected to lead.

He was a man of infinite courage, big hearted, courteous, possessed of a vigorous personality, willing and ready at all times to lend to the unfortunate and to the lowly his loyal help and friendship. He therefore counted among his followers the large majority of the big hearted plain people. The unpretentious, the great middle class, among his constituents, whose support can not be purchased by money, proclaimed him their idol and their champion. He was the stalwart friend of the farmer and the man who labors with his hands, and he was their generous advocate at all times. He literally lived up to the philosophy of Jefferson, who taught the equality of all men. Indeed and in truth the meek and the lowly and the helpless were first in his thoughts, and he regarded them with more favor than he did men of wealth and prominence. He mingled with his constituents freely and was never so happy as he was when going from place to place in his district greeting his friends with the spirit of genuine friendship which characterized his intercourse with his people. He never forgot the fact that he came from the plain people; he never ceased to love them and they never lost their faithful love for him. He seemed always especially eager to be doing something for the soldier, for the soldier's family, and devoted a great deal of his time writing, phoning, and visiting the various departments in their interests.

Mr. THOMPSON was a man of indomitable energy. Few Members devoted more hours to the dull drudgery of congressional life. His capacity for hard mental and physical labor was phenomenal. This accounts in a large measure for his rapid rise to a position of influence. Drudgery is the grey angel of success, and our friend was a distinct success as a citizen and as a public official. His splendid State has upon the floor of this House a strong delegation, but he was the peer of any of his colleagues in point of ability, in popularity, and in influence.

He was not a noisy Member, yet he spoke and discussed with vigor and rare intelligence many of the big questions that engaged the attention of the House during his membership therein. He never indulged in frivolous nonsense and his speeches abounded in forceful argument, devoid of drivel. He wielded a keen blade in debate and always had a respectful hearing when he engaged in discussion on this floor.

In the days that are passing swiftly as the swallows fly the membership of this House is ever changing. Month after month our hearts are made heavy by the death of colleague after colleague. During the last few years a large number of our associates have answered the last call. Our friend died suddenly while on the train, accompanied by his son, as they were speeding westward toward the land he loved. A sudden death is rather to be desired. How much better it is for the grim warrior who conquers all men to hurl his sable spear full at the heart and strike down his victim at high noon when he is surrounded by his fellows, than to sap his strength by slow degrees while he lies bedridden within the four walls of a dreary sick room.

I am sure that all is well with our departed friend. It makes us sad, of course, when we think of this loss to his district, to his friends, and especially to his excellent family, but sooner or later we must all enter the land of shadows, and yet we believe as he did that the soul is immortal and will live forever. We have missed and will continue to miss his genial companionship, but one by one, year by year, we shall follow him.

Life's shores are shifting,
Every year.
And we are seaward drifting
Every year.
Old places, changing, fret us,
The living more forget us,
There are fewer to regret us
Every year.
But the truer life grows nigher,
Every year;
Earth's hold on us grows slighter,
And the heavy burdens lighter,
And the dawn immortal brighter
Every year.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, Mr. THOMPSON was a native of my State, born and reared in Grayson County, one of the splendid counties of the State of Texas, whose population, in intelligence and in good citizenship, is equal to that of any county that I know. In his earlier youth Mr. THOMPSON had his struggles. He had to fight his battles in order to educate himself. That education was attained in our common schools and our institutions of higher learning in the great State of Texas.

In his early manhood Mr. THOMPSON saw fit to cast his lot with the people of the State of Oklahoma, and he began as a leader in that State, and had the respect and esteem of the entire citizenship of that Commonwealth, because it was recognized that his leadership was wise.

My intimate acquaintance with him began after he came to Congress. We both served on the Committee on Agriculture. His birthplace and my birthplace were not far removed, and when I met him and knew him personally, as I did in service on that great committee, I could see from day to day, in his counsel and advice on pending legislation, that his earlier training had impressed itself upon him, that he knew the problems which confronted the great agricultural masses of our Nation, and that he was responding to those problems in aiding to write legislation that might serve the people who produce to feed the world.

The loss of such a man from this body is not alone a loss to the body itself but it is a loss to the people of the Nation. When the Representative of a constituency is a man born and living among the people whose problems he has known from childhood, that type of man knows how to become a real Representative. He is a part of the people whom the Good Book describes as the great common people. And when a man of that type is sent here, breathing the same air, thinking the same thoughts, having the same experiences, his acts are an aid to the great citizenship that he represents.

I recall one incident in our service on the Committee on Agriculture when we had under consideration some of the war legislation. As all of us know, we had some difficult legislation, the one supreme thought being so to mobilize our people and all the power and resources they had that we could win the war. But in passing these various war statutes there was no precedent to guide us. Many times we had to leap in the dark. Probably one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation that this Congress passed was what was known as the food-control law.

In the bill as originally drafted its far-reaching powers extended to every farm in the land. One of those powers was that of fixing prices on agricultural products. As the bill was then drafted, it was a general power giving authority to those appointed by the President of the United States to exercise that power at discretion. I remember very distinctly the discussion of that important proposition in which my friend JOE THOMPSON participated. It was an amendment offered by him that saved the situation. That amendment was adopted by the committee to this effect: That if this power to fix prices on agricultural products were to be exercised it must be done "seasonably and in advance of seeding time." It was a remarkable amendment, a far-reaching amendment, and back of it lay the fact that if you were going to take the products of the great agricultural people by some agency of the Government, exercising an extraordinary war power to fix the price of the product of their toil, that fairness to the people, the producers, demanded that the President of the Nation should by proclamation state in advance of seeding time that the price would be fixed, and that the product and price should be named before crops were planted. Mr. THOMPSON was the author of that amendment. It became a part of the law. It helped to save a bad situation. The fact that he had been reared on a farm, had received the hard knocks that go with the labor on the farm, enabled him to understand the situation, and so that provision was written into the war law.

He had a great heart; his heart responded to the people. He knew their troubles and faithfully represented their views. He was a wise leader, a devoted husband, a patriotic father, giving to the service his son, who went to the front. He was kind to his friends and loved by everybody who knew him. His going is only too soon. His family, his State, and the country has suffered an irreparable loss. Peace to his ashes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, in the death of our distinguished citizen, friend, and colleague, the late Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, of Oklahoma, the Nation has lost one of its most patriotic citizens, the State of Oklahoma one of its hardest workers, the fifth congressional district a loyal Representative, the Democratic Party one of its most devoted supporters, and the wife and family a loving husband and father whose greatest pleasure in life was looking after their every comfort.

His death came as a sudden flash of lightning out of a clear sky. No one ever dreamed that the grim reaper of death was soon to mow him down. It is rather a strange coincident, as my distinguished colleague, Mr. MORGAN, has called attention to, that most of the Members of the Oklahoma delegation were away, out on the ocean speeding for Norfolk, Va., for the purpose of delivering a silver service set to that great battleship which bears the name of Oklahoma. Mr. THOMPSON'S death cast a sad gloom over that party.

Congressman THOMPSON, like myself, was born in Texas. In his early days he suffered some privations, but he was possessed of a sufficient amount of determination and energy to keep striving for an education, and he never stopped until he was successful in being admitted to practice his chosen profession—that of the law. Everywhere he lived his honesty, his uprightness, and fair dealing with his fellow man caused him to be loved and to be respected by all who knew him.

Congressman THOMPSON was a Democrat. He held a high position in the estimation of all of those who affiliated with his party. On many occasions he was honored by being selected to high positions of trust. On two occasions he was sent as a delegate to the national convention. Twice he was selected as chairman of the Democratic Party of Oklahoma. In 1910 he was elected as a member of the Oklahoma State Senate. It was during this period that the citizenship of the new State was confronted with many intricate questions to solve. The section of the State formerly known as Indian Territory was originally governed by the Territory laws, the rules and regulations of the Five Civilized Tribes, and the laws of the United States Government for the protection of the Indians. Likewise, in that part of the State formerly known as the Oklahoma Territory the Government maintained certain supervision over the Indian tribes residing in same. It was necessary for the early sessions of the legislature to iron out the many wrinkles and put into effect legislation that would be acceptable to all of the people.

Congressman THOMPSON, being a State senator at the time, played a most conspicuous part in performing this work in a satisfactory manner. He was a member of the famous extraordinary session called for the purpose of ratifying the act of the governor when the capital of the State was moved from Guthrie to Oklahoma City between suns. He was a member of the extraordinary session of the senate that was called for the purpose of ironing out the difficulties that existed among the members of the educational board having jurisdiction over the various educational institutions of the State. He was selected as chairman of the committee on senatorial, representative, and judicial redistricting. It was my privilege to be elected chairman of the corresponding committee in the house. While serving in this capacity I first became intimately acquainted with him. In all of the joint sessions held by these committees he always conducted himself in such a way as to merit the confidence and respect of all present. Under his leadership the bill dividing the State into senatorial and district judge judicial districts was passed. He probably introduced more bills than any other member of that body. It was during this service that I learned to admire him, and it is a great pleasure to say that the friendship formed at that time continued until his death.

Oklahoma was admitted as a State a little over 12 years ago. Our late distinguished colleague is the first Representative from our State to go to his grave. In the House of Representatives he was loved and respected by every one. He was a member of the great Agricultural Committee, which has jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to the farm. He believed that in the consideration of every question the interest of the farmers should be properly considered, and it can be truly said that the agricultural class had in him a loyal and staunch friend.

In addition to the thousands of friends who mourn his loss he left a loving wife and two splendid, manly young sons. I think it is appropriate for me to say that when this country went to war and it was necessary that we join the Allies in opposing the great military tyrant who sought to conquer the world that his only son of age laid aside his domestic pursuits and volunteered for service. He was willing to make the supreme sacrifice in order that our posterity might forever be free. The hand of fate was kind in dealing with the destiny of that son. He was spared to be returned to take up the responsibilities of his father, and it is my hope he will continue the humanitarian work that was so interesting to our late distinguished colleague and that he will meet with success in all of his undertakings.

Congressman THOMPSON was faithful to every trust imposed in him. He was never too busy but what he could find time to help a friend. No State ever had a more loyal Representative than he. He was universally loved and respected by all of his associates, and his loss has not only been keenly felt by the Nation but by the thousands of his home people whom he loved so well. Such a record as his should be an inspiration to everyone, and while we all regret he has had to be taken away so soon, yet I am pleased that I can stand here to-day and concur in all that has been said by the Members of the Oklahoma delegation and my other distinguished colleagues who have testified as to their high regard for him.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, to-day has been set apart to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of our late Representative and colleague, JOSEPH B. THOMPSON. I want to briefly participate in these exercises to the extent of bringing a wreath to lay upon his memory and to say a word about him.

He was a resident of Pauls Valley, Garvin County, Okla. He came to Oklahoma from the State of Texas many years ago. He was always active in local, State, and national affairs. When interest was being aroused in the movement for statehood, he was an earnest advocate of it. It was at these meetings, where organizations were perfected in the Indian Territory and the Territory of Oklahoma asking for statehood, that I first met him. He was always a central figure in them. A forceful speaker and a ready debater, he took an active part in the politics of our State, during territorial days and after the two Territories were admitted into the Union as one State.

He was a strong believer in the principles of the party to which he belonged, and there was no better organizer in the State. He contributed much time to the support of his party and his views were always given expression in its interest. He had an extensive acquaintance through the State, where he was known and loved by all men. He was immensely popular.

He served his senatorial district in the State legislature and was elected to the Sixty-third Congress as a representative at large, and was afterwards reelected from the fifth congressional district to the Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and Sixty-sixth Congresses. No man had a more extensive acquaintance in the State than our lamented friend. He died suddenly on September 18, 1919, while on his way from Washington to Oklahoma. The news of his death was a great shock not only to the members of the delegation but to innumerable friends and admirers in the State.

Upon entering Congress, he devoted himself diligently to the service of the people of his district and State. I doubt if any man in Congress was in more intimate touch with the voters. He was prompt in answering every letter received and had the reputation of looking after details for his constituents who had matters pending in the various departments. He was an active champion of the rights of the plain people of the country. Without regard to party, they loved and trusted him. He grew up under adverse circumstances and never got out of touch with men and women that fortune had not favored.

He served on the Committee on Agriculture and was delighted with the work of the committee. He was intensely interested in farming and made the needs of farmers a special study. He was perhaps as well posted on subjects pertaining to the needs of the farmer as any other man in the House. He seldom made speeches on the floor of the House, but when he spoke, it was with a knowledge of his subject and with great eloquence.

He left a wife and two sons to mourn his loss, but their sorrow is lightened in a large measure by the fact that their grief is shared by thousands of friends and admirers throughout the State he served so faithfully and loved so well. He was a splendid public servant, a loyal friend, a devoted husband and father, and above all an honest man.

The people of his district and State miss him and mourn his loss. It is fitting that these exercises should be held in the House to-day, in order that his services may be recounted and his friends given an opportunity to say a word of regret at his early passing, as well as drop a tear upon a grave that was made only too soon.

Were a star quenched on high—
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky
Shine on our mortal sight.
So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the entire delegation of the neighboring State of Kansas, I desire to join with other neighbors and friends in the sentiment that in the death of the Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON the State and Nation lost an energetic, honest, valuable lawmaker and statesman.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, it was the early spring of 1901 that I first met JOSEPH B. THOMPSON. It was on the occasion of an important murder trial in the United States court then setting at Pauls Valley. It was amid one of the scenes that is familiar to every man who attended a session of the United States court in those days in the Indian Territory. My admiration was won by the vigorous and courageous manner he exhibited as one of the trial lawyers in the case. Our acquaintance soon ripened into friendship which grew stronger as the years went by.

Until the arrival of statehood we met frequently at the session of court in the old southern district. After the admission of the State into the Union he was selected as chairman of the State Democratic Committee, and in this position he led the party with great distinction and success, and his opinion was always given great weight in the council of his party. Afterwards he was elected to the State senate, where his influence was felt in the enactment of many wholesome laws. Before the expiration of his term as State senator he was elected to Congress at large from the State of Oklahoma, and upon the redistricting of the State he was elected as Congressman from the fifth district. His broad experience in the affairs of men, together with his ability, immediately attracted the favorable attention of his colleagues in the House of Representatives. He had the courage of his convictions and was always ready to fight for the rights of the American people. He aspired to a place on the great Agricultural Committee of the House and his aspirations were rewarded in the Sixty-fifth Congress. He served on this committee during the War Congress, and no man in Congress ever worked more earnestly for the farmers of the country than JOSEPH B. THOMPSON.

He came to Congress at a trying period of the country's history and performed his part well in the enactment of the constructive legislation which marks the epoch as one of the most important in the history of the Republic. On account of his wide experience and universal sympathy for others he was enabled to understand the minds and hearts of the people and foretell the effect of legislation upon their welfare.

He was always modest and unassuming in character; he was an ardent Democrat and at times intensely partisan, but never tainted with bitterness. The intenseness of his convictions convinced him that his country's welfare depended upon the success of his party. He believed in the rights of the masses of the people and was always a foe to special privilege. Honor, sympathy, and duty were conspicuous traits of his character and were among the chief agencies in the development of his splendid manhood. His unusual capacity for winning the affection of men was due to his deep human sympathy, and "Joe," as he was familiarly called by his friends, was a successful man, and his success was not achieved by birth, rank, or fortune, but through his irresistible energy and patient plodding. He was a true American, an ideal citizen in his domestic life, and by his devotion to his home and family won the deep respect of all of his acquaintances. I would fail to pay him proper tribute if I did not call attention to those traits of his character exhibited by him as a loving husband, devoted father, and faithful friend. He was all of these, and his devotion to his family and friends was like flowers blossoming along his pathway through life.

While active and busy he was stricken suddenly in the prime of life and left us to sorrow over his demise. We will miss his cordial greeting, his hearty handshake, and his earnest solicitation of our welfare. His bark slipped its mooring and without a signal of his going he passed over the bar. He has answered the summons we all must obey. We will linger, some for a few days, others for years, but let us hope that our crafts, like his, reach the haven where weary ships may rest.

We carried him back to sunny Oklahoma to the scenes of his activities. At the capital city, where his body lay in state, we witnessed homage paid his memory by his sorrowing constituents, the poor as well as the rich came and stood side by side to drop a tear upon his bier. At Pauls Valley, his home city, his neighbors and friends turned out by the thousands to pay their last tribute to their foremost citizen. In Pauls Valley we laid him to rest in God's acre, and returned with heavy hearts sighing:

Oh, for a touch of a vanished hand and for the sound of a voice that is still.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Speaker, when I located in the Indian Territory, which is now a part of the great State of Oklahoma, 15 years ago, JOE THOMPSON, as he was familiarly called, was already prominent in politics and eminent in the profession of the law. He was, upon the advent of statehood, made chairman of his party committee for the new State and had much to do with the shaping of its laws and political tendencies. For awhile he contented himself with being the power behind the throne, then he asked to come to Congress as a member at large from that State. He was elected by the people of the State as a whole and had continuously served in this body thereafter as the Member from the fifth district until his untimely death in 1919. I became well acquainted with him soon after I located at Ardmore, 40 miles from his home at Pauls Valley.

We were personal friends from that time to the time of his death. During a part of that time I presided over the bankruptcy court for a large district in southern Oklahoma as referee in bankruptcy, and THOMPSON being a lawyer of large and varied practice, often had business of importance in the bankruptcy court. This and the fact that we often met at the bar of the other courts gave me a favorable opportunity to know him both personally and professionally. He was a man of true friendships! His loyalty to his friends knew no bounds. As a lawyer he was not only able but possessed those traits which made him a dangerous adversary before judge or jury, at the same time his strict adherence to the ethics of the profession and his uniform courtesy to opposing counsel and opposing litigants never failed to keep for him the respect and good will of both. That was largely the reason he was so invincible in the political field. His Chesterfieldian courtesy served him well in the field of political endeavor.

Of his record in Congress others here present, who served with him, are better prepared to speak, and I will leave that for them. This I know, that while making my canvass to succeed him last fall, I found that he had served in this body to the satisfaction of his constituency. He had established for himself among his constituency a reputation for constructive ability and faithful service, and that reputation was not alone established in the hearts and minds of those of his own party, but it was shared in large part by those of opposite political faith. That is undeniably shown by the fact that notwithstanding Payne County, one of the counties in his district, invariably elects as its county officials the Republican candidates by majorities ranging from 300 to 900, yet THOMPSON never failed to carry it as the Democratic nominee for Congress by from 300 to 700 majority over his Republican opponent.

After all, the measure of a public man's success is not to be determined by what this man or that says nor by the one act or the other performed by him during his career, but it is to be measured by the impression he makes upon the general public and by his record taken as a whole, and, judged by these standards, I do not hesitate to say that JOE THOMPSON'S record as a public servant was one of which his family and constituency may well be proud—one which makes it hard for his successor or successors to duplicate and one which will ever cause him to be remembered gratefully by those whom he so well served in the Halls of Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD upon the life and character of our late colleague.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order heretofore adopted, the House will now stand adjourned.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, April 19, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 19, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire to hold our place with honor among all the nations of the earth and fulfill our mission as God has given to us a mission, and we turn to Thee for the inspiration of our life work. Grant us discernment, farseeing vision, and understanding of the divine import of every element of our national life, every incident of our national history, that we may interpret these in the light of Thy revelation to us. Grant us Thy blessing in the service and labor of this day. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4073) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 53 to the bill, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. WASON, and Mr. SISSON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution authorizing and directing the Clerk of the House in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, to number the sections consecutively, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 12266. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919;

H. R. 13432. An act to regulate dealing in leaf tobacco; and

H. R. 13587. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON, late a Representative from the State of Oklahoma.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 12581. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between the said States; and

S. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users a supply of nitrate of soda.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Greek Community, of Los Angeles, Calif., praying for the recognition of the rightful and just demands of Greece, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's Irish Education League, of San Francisco, Calif., remonstrating against the treatment of Irish political prisoners, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Salina, Kans., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7629) to amend the penal laws of the United States, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 528) thereon.

THE ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. KELLOGG. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4163) to incorporate the Roosevelt Memorial Association, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lawrence F. Abbott, Lyman Abbott, Carl E. Akeley, Earl Akers, Henry J. Allen, Joseph W. Alsop, Charles W. Anderson, Jacob L. Babler, Charles S. Barrett, John Barrett, E. C. Wynne, their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the name of this corporation shall be Roosevelt Memorial Association, and by that name it shall have perpetual succession, with power to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity within the jurisdiction of the United States; to hold such real and personal estate as shall be necessary for its corporate purposes and to receive real and personal property by gift, devise, or bequest; to give and dedicate such property to public agencies and purposes; to adopt a seal and the same to alter at pleasure; to hold its corporate meetings within or without the District of Columbia, as the board of trustees of the corporation shall determine; to have offices and conduct its business affairs within or without the District of Columbia, and in the several States, Territories, and possessions of the United States; to make and adopt a constitution, by-laws, rules, and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States of America, or any State thereof, and generally to do all such acts and things as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and promote the purposes of said corporation.

SEC. 3. That the purpose of this corporation shall be to perpetuate the memory of Theodore Roosevelt for the benefit of the people of the United States of America and of the world, and to that end, but without restriction to the objects enumerated below, to solicit, receive, hold, and maintain a fund or funds, and to apply the principal thereof and income therefrom to any one or more of the following objects:

(1) The erection and maintenance of a suitable and adequate monumental memorial in the city of Washington, D. C., to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt;

(2) The acquisition, development, and maintenance of a public park in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the town of Oyster Bay, N. Y.; and

(3) The establishment and maintenance of an endowment fund to promote the development and application of the policies and ideals of Theodore Roosevelt for the benefit of the American people.

SEC. 4. That the property and affairs of the corporation shall be managed and directed by a self-perpetuating board of trustees. The following-named persons shall constitute the first board of trustees: Lawrence Abbott, Henry J. Allen, Joseph W. Alsop, Charles W. Anderson, R. Livingston Beeckman, Austen Colgate, E. C. Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who are detained in the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4248) for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif.; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 4249) for the relief of Patrick McNamee; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 4250) for the relief of John B. Elliott (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 4251) to correct the military record of Samuel C. Rowe; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 4252) granting an increase of pension to William R. Elliott (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOLCOTT:

A bill (S. 4253) granting a pension to Amelia Xandry; to the Committee on Pensions.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the Chair appoints the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] as one of the conferees on the part of the Senate on what is commonly known as the Army and Navy pay bill.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11578) entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to number the sections consecutively.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 12266. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

H. R. 13432. An act to regulate dealing in leaf tobacco was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 13587. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I submitted a few days ago, being Senate resolution No. 351, relating to District street railways, may go over without being ordered to the calendar or referred to a committee. I also ask that it may lie on the table until I desire to call it up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONDITIONS IN VIRGIN ISLANDS (H. DOC. NO. 734).

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I present the report of the joint commission appointed under authority of House concurrent resolution of January 20, 1920, to report on conditions in the Virgin Islands. I ask that the report be printed as a public document. The Joint Committee on Printing can consider the question of ordering additional copies if so desired.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator not have it referred to the Committee on Printing of the Senate? The Joint Committee does not have such questions referred direct to it from the Senate. It should go to the Committee on Printing of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. The report is made both to the Senate and to the House, and it is being presented to the House now. My understanding was that both Houses would ask to have it referred to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is wrong. It ought to go to the Committee on Printing of the House and the Committee on Printing of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. And then those committees can confer as to the number to be printed?

Mr. SMOOT. If the number decided upon is more than the law would allow without a concurrent resolution, then a concurrent resolution would have to be submitted in the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I am inclined to think that the number printed as a public document by the Senate and by the House will be ample; but I want to leave the question open in case there should be a further demand.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be referred to the Committee on Printing of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I ask unanimous consent to have the report printed as a public document and then the Joint Committee on Printing can take up the question of additional copies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to consume a few moments of the Senate's time in presenting some thoughts on the high cost of living.

At times we, the representatives of the people, become discouraged. Since the armistice the demands have been so great upon us, and the clamoring so loud, discontent is so widespread, until we almost despair of conditions again becoming normal. I am glad, however, that in the last few days we are beginning to see signs of the people's mind turning in the right direction. It is to the credit of the faithful railroad employees who declined to follow the proposals of the outlaws—the I. W. W. and the bolshevistic crowd—that many of them remained at their posts, and many of those who left voluntarily returned. A board has now been appointed to adjust the differences between employer and employee, and while I did not advocate this legislation I feel that everyone should suspend judgment and let it have a fair trial. Furthermore, the right spirit is being engendered in the minds of the people at large. It made me proud to read in the papers that ladies of Washington volunteered to unload cars before they would sit idly by and see perishable foodstuffs go to waste. I want to say that if it had become necessary for them to have undertaken that task, I would have absented myself from the Senate and joined their ranks. When outlaws realize that the public is against them they will cease their unreasonable and exorbitant demands and untimely strikes. Let them know that the public can also organize. If this strike had continued a few days longer, many of my constituents would have lost their entire truck crops, and perhaps would have been ruined financially.

One of the troubles of the times is that too many people are looking to Washington and depending upon the National Government to enact laws appropriating money unnecessarily for their wants. While at home the other day I was told that a young soldier went into a store and purchased shirts at $15 each and at the same time was clamoring for a bonus. We fought this war to establish right principle in the minds of mankind, and I was in hope that after it was over our actions and ideals would be upon a higher plane; that we could see how much service we could be to our country and to the Government instead of seeing how much we could take out of the Treasury; that we would take an interest in our brother's welfare and see how we could best help mankind to become prosperous and happy. We are told that we organized the largest Army in the shortest space of time known to history; we are further told that this was the easiest trained Army the world ever saw; that they already knew how to advance; and that the word "retreat" was obsolete in their dictionary. Our troops had not been long in France until they caught the spirit of the motto of Pershing, which was, "Let us get to where we are going." It was the first army in history which never lost an inch of ground. We should generously take care of the wounded and incapacitated soldiers, but at the same time not be unmindful of the object for which those brave boys fought who are now sleeping under the poppies in Flanders fields. While they were over there, the rest of us—that is, all good and true people—did all within our power to improve conditions in this country and make it a better place in which to live.

We now have the greatest country in the world and the most desirable place in which to live, and people from every corner of the globe are looking with longing eyes upon our magnificent soil, splendid climates, and prosperous fields, and desire to cast their lots in our midst. Perhaps we have allowed our gates to be opened too wide in the past and permitted undesirables to locate among us. We have been so busy endeavoring to accumulate wealth that we have not guarded well the millions who came; but, indeed, the time is now upon us when we should see that no one should be allowed to stay among us who does not respect our traditions and who will not support our Constitution and adapt himself to our methods, support our Government, and respect our flag. We should not hesitate one moment to put all of the machinery of our Government into motion to place undesirables on ships and send them back to the shores whence they came. If there are any men in public positions who sympathize with these outlaws, they should be immediately turned out of office and sent thither with them.

Now, Mr. President, we have also been encouraged recently by reading in the papers that the people over the country, and especially in the South, have rebelled against the high cost of clothing and that they are daily establishing "overall clubs" and "calico brigades." This is a spirit that should be encouraged by everyone, whether he be rich or poor. I have as little use for the profiteer as I have for the slacker. I am delighted to know that the people are beginning to realize that it is not the province of the Government to set styles and prescribe what one should wear or eat. There has been too much looking to Washington and the people have been too prone to complain to and of their representatives. They ought to begin to recognize, and I hope they will all see that their prosperity, like their salvation, is in their own hands. There is no disgrace in being poor nor is there disgrace in honorable work, and one should not be censured for the garments that he wears, provided they are neat and suitable. The trouble is that everyone tries to live in the style of the richest, irrespective of his own means or income. The price of men's clothes has gone all out of proportion. It is an encouraging thought to see the school and college boys falling so readily into line. Sometimes the young are too inexperienced and too self-centered to consider the pocketbooks of their elders; but not so now. I have great faith in the American people and great hope in the young people of this country. I have no love for dudes and little respect for misers. I know men in high places and who are well off who are wearing $6 shoes and $2 shirts. They appear neat and comfortable. In this connection we could recall and follow the advice of a former Secretary of the Treasury, who said, "Bring out your old shoes, have them half-soled; at the same time, do not overlook having your last year's trousers treated in a similar manner."

If I may be excused a personal reference, in order to encourage the young, I will tell of a young man who once worked for me. It was at a time when men were idle and employment scarce. This young man was our timekeeper by day and bookkeeper at night. I have no recollection that he ever mentioned hours or salary. He was totally without means, but was in love with his work. To-day he is drawing the same salary United States Senators are receiving, and no doubt he will be rapidly promoted. A man never gets anywhere watching a clock. Do away with restriction and let people work as long as they want.

I desire to say further, Mr. President, that I have noticed with very keen interest that the dear women of this country are rebelling against the high cost of fabrics they use. They look charming, from their graceful heads to their dainty feet, clad in any uniform they may select.

A few years ago a representative of the Department of Agriculture addressed a school in Kentucky and urged raising of sheep. At that time there was but one in the district. A club was organized and within a very short time there were over 6,000 sheep in that neighborhood. These and similar live-stock and poultry clubs should be organized all over the United States, and especially in the South, where we have hundreds of thousands of acres of pasture land unoccupied and ungrazed. The Government is encouraging the raising of more live stock. The banks of the country should join in this movement.

Another element that enters into the high cost of living is the foodstuffs that we buy. It was my province to serve for some time on a subcommittee of the Committee of the District of Columbia. The testimony was overwhelming that people would not buy the cheaper cuts of beef. It further developed that everyone wanted his packages delivered immediately. There ought to be but one delivery each day, or, better still, carry your own packages home with you.

If we do not stop the tide to the cities, and if we do not devise better marketing facilities whereby the farmers of this country can get just returns for their products, they will raise their own supplies and nothing to sell, and will say to us who live in the cities what the young fellow said to his girl in Georgia.

This young man promenaded into an ice-cream parlor with his best girl, took a seat, and ordered one saucer of cream and began to eat. Looking into the eyes of his sweetheart, he said, "This is mighty good; you'd better buy you some."

To summarize: The troubles of to-day, Mr. President, as I see them, are inflation, extravagance, false pride, and indolence. There are too many $150 suits and too little use of the sewing machine; there are too many automobiles and not enough cornfields and hog ranches; there are too many $25 hats and not enough Liberty bonds. The old French maxim was a good one, "If you can not get what you like, like what you have." The Government is acting very liberally toward the public in offering for sale its surplus food, clothing, and other articles which it purchased during the war. I have noticed with pride that the Secretary of the Navy is offering denims to civilian employees; moreover, Maj. Graham has at the Liberty Hut samples of articles in food and remnants for sale at greatly reduced prices. All Government restrictions as to dress should be modified. Furthermore, Mr. President, the people of this country are long suffering, but they will not stand for every outrage. For instance, I noticed the other day that the plumbers of Birmingham, Ala., have organized for $12 a day and require to be driven to their work in automobiles and will not allow the drivers to be helpers. This is autocracy run mad. They and all such should be looked upon as public enemies.

Some time ago it was said we were too proud to fight. This has been refuted. We are not too proud to take care of ourselves against enemies, be they foreign or domestic; neither are we too proud to work and economize. Let us wear old clothes and refrain from purchasing everything we can do without and the country will soon get in joint again.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3792, known as the Army reorganization bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to dispensing with the call of the calendar and proceeding to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] on page 20, line 2, after the word "purposes" to insert the following:

Provided, That for the protection of the forest areas of the United States against destruction by fire, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to organize, maintain, and operate such aeronautical units as may be necessary for the maintenance of an aerial patrol of such areas for the period ending June 30, 1921: Provided further, That the areas to be covered by the aerial patrol herein authorized shall be designated by the Secretary of War upon request of the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That for this purpose the strength of the permanent personnel of the Air Corps and of the Army as otherwise authorized by this act is hereby increased 160 officers and 660 enlisted men in such appropriate grades as the President may prescribe.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have no objection to the object sought to be attained by this amendment, but I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] to this feature of it. The amendment, in addition to authorizing the Secretary of War to organize an aeronautical patrol to help out the Forest Service for the next year, provides that the Army shall be increased by 160 officers and 660 enlisted men for that purpose. The strength of the Army, including the officers, is fixed in section 12 of the bill, and the number of officers to be commissioned in each grade is also fixed in that section. Now, if we say in section 12 that there shall be so many colonels in the entire Army and so many majors in the entire Army and so many captains and first lieutenants and second lieutenants in the entire Army, and then later on in the bill say that that number shall be increased by 160 officers without mentioning their grades at all, and without amending section 12, we shall be in a peculiar situation.

Furthermore, the amendment as now proposed provides that the proposed aerial patrol shall be furnished by the Army up to June 30, 1921. If the Secretary of War commissions 160 officers in order that the patrol work may be carried on and the patrol work is finished on June 30, 1921, there will be 160 additional officers in the Army who can not be discharged or removed except by resignation or court-martial. So I ask the Senator from Idaho to eliminate the last proviso, and permit the Secretary of War under the terms of the amendment to detail from the Army both officers and enlisted men to take care of the patrol work.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, the end that I am particularly anxious to accomplish is that there shall be a direction by law to the Secretary of War to organize, maintain, and operate aeronautical units for the purpose of patrolling our forest areas. It is a matter of no particular consequence, so far as I am concerned, how or in what manner that is brought about so long as the result is accomplished.

I have been given to understand that, in order properly to officer and otherwise organize five squadrons for airplane patrol work, it will be necessary to employ 160 officers and 660 enlisted men. We desire it distinctly understood that that force of men shall be engaged in that particular work, and for that reason it is desired to have a direct provision of law to that effect, because I am somewhat fearful that, unless the law provides for the organization and the operation of those units the commandants of certain Army camps in Texas, for instance, or at some other place along the Mexican border or the commandants of certain camps, say, for the sake of illustration, connected with the Coast Guard artillery schools, will at some time insistently assert that they have not a sufficient number of airmen properly to perform the military duties that should be performed in connection with those camps, and that under those circumstances it is within the range of possibility that the squadrons that are organized for the purpose of airplane patrol of the forests will be disorganized, and the men connected with them will be assigned to other duties. If the Senator from New York will suggest how my amendment can be so amended as to meet with his approval and at the same time accomplish the result that I desire, I have no objection to such an amendment, provided, however, that the Secretary is directed to organize and operate and maintain these units that we deem necessary for the protection of the forests.

I will say in this connection, Mr. President, that in my view of the matter there is no more important duty that can be performed by airmen than the protection of the property belonging to the Government in the shape of standing timber. While I discussed this matter somewhat in detail when the Agricultural appropriation bill was being considered by the Senate, and shall not take up the time of the Senate by entering into a particularly detailed statement at this juncture, I desire to call the attention of Senators to certain outstanding facts in connection with it.

Mr. President, more than one-half of all the standing merchantable timber in the United States is now in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Idaho, and about 80 per cent of all the standing merchantable timber still in Government ownership—that is, that belongs to the people of the entire country—is in the States mentioned. The value of all of this timber is estimated at $1,500,000,000, and the value of the timber in Government ownership at this time is estimated at more than $400,000,000. There is a tremendous loss each year in those States because of destruction by fire, and there is no question in the world that these airplane patrols can very materially decrease the danger of further destruction by fire. An airplane patrol was established last year on a small scale in the States of California and Oregon, and, according to the report of the forester, that airplane patrol discovered 570 forest fires; and it is my judgment that the activities of the men engaged in that work last year alone saved to the Government and to the people of the country hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of timber, because it is quite a simple matter, with their telephonic devices and wireless devices, to advise men on the ground where a fire has been located and to determine whether it is a wild fire or whether it is a fire of some camper or the fire of a sheep herder. In other words, it saves a great amount of time in getting to the fire; the fighting of the fire can be directed with precision, and as a consequence it can not extend over any very great area of timberlands if it is discovered in time.

So that this matter is one of tremendous importance not only to the people of the western country but to the people of the entire country, and it should be properly cared for; and it is only necessary, according to the estimates that have been presented to me by Army officers—by the head of the Air Service, and concurred in, according to my understanding, by the Secretary of War—that 820 officers and men be assigned to that particular duty, and there is no reason in the world why they should not be so assigned.

Mr. President, this Army reorganization bill as it now stands before the Senate provides for an Army, in round numbers, of 297,000 officers and men. That force, as a matter of course, will be maintained by the people of the country, at a cost, if my recollection serves me right, in the neighborhood of $700,000,000 annually. All that we are asking is that out of an Army of 297,000 or 298,000 officers and men 820 officers and men be detailed for service with these airplane patrols of the western forests in order that they may assist in the protection of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of Government property.

We are primarily interested in bringing about the establishment of these patrols. It is a matter of no particular consequence to me how or in what manner it is brought about, so long as it is done; and I shall be very glad to receive any suggestions in respect to it that the Senator from New York may have in mind or may deem it advisable to make.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator a moment, I believe that if the War Department sees fit to establish an air patrol with the commissioned personnel and the enlisted personnel of the aviation section as they now exist it can do it. It may be uncharitable to express the view, but I do express it, that in my opinion the War Department is not, or has not, been particularly friendly to the Aviation Corps. It opposed the creation of it as a separate corps. It has been maintained, however, and, I think, largely because of the efforts of the Military Affairs Committees of the House and the Senate.

I believe that if the chairman of this committee will accept an amendment by way of a direction to the Secretary of War to require a suitable number of squadrons to go from places where they are only in training to places where their services can be readily utilized in the protection of property at certain seasons of the year they will be sent all right. They have the men; they have the officers. They are down on the border and in other fields, but they are not being utilized now, except for training. They are in training places like Mather Field and March Field, training for war purposes, probably; but there is no better place in the world to train these men than in protecting the forests of the country during two or three months in each year—that is, the fire season.

So, with all due deference to my friend the Senator from Idaho, I believe it will not be necessary to increase the permanent strength. I think that proviso might be eliminated if the chairman will consent to put a direction in this bill to the Secretary of War—not a request, not mere authority, he has that now, but to put a direction in the bill—so that he will understand without any question of a doubt what Congress meant that he should do.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, my suggestion in that connection was made in view of what I believe to be the understanding of the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported this bill, and that is that the number of officers and men for which the bill provides in connection with the Air Service is absolutely necessary for the performance of strictly military duties. Of course, if that contention is, as a matter of fact, entirely correct, then some difficulty might be encountered in having a sufficient number of officers and men detailed by the Secretary of War to properly patrol forests, that not being a strictly military matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as I said before, I have no objection to a provision being inserted in the bill which will direct the Secretary of War to organize and maintain this patrol, but I do object to this indirect method of increasing the Army of the United States. It is out of accord with the entire bill. The amendment as offered does not say in what grades these several officers shall be commissioned. It does not say what is going to happen to them when this work is over on June 30, 1921. So I suggest an amendment, which I will read for the information of the Senator from Idaho, that instead of the last proviso as printed in his amendment he insert a proviso of this sort:

Provided further, That for this purpose the requisite number of officers and men shall be detailed from the permanent or reserve personnel of the Air Corps.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, in that connection, permit me to call the Senator's attention to this fact: According to my understanding, under existing law the officers now in the Reserve Corps can only be called to the colors in the emergency of war, and unless it may be considered that the Senator's proposed amendment repeals by implication the statute as it now exists I doubt very much that it would be operative.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator heard the language:

The requisite number of officers and men shall be detailed from the permanent or reserve personnel of the Air Corps.

Under the terms of this bill any reserve officer may be assigned to any kind of duty in his branch, with his consent. By putting in the words "or reserve personnel" it makes them eligible for duty with this patrol. Also, the permanent personnel, who are the Regulars, can be assigned to it at the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. NUGENT. In view of that statement on the part of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, I accept the amendment to my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the proposed amendment of the Senator from Idaho, beginning at line 10 with the word "strength," it is proposed to strike out all down to the period and insert:

Requisite number of officers and men shall be detailed from the permanent or reserve personnel of the Air Corps.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Idaho having been disposed of, I would like to call up the amendments pertaining to the National Guard provisions of the bill which I offered a few days ago.

I have great regard for the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs on legislation pertaining to military matters, and no one has a higher appreciation of his faithful services in the preparation of this bill than I. But I differed with him on two important features of the bill. The first was that pertaining to compulsory military training, which I regarded as un-American, undemocratic, and unnecessary, and not in line with the needs of the country at this time. We have disposed of that question.

I differ with the Senator from New York also as to the National Guard features of this bill because I believe they are out of line with the best interests of the National Guard. I have had some interest in the National Guard for several years. During four years' service in the executive office of my State

I was ex officio commander in chief of the National Guard of Kansas.

I think we will all admit at this time, Mr. President, that the National Guard of the country is in a more or less disorganized and demoralized condition, as shown by the fact that we have now a strength of only 44,000 in the National Guard, as compared with about 379,000 at one time. I think the National Guard reached its height in August, 1917, when we had a strength of something like 380,000. Previous to the war its normal strength was about 182,000. There is no doubt but that the unfriendly attitude of the Regular Army toward the National Guard during the war resulted in putting the National Guard practically out of existence.

This bill, in my judgment, will not help matters at all. I am for an adequate national defense, which should include a well-equipped Army, an up-to-date Air Service, and, more important than all, I think it should include an efficient, strong, vigorous National Guard. I believe it will be the most important factor in the national defense of the future. But I do not think we can ever build up a National Guard organization under this bill.

I want to read a memorial to the Senate prepared just a few days ago by the adjutant general of the State of Missouri, representing the views of the National Guard of that State. I know it is in line with the sentiments of the National Guard of my own State and I think of the great majority of the National Guard of the country. This memorial reads:

At a meeting of the Missouri National Guard Association held at Jefferson City April 3, 1920, attended by officers of all the units of the Missouri National Guard which served in France during the war with Germany, and of officers of the units organized since the induction of Missouri troops into Federal service, the membership of the convention being composed of officers of those National Guard units now recognized by the Militia Bureau and of those units serving in France which have not fully reorganized and received Federal recognition again, upon motion the following-named committee was appointed to consider the several bills now pending in Congress affecting the National Guard and to recommend such action as was thought proper by the officers of the Missouri National Guard.

Then follows a list of a committee made up of the leading National Guardsmen of that State. Then the memorial goes on:

Such committee composed of representatives of the Missouri units which served in France and of representatives from the newly organized National Guard units, the Seventh Missouri Infantry stationed at Kansas City, and the First Battalion, First Regiment, stationed at St. Louis, by unanimous vote recommended to the association the adoption of the following resolutions, which resolutions were by unanimous vote of the convention adopted:

"The committee appointed to consider legislation pending in Congress affecting the National Guard beg leave to submit the following recommendations:

"It is the view of the members of the committee, based upon their service in the National Guard extending over a period of many years, that it will never be possible to enlist and maintain the interest of those who have heretofore served and who are now willing to serve in the National Guard, unless the status of the federalized State troops be definitely fixed and the rights, obligations, duties, and responsibilities of the citizen soldier be so clearly defined that it will be impossible by arbitrary rulings, regulations, and interpretations to nullify the terms and misinterpret the spirit of the laws passed by Congress intended to make possible the organization and maintenance of an efficient National Guard in the several States.

"To this end we strongly recommend legislation which will make of the National Guard a separate corps organized, armed, equipped, and trained on the same plan as the Regular Army, but not under the control of the General Staff. We point to the wonderful efficiency of the Marine Corps, which sustained the same general relation to the Navy which we believe the National Guard should sustain to the Army.

"We regard it as of the most vital importance that the Militia Bureau or National Guard Division be a separate and distinct bureau or division, wholly without the jurisdiction or control of the General Staff, or of any other bureau, office, or department, and responsible only to and functioning directly under the Secretary of War. We believe the personnel of such bureau or division should be made up of experienced National Guardsmen.

"We have closely studied the National Guard provisions of the Wadsworth bill and we unhesitatingly affirm our opinion that the passage of this bill in its present form would have the effect of destroying the National Guard. Should this bill pass we recommend to the governor the disbandment of all existing units and the abandonment of any effort to revive the old units. The powers given the General Staff under this bill are as sweeping as those exercised by the German General Staff, and it would be impossible, in our judgment, to organize and maintain civilian troops under this law in time of peace without resort to the draft."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that we are not able to hear one-half of what the Senator says at this distance. I would like to ask him whose opinion it is he is reading.

Mr. CAPPER. The memorial is signed by H. C. Clark, adjutant general of the State of Missouri, speaking for the entire National Guard of the State of Missouri, as he was directed by a meeting held two weeks ago at the State capital of Missouri for the purpose of considering the Wadsworth bill, and especially its National Guard features.

The memorial proceeds:

We call attention to the fact that the defense act has never been given an honest trial by a sympathetic and sincere effort on the part of the War Department to build up the National Guard under its provisions. We believe with certain necessary amendments this act will accomplish the purpose for which it was intended, and we strongly urge the incorporation of the amendments to this law attached to this report.

We recommend that a copy of this recommendation be furnished the representatives of this State in the Senate and the House of Representatives and that a committee of three be appointed by the president of the association to cooperate with the adjutant general in advocating legislation in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Mr. President, the amendments I offered here a few days ago and which I call up to-day are the amendments which are recommended in this memorial to Congress. I might add that the Adjutant Generals' Association of the United States held a meeting here the past week, carefully considered all of the provisions of this bill, and the amendments proposed by me meet with their entire approval. In fact, they were prepared and submitted to me by the Adjutant Generals' Association.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator state how many adjutant generals were here?

Mr. CAPPER. I do not know just how many, but I know that the president of the association, Gen. Charles I. Martin, of my State, who is one of the strongest, most capable, and best-known National Guardsmen in the West, was here throughout the week and was very much interested in this matter, and he represented to me that these amendments reflected the wishes of at least nine-tenths of the National Guard organizations of the country, and I think he is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, perhaps the statement read by the Senator from Kansas explained what I am about to ask. If so, I do not care to have him repeat what is stated in the memorial. But as I gather from the statement, the writer was content to give conclusions merely, rather than to discuss the respective principles of the bill. I would like to have the Senator briefly explain the basic differences between the pending bill and his proposed amendments.

Mr. CAPPER. I shall be glad to do that. I will say to the Senator from Ohio, I shall be glad indeed to make a statement that will, I hope, give a better understanding of the amendments which are asked by the National Guard associations. I believe that these amendments are desired by the National Guard organizations of practically every State in the West.

Mr. President, under Senate bill 3792, now before the Senate, the National Guard is brought under the Army clause of the Constitution. The purpose of sections 1 and 15 of these amendments which I have offered is to strike from Senate bill 3792 those provisions which bring the National Guard under the Army clause of the Constitution and reestablish the provisions of the national defense act, which provides for the organization of the National Guard under the militia clause of the Constitution. There are but two provisions in the Constitution that give the National Government power to organize its land forces, one of which confers powers to raise and support armies and the other which deals with the militia. If the people of the United States are ready to subject their sons to military service in time of peace for a term of years, during which they will be entirely withdrawn from civil life, then the military forces of the country may be organized and trained by the Federal Government under the Army clause, for an army is a body of men whose business is war; but if the other scheme is adopted, by which our young manhood shall be organized into a body of men composed of citizens ordinarily occupied in the pursuits of civil life but organized for discipline and drill and called into the field for temporary military service when the exigencies of the country require it, then such an organization will be legalized militia and will be able to exist only under the militia clause of the Constitution. Civilians who are engaged in the civil pursuits and who are willing to give up a portion of their time to military training will not enter a Federal force which is controlled by a central federalized authority, but they will join the National Guard, which is a State force, officered by men selected by the governors of the States; a force for which the Federal Government prescribes and provides for the arming, organizing, and disciplining, as provided by the Federal Constitution. The other amendments propose to amend the sections of the national defense act.

Mr. President, another change reduces the size of National Guard units. Under existing laws National Guard units are required to comply with the tables of organizations established for the regular service. At the present time these tables require that a company of Infantry must have 100 enlisted men. It has been found impracticable and impossible in many cases to maintain organizations of this strength, either in the Army or National Guard. Especially is this true in the smaller cities. It is important that the National Guard be reorganized as promptly as possible. It has been found impossible to reorganize the National Guard with companies with a strength of 100 men. The House has recognized this fact and in their bill have provided for the reorganization of the National Guard units at a minimum enlisted strength of 50 men until July 1, 1921, and thereafter with a minimum strength of 65 men. This amendment is the same as the provision of the House bill and along the lines suggested by Gen. Pershing in his hearing before the joint Military Committees of the House and Senate.

Other changes proposed are as follows: Section 3 amends section 69 of the national defense act, which provided for an enlistment in the National Guard of three years' active service and three years in the reserve. This amendment provides for a three years' enlistment. It also provides that persons who have served in the Army for not less than six months and who have been honorably discharged therefrom may within two years after the passage of this act enlist in the National Guard for a period of one year and reenlist for a like period. Men who have served during the war feel that they have done their bit and do not care to take on a three years' enlistment, but many of them would like to assist in the reorganization of the National Guard and are willing to enlist for one year. This gives them an opportunity to help out in the reorganization of the National Guard and the training of the new National Guard.

Section 4 amends section 70 of the national-defense act by making the enlistment oath conform to the new term of enlistment.

I think that change has already been made.

Section 5 permits discharges from service in the National Guard under regulations prescribed by the President, except when the National Guard is drafted into the service of the United States under section 111 of the defense act.

Section 6 amends section 74 of the national-defense act by adding to eligible list for appointment as National Guard officers and enlisted men who served during the World War.

The language of section 7 as amended will permit the enlistment of those who served during the war with Germany and are willing to answer a Federal call in an emergency, but who do not care to obligate themselves to attend routine drills, and so forth. These are veteran soldiers and hence should not be required to undergo the training required of the active National Guard. They are required to report at the annual inspection and may elect to go on the active list, participate in encampments, and so forth. Included also in such reserve will be National Guardsmen who, after enlistment in a unit, have so changed their residence or occupation as to be no longer available for active duty. This will give the Federal Government the advantage of a very large trained reserve which would not otherwise be available.

Section 8 amends section 76 of the defense act by striking out the words "as far as practicable." Section 111 of the defense act provides that commissioned officers of such organizations shall be appointed from among the members thereof. This made these sections inconsistent with each other and permitted the War Department to ignore the provisions of section 111 of the defense act and appoint officers outside of National Guard organizations to National Guard organizations, permitting the War Department to fill vacancies in the National Guard from other sources than the National Guard, thus defeating the intent of Congress in providing that officers of the National Guard should be selected from organizations of the National Guard.

Mr. President, the Militia Bureau should have a fixed status and certain and definite functions. Members of the National Guard contend that it should be a separate bureau, functioning directly under the Secretary of War and not through the Chief of Staff. They feel that it should be composed in part of National Guardsmen who are familiar with National Guard conditions. They believe that the Chief of the Militia Bureau should be free to formulate policies for the increased efficiency of the National Guard and that militia affairs should be administered by the Militia Bureau without interference from other organizations in the War Department. The Secretary of War is, of course, in supreme charge, but the Chief of the Militia Bureau should be free to take matters up with him direct. Both the Wadsworth bill and the pending amendment provide that the chief of the bureau or division shall be a National Guardsman, and this is seemingly the consensus of opinion in both House and Senate committees. The Senate bill provides for a personnel composed in equal parts of officers of the Regular Establishment and civilians and obviously the Chief of the Militia Bureau should have the assistance of officers from both services.

Section 12 amends section 109 of the defense act. This section provides for the pay of officers of the National Guard and fixes the pay on a basis of a day's pay for drill and requires the officers of an organization to have 60 per cent of the enlisted strength and 50 per cent of the officers present at drill before the officers are entitled to draw pay. This change in the pay for officers is intended to fix the responsibility for the attendance of the organization on the officers and punishment for failure to secure the attendance of the enlisted men is placed upon the officers and not upon the enlisted man, as heretofore. This change was recommended by the Militia Bureau and was made in the House as a provision of the House bill.

Section 13 amends section 110 of the defense act. It provides for drill pay of enlisted men; also amends the law so as to provide for monthly pay instead of semiannual. The incentive which drill pay gives is lost in a large part when payments are so long deferred. It is thought that this will add greatly to the feature of the law and will not be burdensome on the supply department of the Army, because provision is made for the payment of troops by the State property and disbursing officers, if the Secretary of War so desires. Payment of troops attending camps of instruction is at present made by State property and disbursing officers from funds allotted by the War Department, and it is thought that monthly payments could be handled in the same way. Members of no other organization in the world are required to wait six months for their pay.

Section 14 is an amendment to section 111 of the defense act. The purpose of the changes in this section from those in the defense act is to prevent the disorganization of the National Guard when it has been drafted into the service of the United States, as it was during the World War, when these organizations returned to their home States. By mustering out the National Guard units when they returned from the war the State and Federal Governments lost this force when it had reached its highest state of efficiency and left the States without any troops and the Federal Government without this valuable asset for defense purposes.

Mr. President, in the Great War the War Department virtually wiped out our National Guard by breaking up its organization when merging it with the Federal forces and resorted temporarily to a conscription to raise a big army. I think it was a very great mistake to wipe out the National Guard organization. But, notwithstanding this great injustice, it is conceded that no troops fought better in the World War than did the National Guardsmen. Let me add that under this system there is no need of a large Regular Army or of compulsory military training, if we can put in the field a well-trained guard recruited in 48 States, for the most part from the young men of the towns and cities and rural communities.

Mr. President, every State needs such a military police force as the National Guard. Without it the States would be compelled to adopt some form of State constabulary to take its place. Consequently we can hardly improve on such a citizen army as the Constitution under the militia clause has provided in the National Guard, and it is equally available for a national emergency. But I believe the plan set forth in the bill now before us would result in putting the National Guard out of business and greatly weaken our national defense.

The amendments I have offered, I might say, are very much in line with the House military bill, and they are, I believe, approved and indorsed by at least nine-tenths of the National Guard organizations of the country to-day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the matter brought up by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] affects one of the fundamentals of the entire bill. Senators may remember that in my opening remarks describing the work of the Senate Military Affairs Committee and the kind of bill it had proposed, I used the expression "one army." I said then, as has been said often since, that we endeavored to establish a military system which would be adequate and automatic, and that we should have one Army of the United States for the defense of the country.

The amendments to the bill offered by the Senator from Kansas destroy entirely the idea of one army, and if adopted will continue the situation which has existed for many, many years, in which the country, under the strict definition of the status of the several parts of our military defense, will have 49 armies, one Regular Army and one from each State, 48 in number, making a total of 49.

The question of the treatment of the National Guard has been an exceedingly difficult one. The subcommittee had upon it Senators who are in deep sympathy with the Guard. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is an old National Guardsman. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] was a National Guardsman. I myself have been associated with the National Guard and have kept in very intimate touch with hundreds of its officers and men. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is an old National Guardsman in the State of Oregon.

The assertion was made upon the floor of the Senate the other day that the bill ruins the National Guard, and that it was done at the instance of the Regular Army. That statement was made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. The truth is that the bill does not ruin the National Guard, and the provisions of the bill that have to do with the National Guard did not emanate from the Regular Army in any degree whatsoever. They emanated from National Guardsmen, officers whose names I shall recite, and from whom I shall quote in part.

I have had a deep sympathy for many years with the guard and its unfortunate status with respect to the Regular Army. Those who have not studied the situation find it very difficult to understand the handicaps which the guardsman has encountered. During most of his attempts at training himself to be a soldier to defend his country he has been neither fish nor fowl. He has not belonged to the Army of the United States. The Army of the United States, consisting entirely of Regulars, has, through some of its officers at least, let him understand that pretty frequently. He has been referred to, as is proper under the present status, as a militiaman. He has been unavailable for duty with the Regular Army in time of peace. His status is such that by the very nature of the case he can not be consulted in an official capacity in those matters which affect the National Guard. In other words, he does not "belong to the club," if I may use that expression.

The subcommittee which drafted the bill consulted with a great many guard officers. It consulted especially with guard officers who served in the American Expeditionary Forces, who have been through the mill, who have encountered the handicaps not only in time of peace but in time of war, to which the guardsman is subjected under the present situation. Every one of those officers whom we have consulted is in favor of the bill—and we have consulted a great many.

Now, just a word as to how this thing originated. The Senate may remember that the American Legion held a national convention at Minneapolis last year which was composed of citizen soldiers——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Before the Senator takes that up, may I ask him whether the National Guardsmen who were consulted by the subcommittee were confined to any particular section of the country?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Or did they represent the National Guards in different States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They did, in several different States. They are all fighting men, too.

The American Legion held its national convention at Minneapolis last year. That convention was made up, as I said a moment ago, of citizen soldiers, former officers and men of the National Army and the National Guard who had served in the Federal service. The former enlisted men were in the majority at that convention. In fact, no distinction is made in the Legion between former officers and former enlisted men. All rank and title is dropped. That convention, after an extended debate, adopted a set of resolutions on the question of the military policy of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator to what convention he is calling attention?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Minneapolis convention of the American Legion. There were over a thousand delegates there.

I will read only a few paragraphs from that resolution.

1. That a large standing army is uneconomic and un-American; national safety with freedom from militarism is best assured by a national citizen army and navy based on the democratic and American principles of the equality of obligation and opportunity for all.

It may be useless for me to read this, for the Senate has already passed upon it.

2. We favor a policy of universal military training, and that the administration of such policy shall be removed from the complete control of any exclusively military organization or caste.

The last part of that paragraph is significant. I shall discuss that particular suggestion in connection with the National Guard provision which we arrived at under the bill.

4. We have had a bitter experience in the cost of unpreparedness for national defense and the lack of proper training on the part of officers and men, and we realize the necessity of an immediate revision of our military and naval system and a thorough house cleaning of the inefficient officers and methods of our entire Military Establishment.

5. The national citizen army, which should and must be the chief reliance of this country in time of war, should be officered by men from its own ranks and administered by a general staff on which citizen-soldier officers and Regular Army officers shall serve in equal number.

You will notice, Mr. President, that the legion uses the term "national citizen army" as the reliance of the country. The convention at Minneapolis appointed a committee to come to Washington and consult with the Military Committees of the House and Senate and to interpret to the committees of the House and Senate the ideas contained in this resolution adopted by the convention. That committee came before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. On it were the former Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, a former National Guard officer; on it was Mr. F. W. Galbraith, a colonel in the Ohio National Guard, who served in the Thirty-seventh Division; on it was Mr. Foreman, a colonel in the Illinois National Guard, who formerly commanded the First Illinois Cavalry and during the war commanded a regiment of Field Artillery of the Thirty-third Division, the Illinois National Guard division. There was one other officer, who was a National Guard officer, who did not attend the meeting, as he had too far to come; but half of the officers who appeared before our committee representing the legion were guard officers. They prepared a statement, a portion of which I want to read for the information of those Senators who take an interest in the National Guard.

They—

Meaning the members of the legion—

believe that this citizens' army should be trained so far as possible by citizen officers, and its units localized in the territory from which they come, but that it must be trained solely as a national army under the authority of the National Government for use only in time of war.

Mr. Galbraith presented a statement on behalf of the committee. He said in explaining it:

One observation, which is referred to indirectly, is this: That any military organization, any army, should be an army, one army, the United States Army. It may be composed, and would have to be composed, of professional soldiers and citizen soldiers, but that should be the only distinction.

The CHAIRMAN. I assume from that that you would assume such an army being raised and maintained under the so-called Army clause of the Constitution?

Mr. GALBRAITH. Yes, sir.

That was the conclusion of the American Legion. We went on and discussed with those men the status of the National Guard. They sat with us hour after hour, not only in open hearings but in executive session upon several occasions. They were unanimous in the belief that the National Guard should be brought under the Army clause of the Constitution; that it would prosper under that Army clause; that not only would it be organized upon a more efficient basis, but that its officers and men would stand upon a better plane with respect to the Regulars. The bill was drawn with their assistance.

Later another series of conferences was called, and to those conferences came some additional National Guard officers. Among them I remember Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, who commanded the National Guard division, the Twenty-seventh Division, from the State of New York. I think it fair to say that Gen. O'Ryan has contributed more to this bill, in its National Guard features, than has any other officer with whom we consulted.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask does he approve the bill in its present form?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. POMERENE. And may I also ask did Col. Galbraith, of Ohio, approve it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Col. Galbraith, of Ohio, also approved it, as also did Col. Foreman.

Mr. POMERENE. I asked that question especially because I know that Col. Galbraith is an officer who stands high in the National Guard service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He has a most excellent standing.

Gen. O'Ryan has studied this question for years. He has occupied every grade in the National Guard from private to major general; he has been through the mill. In adddition to that, he is a graduate of the Army War College, having made a special request that he be permitted to study there. His record abroad—he was the only non-Regular who commanded a combat division in the recent war—speaks for itself. For years he has been urging that the National Guard be given the same privileges and the same status as the Regulars; that its officers, with their consent, be made available and eligible for any kind of duty in time of peace. He, in common with many other lawyers, believes that that can not be done so long as National Guardsmen are miltiamen. The function of the militiaman is prescribed by the Constitution. The President, pursuant to act of Congress, may use the militia solely for the purpose of repelling invasion, suppressing insurrection, and executing the laws. Militiamen can be used for nothing else at any time, in peace or in war. That has placed them, it may surprise some Senators to know, in a very difficult position and has kept them there all these years.

Under the present situation when war breaks out the President summons the Organized Militia, or National Guard. They are then mustered into the Federal service.

There is a vast amount of paper work to be done; the officers and men all have to be examined; and guardsmen have complained—and perhaps with some degree of justification—that it is at that very point when the officers and men of the National Guard, being militiamen, being mustered into the Federal service, that they are subjected to injustice; that in examining the officers and men some efficient officers and some good men are eliminated by the Federal mustering officers, and that units of the National Guard are disturbed and disrupted.

Mr. POMERENE. They are eliminated for what reason? Because of a difference between the State law and the National law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because of alleged differences in standards of efficiency.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York, carrying out still further the idea suggested by the Senator from Ohio, would it not be possible to frame the present bill so as to obviate that very injustice, so that without incorporating the National Guard as a part and parcel of the Regular Army they could be left under the control of the General Staff?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; it is impossible to do that, because the Federal Government has no control over the training of the militia, and it is only by reason of the control over training that the efficiency of officers and men can be ascertained. The States have control of the training of the militia. It is for that reason that the Federal Government, when it musters the militia into the active Federal service, insists and always will insist—and you can not deny it—upon the right of combing out these men who they say are inefficient and have not been trained. They have had no control over that training prior to the moment when the men are mustered in; but, in any event, at that point commences the disruption of the guard units of which we hear so much complaint. Even with war declared and the National Guard in its present status mustered into the Federal service, it can then only be used to repel invasion, and, therefore, it is not a truly national force; its mission is limited; it can not take part in any war involving the sending of troops outside the United States. That was admitted in 1916 when the national defense act was drawn. The National Guard officers themselves admitted that they did not like to be put in that category; they wanted to be soldiers of the United States, available for any kind of duty in time of need when war is declared by Congress. So a provision was put in the national defense act in 1916 authorizing the President when war breaks out to draft into the Federal service the officers and men of the National Guard; to draft them, mind you, as individuals, not to draft them as units, not to take whole regiments or whole batteries or whole brigades or divisions, but to draft them as individuals. That is the only way that a draft can be imposed. That provision was put in the national defense act in order to make the National Guard a national force available for any kind of military duty in time of war. That provision met the approval of the National Guard. They wanted to be known as Federal soldiers primarily, with the State obligation secondary.

That provision was in effect when we went into war with Germany, and all the National Guardsmen, officers and men, were drafted into the Federal service.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, is it not in the power of Congress to recognize the units as well as the individuals? Why would it not be possible for the National Guard in the States, who secondarily would serve the State as is provided in this very bill, to become a part and parcel of the national force of the National Army, and at the same time hold their distinct State units? Why would it not be possible for us so to legislate that in the event of war and a resort to the draft National Guard units as unified and perfected organizations instead of as individuals could be drafted into the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, you can not draft the unit without drafting the individuals.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand that; but here is a military unit already perfected, already organized and officered. Why is it not within the province of Congress to provide certain standards which they shall observe, and then when war shall break out, without disorganizing and disrupting the units and incorporating them into what is technically known as the Regular Army, allow them to go in as their organizations have been perfected?

Mr. WADSWORTH. A great many difficulties will be encountered in attempting any such thing. If all the units of the National Guard in every State enjoyed a uniform degree of efficiency, yes; but they do not do so, and can not do so, so long as they are under the militia clause, because there is no authority to govern the training in a uniform manner.

Now, let me say to the Senator that what he desires to be brought about, which is the recognition of existing units of the National Guard, is just what our bill accomplishes.

We avoid that very thing, which has been such a handicap to the Guard, and which in this last war tore it all to pieces and scattered its personnel throughout the entire Army. We do not want that done again, and we propose to put the Guard upon a status in which it will not be done.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But, if the Senator will allow me, that necessitates their being under the control and direction of the General Staff of the Regular Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And we give them representation on the General Staff, which you can not do effectively and efficiently if they are militiamen. They never have had it before, and they can not get it. I want to make a National Guard officer just as good as the Regular in his rights and privileges and his opportunities to serve, and he can not have those things so long as he is merely a militiaman in time of peace. He "does not belong," and they let him know that he "does not belong," too.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But while their units would be kept intact and their officers would receive recognition, in that certain officers designated by the Regular Army would be nominally chosen by the governor, they would still be under the control and direction of the Regular Army without any compensation whatever so far as their State organization is concerned. In other words, they would be subject entirely to the control of the General Staff whenever they saw fit to have certain rules and regulations by which they were to be governed, to the total destruction of anything like a State militia.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, Mr. President, that is the trouble to-day. They are subject to the rules and regulations of the Regular Army General Staff in all matters of organization, in all matters of discipline. They have no representation. Their voice is never heard. They are never brought into council. They have no authority, and they can not be heard. They can not have authority, they can not be brought into council, while they are militiamen. They "do not belong." We propose that they shall belong, and shall be eligible to any kind of service in time of peace with their consent. This bill of ours establishes but one Army of the United States, divided into two categories—the permanent or professional personnel and the reserve or citizen personnel. The National Guard of the United States is to be a part of the reserve or citizen personnel.

Its officers are to be officers of the Army of the United States. They are also to be officers of the State troops of the States in which they live, commissioned by the governor, but that State commission is to be a secondary commission. The primary commission, the fundamental commission, is the commission as an officer of the United States Army reserve. But this bill provides that reserve officers—and that would include National Guard officers—are available for any kind of duty with their consent, and the bill further provides that one of them, a reserve officer who is at the same time a National Guard officer, shall be at the head of the National Guard Bureau in the War Department, and that 25 of them shall be on the General Staff and distributed in every committee of the General Staff, so they will be heard in everything that comes up with respect to the plans, preparations, and regulations of the Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] speaks of the national-defense act of 1916, and its protection of the National Guard. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that when the National Guard were drafted into the service under the act of 1916 they went in individually, with the result that the National Guard units were broken up entirely in many cases, not in all, because they were kept together in some; but members of the National Guard of one State drifted into divisions composed of National Guards of other States, and sometimes of Regular Army officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In other words, young men have come to me and have written to me advising me that they were sent forward as replacement troops from their home unit, and never saw their unit again until after the armistice was signed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the whole trouble.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The proposition involved here is to unify the National Guard, in a measure, because they may be created into units which can be maintained as State organizations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They can be maintained as State troops, doing the same kind of service that they do to-day in the protection of the State against internal disorder. There is no difference whatsoever in the kind of service which National Guardsmen will perform under our bill as contrasted with the service which they perform under the national-defense act, the existing law. They will be the same men, they will be the some regiments, located in the same places; but instead of being organized under the militia clause they are going to be organized under the Army clause; and when you get them under the Army clause you put them on an equal footing with the men who draw the regulations here in Washington; and until you get them on an equal footing with the men who draw the regulations they will never be consulted; at least, there can be no assurance that they will be consulted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that these officers would be appointed by the governors of the States, but that the commissions issued by the governors of the States would be secondary to the commissions issued by the United States. That fact, however, does not disturb the primary right of the governor to select the officers, as I understand. Am I correct about that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. His selection is restricted in this way: He must select the officers of the National Guard of his State from the reserve officers residing in his State. In other words, the way it will work will be just this:

You have a National Guard in North Carolina. If this bill should pass the duties of those officers and men would not change in the slightest degree; but those officers of the National Guard of North Carolina, under the terms of this bill, are made immediately eligible for reserve commissions in the Army of the United States. They can take those reserve commissions and they become the basic commissions, and the governor of North Carolina gives them State commissions; that is all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to get that clear. The Senator means that the present officers of the National Guard residing in North Carolina, under this bill, if it shall pass, will be the source from which will be drawn by the governor the officers that will officer the guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. So long as they consent. It is all with their consent. The whole thing is voluntary, of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. That applies, as I understand, to the present officers; but suppose other officers are to be appointed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They must be reserve officers, in the first instance, and the governor of the State is to recommend them; and without his recommendation they can not be appointed officers of the National Guard.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that the only limitation upon the power of the governor is that the appointee must be a reserve officer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. A reserve officer.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator just one other question. Unfortunately I have not been able to be in the Chamber during the discussion upon this bill, and I have not examined it very carefully; but I should be very glad, and I think it would be helpful to a number of us if the Senator would explain exactly what is the jurisdiction of the State authorities over the National Guard units located in the States and to what extent these powers that have heretofore been exercised by the State authorities over the control and direction of the militia, so to speak, differ from the powers that will hereafter be vested in the State authorities over this reorganized National Guard.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President; it is very clear in the bill. On page 84, section 68, will be found the provision which protects the States and makes this force available for State use. It is found in this proviso, commencing on line 4:

Provided, That the States and Territories in time of peace, and subject to such regulations as to expense, property accountability, and other matters as may be prescribed by the President, shall be entitled to use as State or Territorial troops, under the direct orders of the governor of the State or Territory, so much of the National Guard of the United States as is within their respective borders and not at the time in active service under a call by the President.

Practically what they do to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no change so far as concerns the right of the governor to call them into action at any time he may see fit for purposes of State protection, or police duty, or any other purpose for which the old militia can be used?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all. He may use them for any purpose. Mr. President—this is a rather interesting legal question—it took the committee a long time to arrive at a conclusion which would permit the National Guard to belong to the Army of the United States and still make them available for State use. Clearly, you can not do both under the militia clause. We believed it could be done under the Army clause, but what puzzled us for a long time was what their status would be when under the command of the governor. Then we encountered that provision in the Constitution which says that no State shall maintain troops without the consent of Congress. This bill, in effect, gives the consent of Congress for the States to maintain troops in the way laid down by the bill—that is, the National Guard—and while under the orders of the governor, performing State duty, they will be acting as State troops under that clause of the Constitution which says, by implication at least, that States may maintain troops when Congress consents. They will not be organized militia. They will be organized State troops under the command of the governor, but their obligation to the governor and to the State is secondary to their obligation to the Nation. They can not be used by the governor if they are in the active service of the United States, nor can the militia to-day. The National Guard of North Carolina or the National Guard of New York to-day, although they are militiamen, are not available to the use of North Carolina or of New York when they are in the Federal service by call of the President. For instance, when the President summoned the guard in 1916 to go to the border, he did it under that provision of the Constitution which provides that the militia may be used for the repelling of invasion, and he took the guard away from New York and he took the guard away from North Carolina, and for that period of time those soldiers were not available for the uses of those two States. So there is no difference in actual effect between the present situation and the one we propose. We have to amend the oath which they are to take, and I want to read that to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has said that there is no real difference between the present situation and the one that the committee proposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; except that the guard, we believe, gets a much more advantageous status.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to ask the Senator to pursue that thought a little further, and point out what the difference would be between the committee bill and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas would merely result in the continuation of the present situation; that is all. That is its intention. The opposition to this thing comes very largely from State adjutant generals. I differ with the Senator from Kansas about the officers and men of the guard being opposed to this thing. I do not think they are. Everyone to whom I have had it explained is heartily for it, and they have expressed to me a good deal of restlessness and resentment at some of the adjutant generals who dislike to surrender a little power. Only nine of the adjutant generals came here the other day, according to my best information. Two of them agreed with the bill, told their Senators so, and went home, the adjutant general of New York, and the adjutant general of Maryland.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds to read the oath of which he has spoken, did I understand him to say that, in his opinion, where the Constitution prohibits the use or maintenance of troops by the States without the consent of Congress, it means the same thing when it speaks of troops that it does when it speaks of the militia of the States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I think most decidedly the meaning of the word "troops" is different from that of the word "militia."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rather thought so. I am not at all up to date on this subject by any recent reading, but it lingered in my mind that in the preparation of the selective-service law there was some distinction claimed, and that "troops" meant something different from what "militia" meant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The word "troops" does not have the same meaning as the word "militia."

Here is the oath which is to be taken by the National Guard officers. This is now in the bill:

Provided further, That all officers of the National Guard who have taken and subscribed to the oath prescribed for officers in the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916—

In other words, those are the present-day National Guard officers—may be commissioned as reserve officers in the several grades now held by them with original date of rank and be recognized as officers of the National Guard of the United States.

That takes care of the present-day National Guard officer of the State of North Carolina or any other State.

All officers of the Organized Militia of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and all persons hereafter to be commissioned as officers in the National Guard of the United States shall, upon being commissioned under the provisions of this act, take and subscribe to the following oath:

"I, ——— ———, having been appointed a ——— in the National Guard of the United States, do hereby solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States; that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ——— in the National Guard of the United States upon which I am about to enter. I do further solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the State of ——— and to obey the orders of the governor thereof, subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States. So help me God."

The proposed law says that these men can only be used by the Federal Government in time of war, and that they shall be available and under the orders of the governor in time of peace for the purpose of maintaining order within the State.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. He has studied this question, and I think he has mastered it as no other Senator has. Under the plan of his bill, does the Senator think that on account of the superior authority of the United States there would likely arise situations during times of peace which might bring about a conflict of authority between the States and the Federal Government?

To illustrate what I mean: Suppose during times of peace the governor of the State should desire to use the National Guard in his State in a certain way, and the officers of the Federal Government having superior authority should demur, and should interdict such order as the governor might make in the premises. Does not the Senator think that that might be possible, and might breed trouble?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I believe it is impossible. Under this provision the authority as between the two is well defined. With the guard brought under the Army clause, I have already described the commissioning of the officers. The training would then be under the control of the Federal Government, as it should be. You can not have 48 different kinds of training. I do not mean to say there have been 48 different kinds of training, but there has been a lack of uniformity in the training of the National Guard of the several States. The training would be under the control of the Federal Government. That is all the Federal Government gains by the change, but it is an important change for the National Guard.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not training that I have in mind; it is what happens after the period of training has been completed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The training is continuous. The drill is part of the training.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The interpretation of the bill by the Senator is that in times of peace the National Guard within a given State is subject entirely to the command and control of the governor, so far as use in an emergency is concerned?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true inside of the State.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And only in time of war is it subject to the control of the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In time of war or threatened war.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is what I mean; in time of national disturbance, which necessitates the mobilization of officers and men.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, if I understand the Senator, he holds that in time of peace the practical authority and control are in the governor of the State and not in the Federal Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not for its internal management; no. It is made available to the governor and the State for specific use at any time when it is needed. But all that has to do with the training, with the regulations which govern them, providing, for example, how many sergeants there shall be in a company, how many machine guns to a regiment, and things of that sort, emanates from Washington, practically as it does to-day. The military command runs through a channel finally reaching Washington, but whenever the governor wants the services of the guard all he has to do is to call them.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is to say, in all matters in which the governor, under the bill, has the right to their services and to their control, his authority is supreme?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is supreme, unless they happen to be in the active service of the United States. Then he can not have them.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then they could only be in the active service under a call of the President?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under a call of the President and in accordance with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did any amendment which the Senator offered the other day change the method of securing the officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state just how the officers are appointed under this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have just done that at some length, but I will do it again.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have just come into the Chamber. I am sorry I was not here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill merely provides that National Guard officers in the future shall also be reserve officers, and the reserve commission is the basic commission. The bill provides that a present-day National Guard officer shall be eligible, immediately on the passage of this act, to take out a commission as a reserve officer, and having taken out a commission as a reserve officer he is an officer of the Army of the United States. Then he has a secondary commission from the governor of his State, and under that he promises to obey the orders of the governor in the matter of the use of troops by governors for the protection of States against disorder. The personnel would be the same as now in the National Guard. Every National Guard officer will be eligible under this bill to a reserve commission. All he has to do is to take out a commission as a National Guard officer of the United States, and his reserve commission entitles him to be regarded as an officer in the Army of the United States, and he can be assigned to any kind of duty with the Regulars, or away from them, with his consent, in time of peace.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think that conforms to the constitutional provision?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether the constitutional provision has been discussed by the Senator or not. It provides that the governors of the several States shall appoint the officers of the militia, but as I understand this provision the governor merely approves; they are appointed by the War Department. Substantially that is what it means.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true under the militia clause, but we are taking the guard out from the militia clause and putting them under the Army clause.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then they are no longer State militia.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not State militia; they are State troops, available for the use of the State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under what provision of the Constitution do you organize them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We organize them under that provision of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to raise and support armies.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is done, they are a part of the Regular Army, and not a part of the National Guard, and the term "National Guard" is a misnomer.

I was not here when the Senator argued the provision. I recall that four years ago—June 3, 1916—when the National Guard act which is now in force was passed, the question of how far the United States could go in assuming control over the National Guard was investigated very thoroughly, and the provisions we put in the act at that time were passed upon by the Department of Justice, as I recall, and the Attorney General held that they were constitutional. The provision of the Constitution to raise and support armies, in my judgment, does not provide for the establishment of a National Guard to be under the control of the States. I do not think that authority is broad enough to give to the governor of a State or the State authorities control over the National Guard, even if the United States wanted to give them control, because it is not provided for, and under well-established rules of interpretation of our Constitution there must be authority for the passage of a law before that law is constitutional under the Constitution of the United States. I have very grave doubts about this question. I do not believe that it can be maintained. If it is purely a United States force, I do not think the United States has any authority to give it to any other sovereignty or quasi sovereignty. That is my judgment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee has consulted the very best legal authority on this question. Every lawyer of repute with whom we have consulted says that there is no doubt that we are well within the meaning of the Constitution. I do not know whether I am authorized to quote him, because he has made no official announcement about it, but when I discussed with Gen.

Crowder the question of the use of a portion of the Army of the United States as State troops, he said there was no doubt whatsoever that the Federal Government could assign any portion of its Army for any kind of duty at any time.

Under the Army clause of the Constitution the Federal Government can raise and support any kind of army it wants. It can say, if it wants to, that no one shall be in it unless he has red hair; that no officer in it shall be over 25 years of age; that no portion of it shall serve beyond a certain geographical area. It can say that a certain portion of it shall do one kind of duty and another portion of it shall do another kind of duty. There is no limitation whatsoever as to the use of the Army of the United States. Congress can prescribe any rule and raise any kind of an army. Under the Army clause of the Constitution, Congress can say, "Here is the Army of the United States, and we will divide it up into three different categories and assign to each class a different military mission. First, we will have a permanent personnel or the so-called Regulars, and we will keep them on duty 365 days in the year and pay them. They shall be liable to any kind of service in time of peace or in time of war." Then the Congress can say, "Here is another class or subdivision of the Army of the United States, and these men shall be part-time soldiers. They shall not do military service in time of peace except a certain number of drills, we will say, per year. They shall not be subject to service except under certain conditions, like a declaration of war by Congress." Then Congress can go further and say, "Here is our third group of the Army of the United States. Of that group we will permit the officers and men, according to rules laid down by us, the Congress, to serve the States in a certain way under certain conditions at certain times when the Federal Government does not need them."

It is clearly within the power of Congress, under the power to raise and support armies, to assign any kind of mission to the soldiers of that army, to divide it into groups and say this part of the Army shall serve only in Alaska, that part of the Army shall serve only in Panama, this other part of the Army shall serve only in the State of New York, and to make any rules it wants.

Under the bill we organize one Army for the United States. We divide it into two classes, first, of permanent or professional soldiers; and, second, of reserve or citizen soldiers. The permanent soldiers are full-time soldiers; the citizen soldiers are part-time soldiers. Then we can further subdivide the citizen soldiers into classes, if we want to, and say one shall be the organized reserves, and they shall be subject only to duty in time of war. The second subdivision shall be the National Guard of the United States. They shall be subject to duty when the Federal Government needs them in time of war or threatened war, and they shall also be subject, under certain rules and conditions, to the orders of the governor of the State in which they happen to be located or stationed. There is no limit to the authority of Congress in raising and supporting an army. They can have any kind of an army that they want.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I may be very obtuse, but I am still unable to understand how the Senator from New York will be able to harmonize the provisions of the bill with the Constitution, where in the latter part of section 10 of Article I it is provided that no State shall in time of peace keep troops.

Mr. WADSWORTH. "Without the consent of Congress."

Mr. GRONNA. "Without the consent of Congress." Does the Senator mean to say that by indirection, as I will call it, we are now giving that authority, or are we attempting changing the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are not changing the Constitution. We are following the mandate and provision of the Constitution.

Mr. GRONNA. If I understand the Senator correctly, the provisions of the bill will really do away with all militia and there will be no National Guard, but we will simply have troops within the States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the States would still have authority to organize their militia, as much as they pleased. That power can not be taken away from them. They have it under the Constitution.

Mr. GRONNA. The militia, or National Guard, as I understand it, are organized by the executives in the various States and in accordance with law, based upon the Constitution, of course. If we have just one army, will that army be known as the State militia or as Federal troops?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the militia will not be a part of the Army under the terms of the bill, but there is nothing to prevent the organization of militia.

Mr. GRONNA. What power would the executive of a State have in the matter of the selection of the militia? The Senator concedes that we will still have members of the militia. What authority, then, has the executive of a State in the selection of the militia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He has complete authority. We do not touch the militia in this bill. We do not attempt to disturb the right and authority of the States to organize their militia. We are dealing with the National Guard, or the former Organized Militia. We bring it under the Army clause of the Constitution, but at the same time we give the governor the right to call upon it whenever he needs it in his State, and also the exclusive right of recommending the officers.

Mr. GRONNA. In other words, there will be no National Guard; there will be just one Army, as the Senator said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One Army for Federal purposes and the National Guards for the several States.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand the provision of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], it is the purpose to change the present law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In some respects we have already changed it.

Mr. GRONNA. For instance, I have only read section 6 very hurriedly and have not had time to study it, but section 6 explains the qualifications of the men to be appointed as officers and members of the Army. I will read a part of that section. It is very short:

> Persons hereafter commissioned as officers of the National Guard shall not be recognized as such under any of the provisions of this act unless they shall have been selected from the following classes.

Then it goes on and describes those classes. That gives the Federal Government the power to say what the requirements shall be. It will, as a matter of fact, place the National Guard under one general rule, not only for one State but for all States. The Senator stated a moment ago that we would have 49 different rules of training, which, of course, would be true under the old order of things; but if we adopt the amendments offered by the Senator from Kansas I doubt if that would be true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said we would have 49 different kinds of training. I did not say 49 different kinds of standards for officers.

Mr. GRONNA. Would that apply if we adopt the amendments proposed by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it still applies, because the amendments of the Senator from Kansas are to strike out of this bill several sections and to substitute for those sections the provisions of existing law slightly amended. The existing law treats the National Guard in the militia status. Our bill organizes the National Guard under the Army clause of the Constitution.

The amendments of the Senator from Kansas, in so far as they change existing law, are not pertinent to the bill at all. Some of the amendments which he suggests to existing law are carried in the bill as applied to the new National Guard; for instance, the amendment for the pay of officers and men is carried in this bill. We pay the officers and men of the National Guard under the bill just as they will be paid under the national-defense act.

Mr. GRONNA. So that if we adopt some of the amendments proposed by the Senator from Kansas there would be no necessity of adopting all of them, because some of the provisions have already been taken care of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Some of the minor provisions are already taken care of. Some of the things against which the National Guard is complaining—in the matter of pay, for example—have been taken care of in the bill, but the character of the Guard, in so far as its basic obligation is concerned, is changed by our bill as compared with the national-defense act, and its position is greatly advanced by it.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that there would be a more uniform rule under the provisions of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas than there is at the present time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true, and there would be a still more uniform rule under our bill than at present.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, under the Senator's bill there would be just one army; there would practically be no National Guard.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There would be a National Guard. The National Guard is merely a name given arbitrarily to the forces in existence to-day, and can be given arbitrarily to the forces proposed under the bill. Of course, the true name for it is the "Organized Militia." But it may interest the Senator to know that so anxious are the officers and men of the Organized Militia to be known primarily as Federal citizen soldiers that the term "National Guard" was assigned to them by an act of Congress. They like the word "national." They wanted to be known as national citizen soldiers. They do not want to be known primarily as State soldiers or Organized Militiamen of the States. The thing that has stood in their way all these years and caused them a lot of handicaps and a lot of heartburnings is the fact that so long as they are militiamen they are not national soldiers in the way they like to be. We propose to cease having them as militiamen and to make them national citizen soldiers, available for the use of the States under certain conditions.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator for the information he has given me, and if he will permit me I want to say a word with reference to the indorsement of the bill or the plan proposed in the pending bill.

I do not want to say that the State which I have the honor in part to represent is opposed to the provisions with reference to the National Guard. I will say, however, that I have in my office a great many petitions and a great many resolutions adopted at various meetings throughout the States by ex-service men and by various associations of different names. I do not know how well the meeting at Minneapolis was attended. I am not here to say anything against what transpired at that meeting. I do not say that the reports which were conveyed to the chairman of the committee are not the correct ones, and I do not wish to say that they misrepresent the views of the National Guard of Minnesota or the Dakotas. But I do say that there is a divided opinion with reference to the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With reference to the question of the National Guard?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. I have letters from some very prominent men, men who served in the late war, men who have been identified with and who have been officers of the National Guard for more than 30 years. I have often thought that I should present those resolutions to the Senate and ask to have them printed in the RECORD, but we all know that a streak of economy has come over the Senate all of a sudden, practically prohibiting us from having these resolutions inserted in the RECORD without reading them, and so I have refrained from presenting the resolutions, believing that the Senator from New York, who I know is very diligent and very efficient in his work, together with the other members of the Committee on Military Affairs, would adopt a plan which would be satisfactory to the officers of the National Guard.

I am not at all sure that the provisions as they now stand in the pending bill are satisfactory to the officers of the National Guard of my State or of the neighboring States, who I know are greatly interested in military work, and who, I may be pardoned for saying, I believe, are authorities. I have no particular protest, I will say to the Senator, against the proposed plan other than the petitions and resolutions passed by various organizations throughout the western country, and I have more petitions against the proposed plan of the Senator than I have for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Against the National Guard plan?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; against the National Guard plan.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will guarantee that they never read the bill. I know where they got their ideas. They got them from the adjutant general, who passes the word that there is a bill of this kind pending in Congress to kill the National Guard. Some guard officers have come to me in my office, may I state to the Senator, and asked, "Is it true that the National Guard is going to be put out of existence by the committee bill?" I have asked, "Who told you it is going to be put out of existence?" "Well, the word has gone out from the adjutant general of our State that that is the case." When you sit down with such a man and show him the provision of the bill, he will say, "That is the very thing we want." Many of them would like to get away from some of the adjutant generals—not from all, for there are some good ones.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am old-fashioned enough to believe that the States ought to have some authority in this matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We give it to them in this bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe that the National Guard has in the past been a great factor for good. I realize, although I know very little about military affairs, that there is need for improvement with reference to the National Guard; but there is a radical change wrought by the provisions of the pending bill, and I am unable to believe that the National Guard—the militia, we will call it—will function in the future as it has in the past even under the laws which we have now, imperfect as they may be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, I think that they will function a great deal better. I should like to read to the Senator——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New York spoke of the adjutant generals of the States. Does not this bill take care of the adjutant generals of the several States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; under certain circumstances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it not make them brigadier generals in the reserve force?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the discretion of the President, for certain purposes having to do with registration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But they would not command the guard; and that is a power which some of them do not like to lose.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CAPPER. I wish to say—and I say it without the slightest hesitation—that, so far as Kansas is concerned, the adjutant general of that State undoubtedly speaks for the entire National Guard of the State. Kansas had a very strong National Guard organization when we entered the war; I think we had one of the most efficient brigades to be found in the entire country, and that was due to the very fine work of the adjutant general, Gen. Martin, who is now the president of the Adjutant Generals' Association of the country. He tells me that he voices the wishes of the entire National Guard of our section of the country. I know he speaks for the National Guard of Oklahoma, because the adjutant general of that State was here the other day, and he gave me the same assurance, as did also the adjutant general of the State of Missouri.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not mean to cast any reflection upon the adjutant general of Kansas, but I have seen a letter from the adjutant general of Kansas—it is true it was some time since—in which that officer attempted to describe the pending bill, and he had an absolute misconception of the whole measure. He criticized it for omissions; and the Senator from Kansas himself will probably remember that when I was shown the criticism of the bill prepared by the adjutant general of Kansas I myself wired him, pointing out specific provisions in the bill providing for the very things which he had said the bill omits.

The adjutant general of a State can go out and tell all the guardsmen of the State that such and such a thing is not in the bill, that the Senate committee bill omits to do a certain thing which is important or that the Senate committee bill inflicts something upon the guard which would be very unfortunate, but before I can have confidence in the opinion of National Guard officers on this question I want to know if they have been told the whole story, and I have yet to meet a guard officer who has been told the whole story who is not enthusiastic for the bill. I know that in many instances those officers have not been told the whole story; that they have never been shown a copy of the bill; that only half the story has been told them.

There is, however, one group of guard officers who have had this story told them, and that is the National Guard Association of the State of New York. That is the biggest and most powerful association of its kind in the United States, just as the National Guard of the State of New York is the largest National Guard.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York suffer one more interruption?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to read first what the New York National Guard Association say.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They held an annual meeting at Albany, N. Y., about a month ago, at which there were over 400 officers present, all of whom were national guardsmen. A great number of them were veterans of the recent war who went abroad with their troops. They discussed this bill, they discussed the treatment of the National Guard as proposed in the bill, and they prepared a statement in the form of a resolution. They indorsed our provision from beginning to end. It may interest the Senator from North Dakota to hear why they are for the bill. They say:

The National Guard Association of the State of New York, assembled in convention in the city of Albany this 20th day of March, 1920, having considered at length the problems affecting the reorganization of the National Guard of the United States, believes and declares, its conviction to be that the National Guard as a national body of citizen soldiery can not be organized under the militia provisions of the Federal Constitution so as to perform adequately and constitutionally the national functions which should be performed by the citizen soldiery of the Nation, and therefore urges upon the Congress that it provide for the reorganization of the National Guard under the Army clause of the Constitution, providing in connection therewith a subordinate State status sufficient to meet the military needs of the States.

The National Guard Association has been moved to adopt this recommendation because the recent history of the country shows that the national emergencies which have required the use of troops in excess of the Regular Army have not been among those prescribed by the Constitution as occasions when the militia may be called for and used by the President. Because, further, it is apparent that the future will present similar occasions when the President in need of troops to meet a national emergency can not, under the Constitution, employ any force of citizen soldiery which suffers the limitations imposed by the militia status.

The National Guard Association of the State of New York concurs in the recommendation of the National Guard Association of the United States that the future efficiency of the National Guard demands that it have its own representation overhead in Washington as a part of the War Department, and believes that such overhead can not constitutionally be appointed by the President nor constitutionally be given authority and jurisdiction to perform their functions in time of peace if the National Guard is continued under the militia provisions of the Constitution which deny the President the authority to appoint officers of the militia in time of peace—

The very thing the guard wants can not be done adequately so long as they are militiamen—

The National Guard Association invites the attention of the Congress to the fact that in the Spanish War the National Guard could not constitutionally be employed as such because of its militia status, and so it became necessary to create a volunteer army and, although the National Guard constituted the mass of such army, they were compelled to enter it as individuals, and the esprit and morale of their units were dissipated in the process of reorganization.

That when the Philippine insurrection necessitated the use of troops in excess of the Regular Army so obvious was it that the National Guard could not be employed as such by reason of their militia status that the War Department was compelled to organize regiments of United States Volunteers to meet that emergency.

That upon the occasion of the Mexican border disturbances, although the Federal Government employed the National Guard as such for the purpose of repelling invasion, nevertheless, even for such purpose, the experience conclusively showed the confusion and delay inseparable from the transfer of men, property, and organization from a State status to an active Federal status, and that in any event before the National Guard could have been employed for the purpose of entering Mexico its officers and men would have had to be drafted as individuals so as to be relieved of their militia status.

I will interject here, Mr. President, that the Congress incorporated such a provision in the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, two weeks before the guard went to the border—a provision authorizing the President to draft them as individuals into the Army of the United States. That constituted an admission on the part of Congress that so long as the guard was in the militia status it suffered that handicap. That provision was put in with the full consent of the guardsmen, who wanted to be eligible to be officers and soldiers of the National Army, the Army of the United States.

That the experience of the World War showed that the National Guard could not be employed therein as a national force until its officers and men were divested of the militia status by being drafted into the Federal Army and discharged from the militia, and that process resulted in delay, confusion, and the impairment of the efficiency of units at a time when their efficiency should have been at the best.

That the termination of the Federal service of the National Guard in the World War necessitated the absolute discharge without any military status and this at a time when its units were at the zenith of their efficiency and esprit as a result of their magnificent battle service abroad.

That in the opinion of the National Guard Association of New York a repetition of this experience in the future can not be prevented by recourse to an amendment of the national defense act—providing for a reinvestment of the militia status immediately upon discharge from the Army for the reason that a voluntary militia status from which men have been released by discharge can not constitutionally be recreated and arbitrarily imposed by statute upon men without their consent and voluntary action given anew.

The very amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas—

That only by reorganizing the National Guard under the Army clause of the Constitution can Congress invest in the Federal Government in time of peace the power to train the National Guard, which is essential if the National Guard is to be something more than an aggregation of State forces and is to assume the rôle of a national body of citizen soldiery.

National Guard officers drew that document. They want to be members of a national body of citizen soldiery. They are perfectly willing to serve their States as State troops whenever the governor calls upon them, but they want to be made national soldiers; they want to have representation in the General Staff here in Washington and in the National Guard Bureau of the War Department. And they know that they can not secure adequate representation on the General Staff or in the War Department unless they can stand upon an equal plane with the Regular officer. So long as they are militia officers they can exercise no authority; the best they can hope to do is to do something in the name of somebody else who has authority. The committee bill provides that they shall have their representation in the overhead at Washington. We are enabled to give it to them because we make them, primarily, officers of the Army of the United States, national soldiers, and, secondarily, officers of the State troops. Until you do this for the guard, upon the outbreak of every difficulty and trouble, upon the outbreak of war or the threat of war it will go through the same experiences it has gone through in the last three instances. Its units will be torn to pieces, the esprit of those old regiments will be dissipated and destroyed and lost, its men scattered, many of its officers rejected and sent back home, and when the Federal Government releases them from the Federal service they will find themselves in the condition in which they found themselves when they were released from this last war—thrown out on the world, belonging to nothing, all their military connections severed; they were not even members of the militia.

Our committee has studied this thing for months. We have consulted with every guard officer we could get hold of. We have consulted with the best lawyers we can find, from the Judge Advocate General's Department, in the War Department, to adjutant generals of the States; and many of the guard officers themselves are lawyers. The Secretary of War says this is the best solution of this problem ever proposed. He said it before the committee when the bill had been finished. Let me just say to the Senator from North Dakota that this meeting in New York of the New York Association of National Guard officers was attended by approximately 400 officers, and when they put this thing to a vote there were only three officers against it.

Mr. GRONNA. But, Mr. President, regardless of whether the bill proposed by the committee is enacted into law or whether the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] is adopted, there necessarily will have to be rules and regulations promulgated by the War Department here in Washington, and some of the men in the States will have to carry out those orders.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do now. That is the trouble; they do now; but the National Guard to-day has no representation at Washington, and it never can get adequate representation so long as the National Guard officer is a militiaman. That has been the complaint of the guard. The complaint of the guard has been that the rules and regulations governing the guard are not drawn with the help of guard officers. They are drawn by the General Staff in the first instance, and are passed up through the committees of the General Staff to the Chief of Staff, and thence to the Secretary of War. No citizen soldier has been consulted in that process; and in some instances the General Staff officers, not being acquainted with the peculiar problems of the National Guard, make mistakes in those regulations, and impose impossible things upon the guard. When the regulations reach the Secretary of War, and meet his approval, he hands them over to the chief of the Militia Division, and he is a Regular officer, and he promulgates the regulations through all the States. Now, we propose to have National Guard officers on the General Staff, and a National Guard officer at the head of the National Guard Bureau.

Mr. GRONNA. I fully agree with the Senator from New York that there were a good many disappointments among officers of the National Guard and of the militia during the late war, and for the reasons which the Senator has so well stated; but there is another phase to be considered with reference to this question. We have been talking simply about the officers. I wanted the Senator's opinion as to the possibility and the probability of the men who are not officers entering the National Guard under these new conditions. The Senator, of course, knows that the compulsory training provision has been stricken from the bill, and we now have a voluntary provision in place of it. The National Guard has been a very popular institution with the young men of the States. They have always desired to belong to the National Guard or to the militia. In the judgment of the Senator, will that same sentiment prevail when it is known that they belong to the Regular Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They will not belong to the Regular Army.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, it is in fact belonging to the Regular Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; they will not.

Mr. GRONNA. They will be at the command of the Chief Executive of the Nation at any time if the bill which is before us now is enacted into law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, they are not at the command at any time of the Chief Executive of the Nation—only for specific purposes; and they are in that situation to-day, only they are called out as militiamen by the President.

Mr. GRONNA. Then why not continue the plan, and simply improve upon it, making universal regulations to be followed by all the officers of the National Guards throughout all the States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. But, Mr. President, the trouble is that you can make regulations uniform and universal all you want, but the guardsman can not take part in making up those regulations until you give him the requisite status which will enable him to sit down with authority with the Regular officers.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me see if the Senator and I can agree on one thing. These men who go into the Army will be recognized as troops if this bill is passed, will they not? In all respects they will be recognized as troops?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As part of the reserve Army of the United States, yes—as soldiers, not as troops.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator believe that the institution will be as popular among the young men throughout the various States as the National Guard has been?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir; more so.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, if the Senator believes that, and that under our scheme of voluntary training there will be no difficulty in getting all the young men we want to enter the service, the Senator knows so much more about military affairs than I do that I certainly shall not set up my judgment against his. I was of the opinion that from the very fact that from now on every soldier, regardless of whether he is an officer or what we call an enlisted man, will belong to the national troops, it might not be as popular, he might not take to it as well as he would if it were a State institution affiliated with the Regular Army, he might not be as willing to enter the service, because, as the Senator has explained, the militia for certain specific purposes can be recognized and ordered as a body doing national work. I fear, Mr. President, that from the very fact that the men will know that they are regarded as Federal troops, that in times of peace as well as in times of war from now on we will have stationed within the borders of every State in the Union troops of the Regular Army, the service may not be as popular as it has been in the past.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If that were true, Mr. President, I would tear up this bill and throw it out of the window. It does not do that thing at all, however. The obligation of the soldier of the National Guard of the United States, as provided for in this bill, is in the aggregate exactly what a militiaman's obligation is to-day; but he performs that obligation upon a different status; that is all.

Mr. GRONNA. But the Senator wants to be fair. The Senator has just stated that this bill, in compliance with the Constitution, permits troops in times of peace within each and every State. The Senator has just made that statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but if the Senator will examine the bill, he will find that the obligations imposed upon the National Guard of the United States are limited. They can not be called out at any time by the President for any purpose. They can only be called out to suppress insurrection and to repel invasion; and when war is declared by Congress they can then be called out for any purpose. Surely there is nothing objectionable in that.

The Senator has stated that they are to be a part of the Regulars. They will not be a part of the Regulars. The Regular is a man who is a soldier 365 days in the year, who lives in barracks, or who is patrolling the border, or in the Philippines, or in Panama. These guardsmen are to live the life of civilians, just as the present National Guardsman does. The term of enlistment is exactly the same as that of the present National Guard. The number per congressional district is exactly the same as under existing law. The drill pay is exactly the same as is provided by the House bill. Everything is exactly the same, except that his primary obligation is that of a Federal soldier, and his secondary obligation is that of a State soldier. To-day it is the other way around. It makes no difference to the enlisted man which oath he takes first if his obligations are the same and if his term of enlistment is the same. The kind of duty he has to perform is the same. The officers over him are the same. There is no difference whatsoever; but by changing the status we have given these officers and enlisted men an opportunity to take part in the management of their own affairs here at Washington, and until you give them that new status they never can have it.

That is what they want. They believe they have been discriminated against. They believe they have been exploited. They believe they have been ignored by certain Regular Army officers. If that is true, it is because the regulations drawn here in Washington governing the guard itself in its present status are drawn without consulting guard officers.

We propose to put the guard on its feet and to preserve it to the use of the States. It will not change the numbers of the regiments. It will not change their locality. It will not change their general composition. The Sixty-ninth New York will still be the Sixty-ninth New York, and whatever is the famous organization in North Dakota will remain the same organization, with the same men, the same officers; no change at all from any of the things which from the practical side affect the feeling of the soldier or the feeling of the locality. The National Guard of the United States will not be stationed among the States in the way that the Senator suggested a moment ago. It will be composed of the citizens of the States, just as it is to-day. We make no change.

Mr. GRONNA. They will belong to the Regular Army, however.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; they will not belong to the Regular Army. They will be subject to none of the obligations of the Regular Army. They can not be commanded by the Regular Army. The terms of this bill provide that no Regular officer can be placed in command of National Guard troops without the consent of the governor of the State. We have protected them from the Regular Army. If they have been subject to abuse and exploitation in the past, we have protected them for the future.

Mr. GRONNA. So that in reality the only officer who will be shorn of his power will be the adjutant general of the State?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The only officers in the whole military scheme of America that lose anything by this change in the status of the National Guard are the adjutants general of the States. The guard officers acquire increased power. They are enabled by this bill to get representation at Washington, and the Federal Government can not send a Regular to your State and put him in command of one of your National Guard units under the terms of this bill unless the governor of North Dakota gives his consent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They can do that now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With the consent of the governor. The President, under this bill, can not name the officers of the National Guard in the State of Mississippi unless the governor of Mississippi recommends those officers to the President. So we are not "regularizing" the National Guard. We are putting it on a sound basis, where it will become an even more valuable part of the national defense, and at the same time we protect the States in their needs for police protection at home.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the amendments offered by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The Secretary will read the amendments.

The READING CLERK. Strike out sections 58 to 64 and 66 to 73, both inclusive, as amended, and section 7 as amended. Also in section 2, line 8, the words "The National Guard of the United States," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. Until July 1, 1921, companies and corresponding units of the National Guard may be recognized at a minimum enlisted strength of 50 and thereafter the minimum enlisted strength necessary for the recognition of a company of infantry shall be sixty-five: Provided, That the National Guard of any State, Territory, and the District of Columbia may include such detachments or parts of units as may be necessary in order to form complete tactical units when combined with troops of other States.

SEC. 3. Original enlistments in the National Guard shall be for a period of three years and subsequent enlistments for periods of one year each: Provided, That persons who have served in the Army for not less than six months, and have been honorably discharged therefrom, may, within two years after the passage of this act, enlist in the National Guard for a period of one year and reenlist for like periods.

SEC. 4. Men enlisting in the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall sign an enlistment contract and subscribe to the following oath of enlistment: "I do hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted this ——— day of ———, 19—, as a soldier in the National Guard of the United States and of the State of ———, for the period of three (or one) year–, under the conditions prescribed by law, unless sooner discharged by proper authority. And I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America and to the State of ———, and that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and of the governor of the State of ———, and of the officers appointed over me according to law and the rules and Articles of War."

SEC. 5. Discharge of enlisted men from the National Guard: An enlisted man discharged from service in the National Guard, except when drafted into the military service of the United States under the provisions of section 111 of this act, shall receive a discharge in writing in such form and with such classification as is or shall be prescribed for the Regular Army, and in time of peace discharges may be given prior to the expiration of terms of enlistment under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 6. Qualifications for National Guard officers: Persons hereafter commissioned as officers of the National Guard shall not be recognized as such under any of the provisions of this act unless they shall have been selected from the following classes and shall have taken and subscribed to the oath of office prescribed in the preceding section of this act: Officers or enlisted men of the National Guard; officers, active or retired, reserve officers, and former officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who have received an honorable discharge therefrom; graduates of the United States Military and Naval Academies; and graduates of schools, colleges, universities, and officers' training camps, where they have received military instruction under the supervision of an officer of the Regular Army who certifies their fitness for appointment as commissioned officers; and for the technical branches or Staff Corps and departments, such other civilians as may be specially qualified for duty therein.

SEC. 7. That hereafter men duly qualified under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War may enlist in the National Guard Reserve for a period of one or three years, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and on so enlisting they shall subscribe to the following enlistment contract and take the oath therein specified: "I do hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted this ——— day of ———, 19—, as a soldier in the National Guard Reserve of the United States and of the State of ———, for the period of one (or three) year—, unless sooner discharged by proper authority, and I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America and to the State of ———, and that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the governor of the State of ———, and of the officers appointed over me according to law and the rules and Articles of War": Provided, That members of said reserve, officers and enlisted men, when engaged in field or coast-defense training with the active National Guard, shall receive the same Federal pay and allowances as those occupying like grades on the active list of said guard when likewise engaged: Provided further, That, except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, no commissioned or enlisted reservist shall receive any pay or allowances out of any appropriation made by Congress for National Guard purposes.

SEC. 8. All vacancies occurring in any grade of commissioned officers in any organization in the military service of the United States and composed of persons drafted from the National Guard under the provision of this act shall be filled by the President by the appointment of persons similarly taken from said guard, and in the manner prescribed by law for filling similar vacancies occurring in the volunteer forces.

SEC. 9. The National Guard Division of the War Department is hereby established. Such division shall be under the direct supervision of the Secretary of War and shall not form a part of any other division, bureau, office, or other organization of the War Department. The chief of the same shall report direct to the Secretary of War and shall be responsible only to the Secretary of War. The National Guard Division shall consist of one Chief of the National Guard Division and such officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard as the President may direct. The Chief of the National Guard Division shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among officers of the National Guard who have had 10 or more years' commissioned service in the National Guard, at least 5 of which has been in the line. He shall hold office for 4 years unless sooner removed and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general of the Regular Army during his tenure of office, but shall not be entitled to retirement or retired pay. Details of officers to the National Guard Division by the President shall be upon the recommendation of the Chief of the Militia Bureau. One-half of the officers detailed to the National Guard Division shall be selected from the officers of the National Guard who have served therein for not less than 1 year subsequent to June 3, 1916. No retired officer and no officer with a rank exceeding that of colonel shall be detailed to the National Guard Division. National Guard officers detailed under this section shall be entitled to the pay and allowances of officers of the Regular Army of like grade and service. The National Guard Division under the supervision of the Secretary of War shall have charge and supervision of all National Guard affairs. The chief of such division shall have charge of the organization, supply, and instruction of the National Guard of the several States, and shall submit estimates for the necessary appropriations to provide for the equipment and maintenance of the same.

The President may also assign, with their consent, and within the limits of the appropriations previously made for this specific purpose, not exceeding 500 officers of the National Guard to duty with the Regular Army, in addition to those attending service schools; and while so assigned they shall receive the same pay and allowances as Regular Army officers of like grades, to be paid out of the whole fund appropriated for the support of the militia.

SEC. 10. Animals for National Guard: Funds allotted by the Secretary of War for the support of the National Guard shall be available for the purchase, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, of animals conforming to the Regular Army standards for the training of the National Guard, said animals to remain the property of the United States and to be used solely for military purposes.

The number of animals so issued shall not exceed 32 for each battery of Field Artillery or troop of Cavalry, and a proportionate number for other mounted organizations, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and the Secretary of War is further authorized to issue, in lieu of purchase, for the training of such organizations, condemned Army animals which are no longer fit for service, but which may be suitable for the purposes of instruction, such animals to be sold as now provided by law when said purposes shall have been served.

SEC. 11. Funds allotted by the Secretary of War for the support of the National Guard shall be available for the purchase and issue of forage, bedding, shoeing, and veterinary services, and supplies for the Government animals issued to any organization, and for the compensation of competent help for the care of the material, animals, and equipment thereof, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the men to be compensated, not to exceed five for each organization, shall be duly enlisted therein and shall be detailed by the organization commander, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and shall be paid by the United States disbursing officer in each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 12. Pay for National Guard officers: Captains and lieutenants belonging to organizations of the National Guard shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly base pay of their grades as prescribed for the Regular Army for each regular drill or other period of instruction authorized by the Secretary of War, not exceeding five in any one calendar month, at which they shall have been officially present for the entire required period, and at which at least 50 per cent of the commissioned strength and 60 per cent of the enlisted strength attend and participate for not less than one and one-half hours. Captains commanding organizations shall receive $240 a year in addition to any other pay herein prescribed. Officers above the grade of captain shall receive $500 a year, and officers below the grade of major, not belonging to organizations, shall receive four-thirtieths of the monthly base pay of their grades for satisfactory performance of their appropriate duties under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. Drill pay under the provisions of this section shall not accrue to any officer during a period when he shall be lawfully entitled to the same pay as an officer of corresponding grade in the Regular Army: Provided, That section 9 of an act amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, approved August 31, 1918, shall also apply to the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment for cash by officers of the National Guard and National Guard Reserve, whether in State or Federal service, on proper identification and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

SEC. 13. Pay for National Guard enlisted men: Each enlisted man belonging to an organization of the National Guard shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the initial monthly pay of his grade in the Regular Army for each drill ordered for his organization where he is officially present and in which he participates for not less than 1½ hours, not exceeding 8 in any one calendar month, and not exceeding 60 drills in 1 year: Provided, That no enlisted man shall receive any pay under the provisions of this section for any month in which he shall have attended less than 60 per cent of the drills or other exercises prescribed for his organization: Provided further, That the proviso contained in section 92 of this act shall not operate to prevent the payment of enlisted men actually present at any duly ordered drill or other exercise: And provided further, That periods of any actual military duty equivalent to the drills herein prescribed (except those periods of service for which members of the National Guard may become lawfully entitled to the same pay as officers and enlisted men of the corresponding grades in the Regular Army) may be accepted as service in lieu of such drills when so provided by the Secretary of War. Payments for services rendered under sections 109 and 110 shall be made during the month following that in which such compensation was earned, upon pay rolls prepared and authenticated in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of War. All amounts appropriated for the purpose of the two preceding sections shall be disbursed and accounted for by the officers and agents of the Quartermaster Corps of the Army or by the State property and disbursing officer, as the Secretary of War may direct. The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, cause to be deposited such sum as may be necessary to pay the troops of a State, Territory, or District under this section with the State property and disbursing officer, who shall disburse and account for the same under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War. Stoppages may be made against the compensation payable to any officer or enlisted man hereunder to cover the cost of public property lost, damaged, or destroyed by and chargeable to such officer or enlisted man.

SEC. 14. National Guard when drafted into Federal service: When Congress shall have authorized the use of armed land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army, the President may, under such regulations, including such physical examination, as he may prescribe, draft into the military service of the United States, to serve therein for the period of the war or emergency, unless sooner discharged, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve. The status of all persons so drafted shall be changed automatically on the date such draft takes effect from service under the dual oath to an exclusive United States service. On the termination of the emergency all former National Guard officers and men shall be relieved from service under the draft, and upon being relieved shall revert automatically to their previous National Guard status, and shall be credited on their National Guard service for all time served in the Army of the United States. They shall from said date of draft be subject to such laws and regulations for the government of the Army of the United States as may be applicable to members of the Army, and shall be organized into units corresponding as far as practicable to those of the Regular Army or shall be otherwise assigned as the President may direct. The commissioned officers of said organizations shall be appointed from among the members thereof; officers with rank not above that of colonel to be appointed by the President alone, and all other officers to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Officers and enlisted men while in the service of the United States under the terms of this section shall have the same pay and allowances as officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army of the same grades and the same prior service: Provided, however, That when any member of the National Guard becomes entitled, for a continuous period of less than one month, to Federal pay at the rates fixed for the Regular Army, whether by virtue of a call by the President, of attendance at school or maneuvers, or of any other cause, he shall receive such pay for each day of such period, and the thirty-first day of a calendar month shall not be excluded from the computation.

SEC. 15. That section 89 be amended by striking out the figures 57, 58, and 59, in line 18, and all of lines 19, 20, 21, and 22.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask for the adoption of the amendments just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to offer as an amendment to the bill what was originally known as Senate bill 64.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's amendment was, on page 101 of the bill, after line 3, to insert:

CHAPTER II.

Articles of War.

SEC. 1. The articles included in this section shall be known as the Articles of War, and shall at all times and in all places govern the armies of the United States.

I. PRELIMINARY PROVISIONS.

ART. 1. Definitions: The following words when used in these articles shall be construed in the sense indicated in this article, unless the context shows that a different sense is intended, namely:

(a) The word "officer" shall be construed to refer to a commissioned officer;

(b) The word "soldier" shall be construed as including a noncommissioned officer, a private, or any enlisted man;
(c) The word "company" shall be understood as including a troop or battery; and
(d) The word "battalion" shall be understood as including a squadron.

ART. 2. Persons subject to military law: The following persons are subject to these articles and shall be understood as included in the term "any person subject to military law," or "persons subject to military law," whenever used in these articles: Provided, That nothing contained in this act, except as specifically provided in article 2, subparagraph (c), shall be construed to apply to any person under the United States naval jurisdiction unless otherwise specifically provided by law.
(a) All officers and soldiers belonging to the Regular Army of the United States: All volunteers, from the dates of their muster or acceptance into the military service of the United States; and all other persons lawfully called, drafted, or ordered into, or to duty or for training in, the said service, from the dates they are required by the terms of the call, draft, or order to obey the same;
(b) Cadets;
(c) Officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the armies of the United States by order of the President: Provided, That an officer or soldier of the Marine Corps, when so detached, may be tried by military court-martial for an offense committed against the laws for the government of the naval service prior to his detachment, and for an offense committed against these articles he may be tried by a naval court-martial after such detachment ceases;
(d) All retainers to the camp and all persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and in time of war all such retainers and persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States in the field, both within and without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, though not otherwise subject to these articles;
(e) All persons under sentence adjudged by courts-martial;
(f) All persons admitted into the Regular Army Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C.

II. COURTS-MARTIAL.

ART. 3. Courts-martial classified: Courts-martial shall be of three kinds, namely:
First, general courts-martial;
Second, special courts-martial; and Third, summary courts-martial.

A. COMPOSITION.

ART. 4. Who may serve on courts-martial: All officers in the military service of the United States, and officers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the Army by order of the President, shall be competent to serve on courts-martial for the trial of any persons who may lawfully be brought before such courts for trial. When appointing courts-martial the appointing authority shall detail as members thereof those officers of the command who, in his opinion, are best qualified for the duty by reason of age, training, experience, and judicial temperament; and officers having less than two years' service shall not, if it can be avoided without manifest injury to the service, be appointed as members of courts-martial in excess of the minority membership thereof.

ART. 5. General courts-martial: General courts-martial may consist of any number of officers not less than five.

ART. 6. Special courts-martial: Special courts-martial may consist of any number of officers not less than three.

ART. 7. Summary courts-martial: A summary court-martial shall consist of one officer.

B. BY WHOM APPOINTED.

ART. 8. General courts-martial: The President of the United States, the commanding officer of a territorial division or department, the Superintendent of the Military Academy, the commanding officer of an army, an army corps, a division, or a separate brigade, and, when empowered by the President, the commanding officer of any district or of any force or body of troops may appoint general courts-martial; but when any such commander is the accuser or the prosecutor of the person or persons to be tried, the court shall be appointed by superior competent authority, and no officer shall be eligible to sit as a member of such court when he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution.

The authority appointing a general court-martial shall detail as one of the members thereof a law member, who shall be an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department, except that when an officer of that department is not available for the purpose the appointing authority shall detail instead an officer of some other branch of the service selected by the appointing authority as specially qualified to perform the duties of law member. The law member, in addition to his duties as a member, shall perform such other duties as the President may by regulations prescribe.

ART. 9. Special courts-martial: The commanding officer of a district, garrison, fort, camp, or other place where troops are on duty, and the commanding officer of a brigade, regiment, detached battalion, or other detached command may appoint special courts-martial; but when any such commanding officer is the accuser or the prosecutor of the person or persons to be tried, the court shall be appointed by superior authority, and may in any case be appointed by superior authority when by the latter deemed desirable; and no officer shall be eligible to sit as a member of such court when he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution.

ART. 10. Summary courts-martial: The commanding officer of a garrison, fort, camp, or other place where troops are on duty, and the commanding officer of a regiment, detached battalion, detached company, or other detachment may appoint summary courts-martial; but such summary courts-martial may in any case be appointed by superior authority when by the latter deemed desirable: Provided, That when but one officer is present with a command he shall be the summary court-martial of that command and shall hear and determine cases brought before him.

ART. 11. Appointment of trial judge advocates and counsel: For each general or special court-martial the authority appointing the court shall appoint a trial judge advocate and defense counsel, and for each general court-martial one or more assistant trial judge advocates and one or more assistant defense counsel when necessary: Provided, however, That no officer who has acted as a member, trial judge advocate, assistant trial judge advocate, defense counsel, or assistant defense counsel in any case shall subsequently act as staff judge advocate to the reviewing or confirming authority upon the same case.

C. JURISDICTION.

ART. 12. General courts-martial: General courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense made punishable by these articles, and any other person who by the law of war is subject to trial by military tribunals: Provided, That no officer shall be brought to trial before a general court-martial appointed by the Superintendent of the Military Academy: Provided further, That the officer competent to appoint a general court-martial for the trial of any particular case may, when in his judgment the interest of the service shall so require, cause any case to be tried by a special court-martial notwithstanding the limitations upon the jurisdiction of the special court-martial as to offenses set out in article 13; but the limitations upon jurisdiction as to persons and upon punishing power set out in said article shall be observed.

ART. 13. Special courts-martial: Special courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense not capital made punishable by these articles: Provided, That the President may, by regulations, except from the jurisdiction of special courts-martial any class or classes of persons subject to military law.

Special courts-martial shall not have power to adjudge confinement in excess of six months, nor to adjudge forfeiture of more than two-thirds pay per month for a period of not exceeding six months.

ART. 14. Summary courts-martial: Summary courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law, except an officer, a cadet, or a soldier holding the privileges of a certificate of eligibility to promotion, for any crime or offense not capital made punishable by these articles: Provided, That noncommissioned officers shall not, if they object thereto, be brought to trial before a summary court-martial without the authority of the officer competent to bring them to trial before a general court-martial: Provided further, That the President may, by regulations, except from the jurisdiction of summary courts-martial any class or classes of persons subject to military law.

Summary courts shall have power to adjudge one or more of the following punishments: Confinement for not more than one month, restriction to limits for not more than three months, forfeiture or detention of two-thirds of one month's pay, and reduction in grade of noncommissioned officers and privates of the line of the Army: Provided, That the President may, by regulations which he may modify from time to time, except from the jurisdiction of summary courts-martial any class or classes of persons subject to military law.

ART. 15. Jurisdiction not exclusive. The provisions of these articles conferring jurisdiction upon courts-martial shall not be construed as depriving military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals of concurrent jurisdiction in respect of offenders or offenses that by statute or by the law of war may be triable by such military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals.

ART. 16. Officers—how triable: Officers shall be triable only by general and special courts-martial, and in no case shall an officer, when it can be avoided, be tried by officers inferior to him in rank.

D. PROCEDURE.

ART. 17. Trial judge advocate to prosecute—counsel to defend: The trial judge advocate of a general or special court-martial shall prosecute in the name of the United States, and shall, under the direction of the court, prepare the record of its proceedings. The accused shall have the right to be represented in his defense before the court by counsel of his own selection, civil counsel if he so provides, or military if such counsel be reasonably available, otherwise by the defense counsel duly appointed for the court pursuant to article 11. Should the accused have counsel for his own selection, the defense counsel and assistant defense counsel, if any, of the court, shall, if the accused so desires, act as his associate counsel.

ART. 18. Challenges: Members of a general or special court-martial may be challenged by the accused or judge advocate for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity thereof, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time. Challenges by the judge advocate shall ordinarily be presented and decided before those by the accused are offered. Each side shall be entitled to one peremptory challenge.

ART. 19. Oaths: The trial judge advocate of a general or special court-martial shall administer to the members of the court, before they proceed upon any trial, the following oath or affirmation: "You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will well and truly try and determine, according to the evidence, the matter now before you, between the United States of America and the person to be tried, and that you will duly administer justice, without partiality, favor, or affection, according to the provisions of the rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States, and if any doubt should arise, not explained by said articles, then according to your conscience, the best of your understanding, and the custom of war in like cases; and you do further swear (or affirm) that you will not divulge the findings or sentence of the court until they shall be published by the proper authority or duly announced by the court, except to the trial judge advocate and assistant trial judge advocate; neither will you disclose or discover the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court-martial upon a challenge or upon the findings or sentence, unless required to give evidence thereof as a witness by a court of justice in due course of law. So help you God."

When the oath or affirmation has been administered to the members of a general or special court-martial, the president of the court shall administer to the trial judge advocate and to each assistant trial judge advocate, if any, an oath or affirmation in the following form: "You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will faithfully and impartially perform the duties of a trial judge advocate, and will not divulge the findings or sentence of the court to any but the proper authority until they shall be duly disclosed. So help you God."

All persons who give evidence before a court-martial shall be examined on oath or affirmation in the following form: "You swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give in the case now in hearing shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God."

Every reporter of the proceedings of a court-martial shall, before entering upon his duties, make oath or affirmation in the following form: "You swear (or affirm) that you will faithfully perform the duties of reporter to this court. So help you God."

Every interpreter in the trial of any case before a court-martial shall, before entering upon his duties, make oath or affirmation in the following form: "You swear (or affirm) that you will truly interpret in the case now in hearing. So help you God."

In the case of affirmation the closing sentence of adjuration will be omitted.

ART. 20. Continuances: A court-martial may, for reasonable cause, grant a continuance to either party for such time and as often as may appear to be just.

ART. 21. Refusal or failure to plead: When an accused arraigned before a court-martial fails or refuses to plead or answers foreign to the purpose, or after a plea of guilty makes a statement inconsistent with the plea, or makes a plea of guilty improvidently or through lack of understanding of its meaning and effect, the court shall enter a plea of not guilty and shall thereupon proceed accordingly.

ART. 22. Process to obtain witnesses: Every trial judge advocate of a general or special court-martial and every summary court-martial shall have power to issue the like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which courts of the United States, having criminal jurisdiction, may lawfully issue; but such process shall run to any part of the United States, its Territories, and possessions.

ART. 23. Refusal to appear or testify: Every person not subject to military law who, being duly subpœnaed to appear as a witness before any military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, or before any officer, military or civil, designated to take a deposition to be read in evidence before such court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness, or to testify, or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpœnaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished on information in the district court of the United States or in a court of original criminal jurisdiction in any of the Territorial possessions of the United States, jurisdiction being hereby conferred upon such courts for such purpose; and it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney or the officer prosecuting for the Government in any such court of original criminal jurisdiction, on the certification of the facts to him by the military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, to file an information against and prosecute the person so offending, and the punishment of such person, on conviction, shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That the fees of such witness and his mileage, at the rates allowed to witnesses attending the courts of the United States, shall be duly paid or tendered said witness, such amounts to be paid out of the appropriation for the compensation of witnesses.

ART. 24. Compulsory self-incrimination prohibited: No witness before a military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, or before any officer conducting an investigation, or before any officer, military or civil, designated to take a deposition to be read in evidence before a military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, or before an officer conducting an investigation, shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any question the answer to which may tend to incriminate him, or to answer any question not material to the issue when such answer might tend to degrade him.

ART. 25. Depositions—when admissible: A duly authenticated deposition taken upon reasonable notice to the opposite party may be read in evidence before any military court or commission in any case not capital, or in any proceeding before a court of inquiry or a military board, if such deposition be taken when the witness resides, is found, or is about to go beyond the State, Territory, or District in which the court, commission, or board is ordered to sit, or beyond the distance of 100 miles from the place of trial or hearing, or when it appears to the satisfaction of the court, commission, board, or appointing authority that the witness, by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, imprisonment, or other reasonable cause, is unable to appear and testify in person at the place of trial or hearing: Provided, That testimony by deposition may be adduced for the defense in capital cases.

ART. 26. Depositions—before whom taken: Depositions to be read in evidence before military courts, commissions, courts of inquiry, or military boards, or for other use in military administration, may be taken before and authenticated by any officer, military or civil, authorized by the laws of the United States or by the laws of the place where the deposition is taken to administer oaths.

ART. 27. Courts of inquiry—records of, when admissible: The record of the proceedings of a court of inquiry may, with the consent of the defendant, be read in evidence before any court-martial or military commission in any case not capital nor extending to the dismissal of an officer, and may also be read in evidence in any proceeding before a court of inquiry or a military board: Provided, That such evidence may be adduced by the defense in capital cases or cases extending to the dismissal of an officer.

ART. 28. Certain acts to constitute desertion: Any officer who, having tendered his resignation and prior to due notice of the acceptance of the same, quits his post or proper duties without leave and with intent to absent himself permanently therefrom shall be deemed a deserter.

Any soldier who, without having first received a regular discharge, again enlists in the Army, or in the militia when in the service of the United States, or in the Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, or in any foreign army, shall be deemed to have deserted the service of the United States; and, where the enlistment is in one of the forces of the United States mentioned above, to have fraudulently enlisted therein.

Any person subject to military law who quits his organization or place of duty with the intent to avoid hazardous duty or to shirk important service shall be deemed a deserter.

ART. 29. Court to announce action: Whenever the court has acquitted the accused upon all specifications and charges, the court shall at once announce such result in open court. Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, the findings and sentence in other cases may be similarly announced.

ART. 30. Closed sessions: Whenever a general or special court-martial shall sit in closed session, the trial judge advocate and the assistant trial judge advocate, if any, shall withdraw; and when their legal advice or their assistance in referring to the recorded evidence is required, it shall be obtained in open court, and in the presence of the accused and of his counsel, if there be any.

ART. 31. Method of voting: Voting by members of a general or special court-martial upon questions of challenge, on the findings, and on the sentence shall be by secret written ballot. The junior member of the court shall in each case count the votes, which count shall be checked by the president, who will forthwith announce the result of the ballot to the members of the court. The law member of the court, if any, or if there be no law member of the court, then the president, may rule in open court upon interlocutory questions, other than challenges, arising during the proceedings.

ART. 32. Contempts: A military tribunal may punish as for contempt any person who uses any menacing words, signs, or gestures in its presence, or who disturbs its proceedings by any riot or disorder: Provided, That such punishment shall in no case exceed one month's confinement or a fine of $100, or both.

ART. 33. Records—general courts-martial: Each general court-martial shall keep a separate record of its proceedings in the trial of each case brought before it, and such record shall be authenticated by the signatures of the president and the trial judge advocate; but in case the record can not be authenticated by the president and trial judge advocate, by reason of the death, disability, or absence of either or both of them, it shall be signed by a member in lieu of the president and by an assistant trial judge advocate, if there be one, in lieu of the trial judge advocate; otherwise by another member of the court.

ART. 34. Records—special and summary courts-martial: Each special court-martial and each summary court-martial shall keep a record of its proceedings, separate for each case, which record shall contain such matter and be authenticated in such manner as may be required by regulations which the President may from time to time prescribe.

ART. 35. Disposition of records—general courts-martial: The judge advocate of each general court-martial shall, with such expedition as circumstances may permit, forward to the appointing authority or to his successor in command the original record of the proceedings of such court in the trial of each case. All records of such proceedings shall, after having been finally acted upon, be transmitted to the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

ART. 36. Disposition of records—special and summary courts-martial: After having been acted upon by the officer appointing the court, or by the officer commanding for the time being, the record of each trial by special court-martial and a report of each trial by summary court-martial shall be transmitted to such general headquarters as the President may designate in regulations, there to be filed in the office of the judge advocate. When no longer of use, records of summary courts-martial may be destroyed.

ART. 37. Irregularities—effects of: The proceedings of a court-martial shall not be held invalid, nor the findings or sentence disapproved, in any case on the ground of improper admission or rejection of evidence or for any error as to any matter of pleading or procedure unless, in the opinion of the reviewing or confirming authority, after an examination of the entire proceedings, it shall appear that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of an accused: Provided, That the act or omission upon which the accused has been tried constitutes an offense denounced and made punishable by one or more of these articles: Provided further, That the omission of the words "hard labor" in any sentence of a court-martial adjudging imprisonment or confinement shall not be construed as depriving the authorities executing such sentence of imprisonment or confinement of the power to require hard labor as a part of the punishment in any case where it is authorized by the Executive order prescribing maximum punishments.

ART. 38. President may prescribe rules: The President may, by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, prescribe the procedure, including modes of proof, in cases before courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and other military tribunals, which regulations shall, in so far as he shall deem practicable, apply the rules of evidence generally recognized in the trial of criminal cases in the district courts of the United States: Provided, That nothing contrary to or inconsistent with these articles shall be so prescribed: Provided further, That all rules made in pursuance of this article shall be laid before the Congress annually.

E. LIMITATIONS UPON PROSECUTIONS.

ART. 39. As to time: Except for desertion committed in time of war, or for mutiny or murder, no person subject to military law shall be liable to be tried or punished by a court-martial for any crime or offense committed more than two years before the arraignment of such person: Provided, That for desertion in time of peace or for any crime or offense punishable under articles 93 and 94 of this code the period of limitations upon trial and punishment by court-martial shall be three years: Provided further, That the period of any absence of the accused from the jurisdiction of the United States, and also any period during which by reason of some manifest impediment the accused shall not have been amenable to military justice, shall be excluded in computing the aforesaid periods of limitation: And provided further, That this article shall not have the effect to authorize the trial or punishment for any crime or offense barred by the provisions of existing law.

ART. 40. As to number: No person shall, without his consent, be tried a second time for the same offense; but no proceeding in which an accused has been found guilty by a court-martial upon any charge or specification shall be held to be a trial in the sense of this article until the reviewing and, if there be one, the confirming authority shall have taken final action upon the case.

No authority shall return a record of trial to any court-martial for reconsideration of—

(a) An acquittal; or

(b) A finding of not guilty of any specification; or

(c) A finding of not guilty of any charge, unless the record shows a finding of guilty under a specification laid under that charge, which sufficiently alleges a violation of some article of war; or

(d) The sentence originally imposed, with a view to increasing its severity, unless such sentence is less than the mandatory sentence fixed by law for the offense or offenses upon which a conviction has been had.

And no court-martial, in any proceedings on revision, shall reconsider its finding or sentence in any particular in which a return of the record of trial for such reconsideration is hereinbefore prohibited.

F. PUNISHMENTS.

ART. 41. Cruel and unusual punishments prohibited: Cruel and unusual punishments of every kind, including flogging, branding, marking, or tattooing on the body, are prohibited.

ART. 42. Places of confinement—when lawful: Except for desertion in time of war, repeated desertion in time of peace, and mutiny, no person shall, under the sentence of a court-martial, be punished by confinement in a penitentiary unless an act or omission of which he is convicted is recognized as an offense of a civil nature and so punishable by penitentiary confinement for more than one year by some statute of the United States of general application within the continental United States, excepting section 289, Penal Code of the United States, 1910, or by the law of the District of Columbia, or by way of commutation of a death sentence, and unless also the period of confinement authorized and adjudged by such court-martial is more than one year: Provided, That when a sentence of confinement is adjudged by a court-martial upon conviction of two or more acts or omissions any one of which is punishable under these articles by confinement in a penitentiary, the entire sentence of confinement may be executed in a penitentiary: Provided further, That penitentiary confinement hereby authorized may be served in any penitentiary directly or indirectly under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided further, That persons sentenced to dishonorable discharge and to confinement not in a penitentiary shall be confined in the United States Disciplinary Barracks or elsewhere as the Secretary of War or the reviewing authority may direct, but not in a penitentiary.

ART. 43. Death sentence—when lawful: No person shall, by general court-martial, be convicted of an offense for which the death penalty is made mandatory by law, nor sentenced to suffer death, except by the concurrence of all the members of said court-martial, and for an offense in these articles expressly made punishable by death: Provided, however, That any penalty other than death may be imposed by three-fourths of the members of said court-martial. All other convictions and sentences, whether by general or special court-martial, may be determined by a two-thirds vote of those members present at the time the vote is taken. All other questions shall be determined by a majority vote.

ART. 44. Cowardice; fraud—accessory penalty: When an officer is dismissed from the service for cowardice or fraud, the crime, punishment, name, and place of abode of the delinquent shall be published in the newspapers in and about the camp and in the State from which the offender came or where he usually resides; and after such publication it shall be scandalous for an officer to associate with him.

ART. 45. Maximum limits: Whenever the punishment for a crime or offense made punishable by these articles is left to the discretion of the court-martial, the punishment shall not exceed such limit or limits as the President may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That in time of peace the period of confinement in a penitentiary shall in no case exceed the maximum period prescribed in law which, under article 42 of these articles, permits confinement in a penitentiary, unless in addition to the offense so punishable under such law the accused shall have been convicted at the same time of one or more purely military offenses.

C. ACTION BY APPOINTING OR SUPERIOR AUTHORITY.

ART. 46. Action by convening authority: Under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President, every record of trial by general court-martial or military commission, received by a reviewing or confirming authority, shall be referred by him before he acts thereon to his staff judge advocate or to the Judge Advocate General. No sentence of a court-martial shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by the officer appointing the court or by the officer commanding for the time being.

ART. 47. Powers incident to power to approve: The power to approve the sentence of a court-martial shall be held to include:

(a) The power to approve or disapprove a finding and to approve only so much of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when, in the opinion of the authority having power to approve, the evidence of record requires a finding of only the lesser degree of guilt; and

(b) The power to approve or disapprove the whole or any part of the sentence.

ART. 48. Confirmation—when required: In addition to the approval required by article 46, confirmation by the President is required in the following cases before the sentence of a court-martial is carried into execution, namely:

(a) Any sentence respecting a general officer;

(b) Any sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer, except that in time of war a sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer below the grade of brigadier general may be carried into execution upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the territorial department or division;

(c) Any sentence extending to the suspension or dismissal of a cadet; and

(d) Any sentence of death, except in the cases of persons convicted in time of war of murder, rape, mutiny, desertion, or as spies; and in such excepted cases a sentence of death may be carried into execution, subject to the provisions of article 50½, upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the territorial department or division.

When the authority competent to confirm the sentence has already acted as the approving authority no additional confirmation by him is necessary.

ART. 49. Powers incident to power to confirm: The power to confirm the sentence of a court-martial shall be held to include:

(a) The power to confirm or disapprove a finding, and to confirm so much only of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when, in the opinion of the authority having power to confirm, the evidence of record requires a finding of only the lesser degree of guilt; and

(b) The power to confirm or disapprove the whole or any part of the sentence.

ART. 50. Mitigation or remission of sentences: The power to order the execution of the sentence adjudged by a court-martial shall be held to include, inter alia, the power to mitigate or remit the whole or any part of the sentence.

Any unexecuted portion of a sentence adjudged by a court-martial may be mitigated or remitted by the military authority competent to appoint, for the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, in which the person under sentence is held, a court of the kind that imposed the sentence, and the same power may be exercised by superior military authority; but no sentence approved or confirmed by the President shall be remitted or mitigated by any other authority, and no approved sentence of loss of files by an officer shall be remitted or mitigated by any authority inferior to the President, except as provided in the fifty-second article.

When empowered by the President so to do, the commanding general of the Army in the field or the commanding general of the territorial department or division may approve or confirm and commute (but not approve or confirm without commuting), mitigate, or remit and then order executed as commuted, mitigated, or remitted any sentence which under these articles requires the confirmation of the President before the same may be executed.

The power of remission or mitigation shall extend to all uncollected forfeitures adjudged by sentence of court-martial.

ART. 50½. Review; rehearing: The Judge Advocate General shall constitute, in his office, a board of review consisting of not less than three officers by the Judge Advocate General's Department.

Before any record of trial in which there has been adjudged a sentence requiring approval or confirmation by the President under the provisions of article 46 or article 48 is submitted to the President such record shall be examined by the board of review. The board shall submit its opinion, in writing, to the Judge Advocate General, who shall transmit the record and the board's opinion, with his recommendations, directly to the Secretary of War for the action of the President.

No authority shall order the execution of a sentence of a general court-martial involving the penalty of death, dismissal not suspended, dishonorable discharge not suspended, or confinement in a penitentiary, unless and until the board of review shall, with the approval of the Judge Advocate General, have held the record of trial upon which such sentence is based legally sufficient to support the sentence, except that the proper reviewing or confirming authority may upon his approval of a sentence involving dishonorable discharge or confinement in a penitentiary order its execution if it is based solely upon findings of guilty of a charge or charges and a specification or specifications to which the accused has pleaded guilty. When the board of review, with the approval of the Judge Advocate General, holds the record in a case in which the order of execution has been withheld under the provisions of this paragraph legally sufficient to support the findings and sentence, the Judge Advocate General shall so advise the reviewing or confirming authority from whom the record was received, who may thereupon order the execution of the sentence. When, in a case in which the order of execution has been withheld under the provisions of this paragraph, the board of review holds the record of trial legally insufficient to support the findings or sentence, either in whole or in part, or errors of law have been committed substantially affecting the rights of the accused, and the Judge Advocate General concurs in such holding of the board of review, such findings and sentence shall be vacated and the record shall be transmitted through the proper channels to the convening authority for a rehearing or such other action as may be proper. In the event that the Judge Advocate General shall not concur in the holding of the board of review, or if the board of review shall confirm the findings or sentence, the Judge Advocate General shall forward all the papers in the case, including the opinion of the board of review and his own concurrence therein or dissent therefrom, directly to the Secretary of War for the action of the President, who may confirm the action of the reviewing authority or confirming authority below, in whole or in part, with or without remission, mitigation, or commutation, or may disapprove, in whole or in part, any finding of guilty, and may disapprove or vacate the sentence, in whole or in part.

When the President or any reviewing or confirming authority disapproves or vacates a sentence the execution of which has not theretofore been duly ordered, he may authorize or direct a rehearing. Such rehearing shall take place before a court composed of officers not members of the court which first heard the case. Upon such rehearing the accused shall not be tried for any offense of which he was found not guilty by the first court, and no sentence in excess of or more severe than the original sentence shall be enforced unless the sentence be based upon a finding of guilty of an offense not considered upon the merits in the original proceeding: Provided, That such rehearing shall be had in all cases where a finding and sentence have been vacated by reason of the action of the board of review approved by the Judge Advocate General holding the record of trial legally insufficient to support the findings or sentence or that errors of law have been committed substantially affecting the rights of the accused, unless the case is dismissed by order of the confirming authority.

Every record of trial by general court-martial examination of which by the board of review is not hereinbefore in this article provided for shall nevertheless be examined in the Judge Advocate General's Office, and if found legally insufficient to support the findings and sentence, in whole or in part, shall be examined by the board of review, and the board, if it also finds that such record is legally insufficient to support the findings and sentence, in whole or in part, shall, in writing, submit its opinion to the Judge Advocate General, who shall transmit the record and the board's opinion, with his recommendations, directly to the Secretary of War for the action of the President. In any such case the President may approve, disapprove, or vacate, in whole or in part, any findings of guilty, or confirm, mitigate, commute, remit, or vacate any sentence, in whole or in part, and direct the execution of the sentence as confirmed or modified, and he may restore the accused to all rights affected by the findings and sentence, or part thereof, held to be invalid; and the President's necessary orders to this end shall be binding upon all departments and officers of the Government.

Whenever necessary, the Judge Advocate General may constitute two or more boards of review in his office, with equal powers and duties.

Whenever the President deems such action necessary, he may direct the Judge Advocate General to establish a branch of his office, under an Assistant Judge Advocate General, with any distant command, and to establish in such branch office a board of review, or more than one. Such Assistant Judge Advocate General and such board or boards of review shall be empowered to perform for that command, under the general supervision of the Judge Advocate General the duties which the Judge Advocate General and the board or boards of review in his office would otherwise be required to perform in respect of all cases involving sentences not requiring approval or confirmation by the President.

ART. 51. Suspension of sentence of dismissal or death: The authority competent to order the execution of a sentence of dismissal of an officer or a sentence of death may suspend such sentence until the pleasure of the President be known, and in case of such suspension a copy of the order of suspension, together with a copy of the record of trial, shall immediately be transmitted to the President.

ART. 52. Suspension of sentences: The authority competent to order the execution of the sentence of a court-martial may, at the time of the approval of such sentence, suspend the execution, in whole or in part, of any such sentence as does not extend to death, and may restore the person under sentence to duty during such suspension; and the Secretary of War or the commanding officer holding general court-martial jurisdiction over any such offender, may at any time thereafter, while the sentence is being served, suspend the execution, in whole or in part, of the balance of such sentence and restore the person under sentence to duty during such suspension. A sentence, or any part thereof, which has been so suspended may be remitted, in whole or in part, except in cases of persons confined in the United States Disciplinary Barracks or its branches, by the officer who suspended the same, by his successor in office, or by any officer exercising appropriate court-martial jurisdiction over the command in which the person under sentence may be serving at the time, and, subject to the foregoing exceptions, the same authority may vacate the order of suspension at any time and order the execution of the sentence or the suspended part thereof in so far as the same shall not have been previously remitted, subject to like power of suspension. The death or dishonorable discharge of a person under a suspended sentence shall operate as a complete remission of any unexecuted or unremitted part of such sentence.

ART. 53. Execution or remission—confinement in disciplinary barracks: When a sentence of dishonorable discharge has been suspended until the soldier's release from confinement, the execution or remission of any part of his sentence shall, if the soldier be confined in the United States Disciplinary Barracks, or any branch thereof, be directed by the Secretary of War.

III. PUNITIVE ARTICLES.

A. ENLISTMENT; MUSTER; RETURNS.

ART. 54. Fraudulent enlistment: Any person who shall procure himself to be enlisted in the military service of the United States by means of willful misrepresentation or concealment as to his qualifications for enlistment, and shall receive pay or allowances under such enlistment, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 55. Officer making unlawful enlistment: Any officer who knowingly enlists or musters into the military service any person whose enlistment or muster in is prohibited by law, regulations, or orders shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 56. Muster rolls—false muster: At every muster of a regiment, troop, battery, or company the commanding officer thereof shall give to the mustering officer certificates, signed by himself, stating how long absent officers have been absent and the reasons of their absence. And the commanding officer of every troop, battery, or company shall give like certificates, stating how long absent noncommissioned officers and private soldiers have been absent and the reasons of their absence. Such reasons and time of absence shall be inserted in the muster rolls opposite the names of the respective absent officers and soldiers, and the certificates, together with the muster rolls, shall be transmitted by the mustering officer to the Department of War as speedily as the distance of the place and muster will admit. Any officer who knowingly makes a false muster of man or animal, or who signs or directs or allows the signing of any muster roll knowing the same to contain a false muster or false statement as to the absence or pay of an officer or soldier, or who wrongfully takes money or other consideration on mustering in a regiment, company, or other organization, or on signing muster rolls, or who knowingly musters as an officer or soldier a person who is not such officer or soldier, shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 57. False returns—Omission to render returns: Every officer commanding a regiment, an independent troop, battery, or company, or a garrison, shall, in the beginning of every month, transmit through the proper channels to the Department of War an exact return of the same. Every officer whose duty it is to render to the War Department or other superior authority a return of the state of the troops under his command, or of the arms, ammunition, clothing, funds, or other property thereunto belonging, who knowingly makes a false return thereof shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct. And any officer who, through neglect or design, omits to render such return shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

B. DESERTION; ABSENCE WITHOUT LEAVE.

ART. 58. Desertion: Any person subject to military law who deserts or attempts to desert the service of the United States, shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if the offense be committed at any other time, any punishment, excepting death, that a court-martial may direct.

ART. 59. Advising or aiding another to desert: Any person subject to military law who advises or persuades or knowingly assists another to desert the service of the United States shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct, and, if the offense be committed at any other time, any punishment, excepting death, that a court-martial may direct.

ART. 60. Entertaining a deserter: Any officer who, after having discovered that a soldier in his command is a deserter from the military or naval service or from the Marine Corps, retains such deserter in his command without informing superior authority or the commander of the organization to which the deserter belongs, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 61. Absence without leave: Any person subject to military law who fails to repair at the fixed time to the properly appointed place of duty, or goes from the same without proper leave, or absents himself from his command, guard, quarters, station, or camp without proper leave, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

C. DISRESPECT; INSUBORDINATION; MUTINY.

ART. 62. Disrespect toward the President, Vice President, Congress, Secretary of War, governors, legislatures: Any officer who uses contemptuous or disrespectful words against the President, Vice President, the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of War, or the governor or legislature of any State, Territory, or other possession of the United States in which he is quartered shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct. Any other person subject to military law who so offends shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 63. Disrespect toward superior officer: Any person subject to military law who behaves himself with disrespect toward his superior officer shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 64. Assaulting or willfully disobeying superior officer: Any person subject to military law who, on any pretense whatsoever, strikes his superior officer or draws or lifts up any weapon or offers any violence against him, being in the execution of his office, or willfully disobeys any lawful command of his superior officer, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 65. Insubordinate conduct toward noncommissioned officer: Any soldier who strikes or assaults, or who attempts or threatens to strike or assault, or willfully disobeys the lawful order of a noncommissioned officer while in the execution of his office, or uses threatening or insulting language, or behaves in an insubordinate or disrespectful manner toward a noncommissioned officer while in the execution of his office, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 66. Mutiny or sedition: Any person subject to military law who attempts to create or who begins, excites, causes, or joins in any mutiny or sedition in any company, party, post, camp, detachment, guard, or other command shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 67. Failure to suppress mutiny or sedition: Any officer or soldier who, being present at any mutiny or sedition, does not use his utmost endeavor to suppress the same, or knowing or having reason to believe that a mutiny or sedition is to take place, does not without delay give information thereof to his commanding officer, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 68. Quarrels; frays; disorders: All officers and noncommissioned officers have power to part and quell all quarrels, frays, and disorders among persons subject to military law and to order officers who take part in the same into arrest, and other persons subject to military law who take part in the same into arrest or confinement, as circumstances may require, until their proper superior officer is acquainted therewith. And whosoever, being so ordered, refuses to obey such officer or noncommissioned officer or draws a weapon upon or otherwise threatens or does violence to him shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

D. ARREST; CONFINEMENT.

ART. 69. Arrest or confinement: Any person subject to military law charged with crime or with a serious offense under these articles shall be placed in confinement or in arrest, as circumstances may require; but when charged with a minor offense only such person shall not ordinarily be placed in confinement. Any person placed in arrest under the provisions of this article shall thereby be restricted to his barracks, quarters, or tent, unless such limits shall be enlarged by proper authority. Any officer or cadet who breaks his arrest or who escapes from confinement, whether before or after trial or sentence and before he is set at liberty by proper authority, shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and any other person subject to military law who escapes from confinement or who breaks his arrest, whether before or after trial or sentence and before he is set at liberty by proper authority, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 70. Charges—action upon: Charges and specifications must be signed by a person subject to military law, and under oath either that he has personal knowledge of, or has investigated, the matters set forth therein, and that the same are true in fact, to the best of his knowledge and belief.

No charge will be referred for trial until after a thorough and impartial investigation thereof shall have been made. This investigation will include inquiries as to the truth of the matter set forth in said charges, form of charges, and what disposition of the case should be made in the interest of justice and discipline. At such investigation full opportunity shall be given to the accused to cross-examine witnesses against him and to present anything he may desire in his own behalf either in defense or mitigation, and the investigating officer shall examine available witnesses requested by the accused. If the charges are forwarded after such investigation, they shall be accompanied by a statement of the substance of the testimony taken on both sides.

Before directing the trial of any charge by general court-martial, the appointing authority will refer it to his staff judge advocate for consideration and advice.

When any person subject to military law is placed in arrest or confinement, immediate steps will be taken to try the person accused or to dismiss the charge and release him. Any officer who is responsible for unnecessary delay in investigating or carrying the case to a final conclusion shall be punished as a court-martial may direct. When a person is held for trial by general court-martial the commanding officer will, within eight days after the accused is arrested or confined, if practicable, forward the charges to the officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction and furnish the accused a copy of such charges. If the same be not practicable, he will report to superior authority the reasons for delay. The trial judge advocate will cause to be served upon the accused a copy of the charges upon which trial is to be had, and a failure so to serve such charges will be ground for a continuance unless the trial be had on the charges furnished the accused as hereinbefore provided. In time of peace no person shall, against his objection, be brought to trial before a general court-martial within a period of five days subsequent to the service of charges upon him.

ART. 71. Refusal to receive and keep prisoners: No provost marshal or commander of a guard shall refuse to receive or keep any prisoner committed to his charge by an officer belonging to the forces of the United States, provided the officer committing shall at the time deliver an account in writing, signed by himself, of the crime or offense charged against the prisoner. Any officer or soldier so refusing shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 72. Report of prisoners received: Every commander of a guard to whose charge a prisoner is committed shall, within 24 hours after such confinement, or as soon as he is relieved from his guard, report in writing to the commanding officer the name of such prisoner, the offense charged against him, and the name of the officer committing him; and if he fails to make such report he shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 73. Releasing prisoner without proper authority: Any person subject to military law who, without proper authority, releases any prisoner duly committed to his charge, or who, through neglect or design, suffers any prisoner so committed to escape, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 74. Delivery of offenders to civil authorities: When any person subject to military law, except one who is held by the military authorities to answer, or who is awaiting trial or result of trial, or who is undergoing sentence for a crime or offense punishable under these articles, is accused of a crime or offense committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia, and punishable by the laws of the land, the commanding officer is required, except in time of war, upon application duly made, to use his utmost endeavor to deliver over such accused person to the civil authorities, or to aid the officers of justice in apprehending and securing him in order that he may be brought to trial. Any commanding officer who upon such application refuses or willfully neglects, except in time of war, to deliver over such accused person to the civil authorities or to aid the officers of justice in apprehending and securing him shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

When, under the provisions of this article, delivery is made to the civil authorities of an offender undergoing sentence of a court-martial, such delivery, if followed by conviction, shall be held to interrupt the execution of the sentence of the court-martial, and the offender shall be returned to military custody, after having answered to the civil authorities for his offense, for the completion of the said court-martial sentence.

E. WAR OFFENSES.

ART. 75. Misbehavior before the enemy: Any officer or soldier who, before the enemy, misbehaves himself, runs away, or shamefully abandons or delivers up or by any misconduct, disobedience, or neglect endangers the safety of any fort, post, camp, guard, or other command which it is his duty to defend, or speaks words inducing others to do the like, or casts away his arms or ammunition, or quits his post or colors to plunder or pillage, or by any means whatsoever occasions false alarms in camp, garrison, or quarters, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 76. Subordinates compelling commander to surrender: Any person subject to military law who compels or attempts to compel any commander of any garrison, fort, post, camp, guard, or other command, to give it up to the enemy or to abandon it shall be punishable with death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 77. Improper use of countersign: Any person subject to military law who makes known the parole or countersign to any person not entitled to receive it according to the rules and discipline of war, or gives a parole or countersign different from that which he received, shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 78. Forcing a safeguard: Any person subject to military law who, in time of war, forces a safeguard shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 79. Captured property to be secured for public service: All public property taken from the enemy is the property of the United States and shall be secured for the service of the United States, and any person subject to military law who neglects to secure such property or is guilty of wrongful appropriation thereof shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 80. Dealing in captured or abandoned property: Any person subject to military law who buys, sells, trades, or in any way deals in or disposes of captured or abandoned property, whereby he shall receive or expect any profit, benefit, or advantage to himself or to any other person directly or indirectly connected with himself, or who fails whenever such property comes into his possession or custody or within his control to give notice thereof to the proper authority and to turn over such property to the proper authority without delay, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial, military commission, or other military tribunal may adjudge, or by any or all of said penalties.

ART. 81. Relieving, corresponding with, or aiding the enemy: Whosoever relieves or attempts to relieve the enemy with arms, ammunition, supplies, money, or other thing, or knowingly harbors or protects or holds correspondence with or gives intelligence to the enemy, either directly or indirectly, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial or military commission may direct.

ART. 82. Spies: Any person who in time of war shall be found lurking or acting as a spy in or about any of the fortifications, posts, quarters, or encampments of any of the armies of the United States, or elsewhere, shall be tried by a general court-martial or by a military commission, and shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.

F. MISCELLANEOUS CRIMES AND OFFENSES.

ART. 83. Military property—willful or negligent loss, damage, or wrongful disposition: Any person subject to military law who willfully, or through neglect, suffers to be lost, spoiled, damaged, or wrongfully disposed of, any military property belonging to the United States shall make good the loss or damage and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 84. Waste or unlawful disposition of military property issued to soldiers: Any soldier who sells or wrongfully disposes of or willfully or through neglect injures or loses any horse, arms, ammunition, accouterments, equipment, clothing, or other property issued for use in the military service, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 85. Drunk on duty: Any officer who is found drunk on duty shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if the offense be committed in time of peace, he shall be punished as a court-martial may direct. Any person subject to military law, except an officer, who is found drunk on duty shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 86. Misbehavior of sentinel: Any sentinel who is found drunk or sleeping upon his post, or who leaves it before he is regularly relieved, shall, if the offense be committed in time of war, suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if the offense be committed in time of peace, he shall suffer any punishment, except death, that a court-martial may direct.

ART. 87. Personal interest in sale of provisions: Any officer commanding in any garrison, fort, barracks, camp, or other place where troops of the United States may be serving who, for his private advantage, lays any duty or imposition upon or is interested in the sale of any victuals or other necessaries of life brought into such garrison, fort, barracks, camp, or other place for the use of the troops, shall be dismissed from the service and suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 88. Intimidation of persons bringing provisions: Any person subject to military law who abuses, intimidates, does violence to, or wrongfully interferes with any persons bringing provisions, supplies, or other necessaries to the camp, garrison, or quarters of the forces of the United States shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 89. Good order to be maintained and wrongs redressed: All persons subject to military law are to behave themselves orderly in quarters, garrison, camp, and on the march; and any person subject to military law who commits any waste or spoil, or willfully destroys any property whatsoever (unless by order of his commanding officer), or commits any kind of depredation or riot, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct. Any commanding officer who, upon complaint made to him, refuses or omits to see reparation made to the party injured, in so far as the offender's pay shall go toward such reparation, as provided for in article 105, shall be dismissed from the service, or otherwise punished, as the court-martial may direct.

ART. 90. Provoking speeches or gestures: No person subject to military law shall use any reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures to another; and any person subject to military law who offends against the provisions of this article shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 91. Dueling: Any person subject to military law who fights or promotes or is concerned in or connives at fighting a duel, or who, having knowledge of a challenge sent or about to be sent, fails to report the fact promptly to the proper authority shall, if an officer, be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct; and if any other person subject to military law, shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 92. Murder—rape: Any person subject to military law who commits murder or rape shall suffer death or imprisonment for life, as a court-martial may direct; but no person shall be tried by court-martial for murder or rape committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace.

ART. 93. Various crimes: Any person subject to military law who commits manslaughter, mayhem, arson, burglary, housebreaking, robbery, larceny, embezzlement, perjury, forgery, sodomy, assault with intent to commit any felony, assault with intent to do bodily harm with a dangerous weapon, instrument, or other thing, or assault with intent to do bodily harm, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

ART. 94. Frauds against the Government: Any person subject to military law who makes or causes to be made any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or

Who presents or causes to be presented to any person in the civil or military service thereof, for approval or payment, any claim against the United States, or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or

Who enters into any agreement or conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the allowance or payment of any false or fraudulent claim; or

Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or against any officer thereof, makes or uses, or procures, or advises the making or use of, any writing or other paper knowing the same to contain any false or fraudulent statements; or

Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, makes, or procures, or advises the making of, any oath to any fact or to any writing or other paper knowing such oath to be false; or

Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, forges or counterfeits, or procures, or advises the forging or counterfeiting of any signature upon any writing or other paper, or uses, or procures, or advises the use of any such signature, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited; or

Who, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the military service thereof, knowingly delivers, or causes to be delivered, to any person having authority to receive the same, any amount thereof less than that for which he receives a certificate or receipt; or

Who, being authorized to make or deliver any paper certifying the receipt of any property of the United States furnished or intended for the military service thereof, makes or delivers to any person such writing, without having full knowledge of the truth of the statements therein contained and with intent to defraud the United States; or

Who steals, embezzles, knowingly and willfully misappropriates, applies to his own use or benefit, or wrongfully or knowingly sells or disposes of any ordnance, arms, equipments, ammunition, clothing, subsistence, stores, money, or other property of the United States furnished or intended for the military service thereof; or

Who knowingly purchases or receives in pledge for any obligation or indebtedness from any soldier, officer, or other person who is a part of or employed in said forces or service, any ordnance, arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, or other property of the United States, such soldier, officer, or other person not having lawful right to sell or pledge the same;

Shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonement, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, or by any or all of said penalties. And if any person, being guilty of any of the offenses aforesaid while in the military service of the United States, receives his discharge or is dismissed from the service, he shall continue to be liable to be arrested and held for trial and sentence by a court-martial in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had not received such discharge nor been dismissed.

ART. 95. Conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman: Any officer or cadet who is convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service.

ART. 96. General article: Though not mentioned in these articles, all disorders and neglects to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, all conduct of a nature to bring discredit upon the military service, and all crimes or offenses not capital, of which persons subject to military law may be guilty, shall be taken cognizance of by a general or special or summary court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court.

IV. COURTS OF INQUIRY.

ART. 97. When and by whom ordered: A court of inquiry to examine into the nature of any transaction of or accusation or imputation against any officer or soldier may be ordered by the President or by any commanding officer; but a court of inquiry shall not be ordered by any commanding officer except upon the request of the officer or soldier whose conduct is to be inquired into.

ART. 98. Composition: A court of inquiry shall consist of three or more officers. For each court of inquiry the authority appointing the court shall appoint a recorder.

ART. 99. Challenges: Members of a court of inquiry may be challenged by the party whose conduct is to be inquired into, but only for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity of any challenge, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time. The party whose conduct is being inquired into shall have the right to be represented before the court by counsel of his own selection, if such counsel be reasonably available.

ART. 100. Oath of members and recorders: The recorder of a court of inquiry shall administer to the members the following oath: "You, A B, do swear (or affirm) that you will well and truly examine and inquire, according to the evidence, into the matter now before you without partiality, favor, affection, prejudice, or hope of reward. So help you God." After which the president of the court shall administer to the recorder the following oath: "You, A B, do swear (or affirm) that you will, according to your best abilities, accurately and impartially record the proceedings of the court and the evidence to be given in the case in hearing. So help you God."

In case of affirmation the closing sentence of adjuration will be omitted.

ART. 101. Powers; procedure: A court of inquiry and the recorder thereof shall have the same power to summon and examine witnesses as is given to courts-martial and the trial judge advocate thereof. Such witnesses shall take the same oath or affirmation that is taken by witnesses before courts-martial. A reporter or an interpreter for a court of inquiry shall, before entering upon his duties, take the oath or affirmation required of a reporter or an interpreter for a court-martial. The party whose conduct is being inquired into or his counsel, if any, shall be permitted to examine and cross-examine witnesses so as fully to investigate the circumstances in question.

ART. 102. Opinion on merits of case: A court of inquiry shall not give an opinion on the merits of the case inquired into unless specially ordered to do so.

ART. 103. Record of proceedings—How authenticated: Each court of inquiry shall keep a record of its proceedings, which shall be authenticated by the signature of the president and the recorder thereof, and be forwarded to the convening authority. In case the record can not be authenticated by the recorder, by reason of his death, disability, or absence, it shall be signed by the president and by one other member of the court.

V. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

ART. 104. Disciplinary powers of commanding officers: Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, the commanding officer of any detachment, company, or higher command may, for minor offenses, impose disciplinary punishments upon persons of his command without the intervention of a court-martial, unless the accused demands trial by court-martial.

The disciplinary punishments authorized by this article may include admonition, reprimand, withholding of privileges for not exceeding one week, extra fatigue for not exceeding one week, restriction to certain specified limits for not exceeding one week, and hard labor without confinement for not exceeding one week, but shall not include forfeiture of pay or confinement under guard; except that in time of war or grave public emergency a commanding officer of the grade of brigadier general or of higher grade may, under the provisions of this article also impose upon an officer of his command below the grade of major a forfeiture of not more than one-half of such officer's monthly pay for one month. A person punished under authority of this article, who deems his punishment unjust or disproportionate to the offense, may, through the proper channel, appeal to the next superior authority, but may in the meantime be required to undergo the punishment adjudged. The commanding officer who imposes the punishment, his successor in command, and superior authority shall have power to mitigate or remit any unexecuted portion of the punishment. The imposition and enforcement of disciplinary punishment under authority of this article for any act or omission shall not be a bar to trial by court-martial for a crime or offense growing out of the same act or omission; but the fact that a disciplinary punishment has been enforced may be shown by the accused upon trial, and when so shown shall be considered in determining the measure of punishment to be adjudged in the event of a finding of guilty.

ART. 105. Injuries to property—redress of: Whenever complaint is made to any commanding officer that damage has been done to the property of any person or that his property has been wrongfully taken by persons subject to military law, such complaint shall be investigated by a board consisting of any number of officers from one to three, which board shall be convened by the commanding officer and shall have, for the purpose of such investigation, power to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath or affirmation, to receive depositions or other documentary evidence, and to assess the damages sustained against the responsible parties. The assessment of damages made by such board shall be subject to the approval of the commanding officer, and in the amount approved by him shall be stopped against the pay of the offenders, and the order of such commanding officer directing stoppages herein authorized shall be conclusive on any disbursing officer for the payment by him to the injured parties of the stoppages so ordered.

Where the offenders can not be ascertained, but the organization or detachment to which they belong is known, stoppages to the amount of damages inflicted may be made and assessed in such proportion as may be deemed just upon the individual members thereof who are shown to have been present with such organization or detachment at the time the damages complained of were inflicted as determined by the approved findings of the board.

ART. 106. Arrest of deserters by civil officials: It shall be lawful for any civil officer having authority under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, to arrest offenders, summarily to arrest a deserter from the military service of the United States and deliver him into the custody of the military authorities of the United States.

ART. 107. Soldiers to make good time lost: Every soldier who, in an existing or subsequent enlistment, deserts the service of the United States, or without proper authority absents himself from his organization, station, or duty for more than one day, or who is confined for more than one day under sentence, or while awaiting trial and disposition of his case, if the trial results in conviction, or through the intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquor, or through disease or injury the result of his own misconduct, renders himself unable, for more than one day, to perform duty, shall be liable to serve, after his return to a full-duty status, for such period as shall, with the time he may have served prior to such desertion, unauthorized absence, confinement, or inability to perform duty, amount to the full term of that part of his enlistment period which he is required to serve with his organization before being furloughed to the Army reserve.

ART. 108. Soldiers—separation from the service: No enlisted man, lawfully inducted into the military service of the United States, shall be discharged from said service without a certificate of discharge, signed by a field officer of the regiment or other organization to which the enlisted man belongs or by the commanding officer when no such field officer is present; and no enlisted man shall be discharged from said service before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

ART. 109. Oath of enlistment: At the time of his enlistment every soldier shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I ——— ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the Rules and Articles of War." This oath or affirmation may be taken before any officer.

ART. 110. Certain articles to be read and explained: Articles 1, 2, and 29, 54 to 96 inclusive, and 104 to 109, inclusive, shall be read and explained to every soldier at the time of his enlistment or muster in, or within six days thereafter, and shall be read and explained once every six months to the soldiers of every garrison, regiment, or company in the service of the United States.

ART. 111. Copy of record of trial: Every person tried by a general court-martial shall, on demand therefor, made by himself or by any person in his behalf, be entitled to a copy of the record of the trial.

ART. 112. Effects of deceased persons—disposition of: In case of the death of any person subject to military law the commanding officer of the place of command will permit the legal representative or widow of the deceased, if present, to take possession of all his effects then in camp or quarters; and if no legal representative or widow be present, the commanding officer shall direct a summary court to secure all such effects; and said summary court shall have authority to collect and receive any debts due decedent's estate by local debtors and to pay the undisputed local creditors of decedent, in so far as any money belonging to the deceased which may come into said summary court's possession under this article will permit, taking receipts therefor for file with said court's final report upon its transactions to the War Department; and as soon as practicable after the collection of such effects said summary court shall transmit such effects, and any money collected, through the Quartermaster Department, at Government expense, to the widow or legal representative of the deceased, if such be found by said court, or to the son, daughter, father, provided the father has not abandoned the support of his family, mother, brother, sister, or the next of kin in the order named, if such be found by said court, or the beneficiary named in the will of the deceased, if such be found by said court, and said court shall thereupon make to the War Department a full report of its transactions; but if there be none of the persons hereinabove named, or such persons or their addresses are not known to or readily ascertainable by said court, and the said court shall so find, said summary court shall have authority to convert into cash, by public or private sale, not earlier than 30 days after the death of the deceased, all effects of deceased, except sabers, insignia, decorations, medals, watches, trinkets, manuscripts, and other articles valuable chiefly as keepsakes; and as soon as practicable after converting such effects into cash said summary court shall deposit with the proper officer, to be designated in regulations, any cash belonging to decedent's estate, and shall transmit a receipt for such deposits, any will or other papers of value belonging to the deceased, any sabers, insignia, decorations, medals, watches, trinkets, manuscripts, and other articles valuable chiefly as keepsakes, together with an inventory of the effects secured by said summary court, and a full account of its transactions to the War Department for transmission to the Auditor for the War Department for action as authorized by law in the settlement of accounts of deceased officers and enlisted men of the Army.

The provisions of this article shall be applicable to inmates of the United States Soldiers' Home who die in any United States military hospital outside of the District of Columbia where sent from the home for treatment.

ART. 113. Inquests: When at any post, fort, camp, or other place garrisoned by the military forces of the United States and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, any person shall have been found dead under circumstances which appear to require investigation, the commanding officer will designate and direct a summary court-martial to investigate the circumstances attending the death; and for this purpose such summary court-martial shall have power to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath or affirmation. He shall promptly transmit to the post or other commander a report of his investigation and of his findings as to the cause of the death.

ART. 114. Authority to administer oaths: Any judge advocate or acting judge advocate, the president of a general or special court-martial, any summary court-martial, the trial judge advocate or any assistant trial judge advocate of a general or special court-martial, the president or the recorder of a court of inquiry or of a military board, any officer designated to take a deposition, any officer detailed to conduct an investigation, and the adjutant of any command shall have power to administer oaths for the purposes of the administration of military justice and for other purposes of military administration; and in foreign places where the Army may be serving shall have the general powers of a notary public or of a consul of the United States in the administration of oaths, the execution and acknowledgment of legal instruments, the attestation of documents, and all other forms of notarial acts to be executed by persons subject to military law.

ART. 115. Appointment of reporters and interpreters: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, the president of a court-martial or military commission or a court of inquiry shall have power to appoint a reporter, who shall record the proceedings of and testimony taken before such court or commission and may set down the same in the first instance in shorthand. Under like regulations the president of a court-martial or military commission, or court of inquiry, or a summary court may appoint an interpreter who shall interpret for the court or commission.

ART. 116. Powers of assistant trial judge advocate and of assistant defense counsel: An assistant trial judge advocate of a general court-martial shall be competent to perform any duty devolved by law, regulation, or the custom of the service upon the trial judge advocate of the court. An assistant defense counsel shall be competent likewise to perform any duty devolved by law, regulation, or the custom of the service upon counsel for the accused.

ART. 117. Removal of civil suits: When any civil or criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of a State against any officer, soldier, or other person in the military service of the United States on account of any act done under color of his office or status, or in respect to which he claims any right, title, or authority under any law of the United States respecting the military forces thereof, or under the law of war, such suit or prosecution may at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof be removed for trial into the district court of the United States in the district where the same is pending in the manner prescribed in section 33 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said district court and shall proceed therein as if the cause had been originally commenced in said district court and the same proceedings had been taken in such suit or prosecution in said district court as shall have been had therein in said State court prior to its removal, and said district court shall have full power to hear and determine said cause.

ART. 118. Officers, separation from service: No officer shall be discharged or dismissed from the service except by order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed except in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial or in mitigation thereof; but the President may at any time drop from the rolls of the Army any officer who has been absent from duty three months without leave or who has been absent in confinement in a prison or penitentiary for three months after final conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction.

ART. 119. Rank and precedence among Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers: That in time of war or public danger, when two or more officers of the same grade are on duty in the same field, department, or command, or of organizations thereof, the President may assign the command of the forces of such field department, or command, or of any organization thereof, without regard to seniority of rank in the same grade.

ART. 120. Command when different corps or commands happen to join: When different corps or commands of the military forces of the United States happen to join or do duty together the officer highest in rank of the line of the Regular Army, Marine Corps, forces drafted or called into the service of the United States, or Volunteers, there on duty, shall, subject to the provisions of the last preceding article, command the whole and give orders for what is needful in the service, unless otherwise directed by the President.

ART. 121. Complaints of wrongs: Any officer or soldier who believes himself wronged by his commanding officer, and, upon due application to such commander, is refused redress, may complain to the general commanding in the locality where the officer against whom the complaint is made is stationed. The general shall examine into said complaint and take proper measures for redressing the wrong complained of; and he shall, as soon as possible, transmit to the Department of War a true statement of such complaint, with the proceedings had thereon.

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of Chapter II of this act shall take effect and be in force six months after the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That all offenses committed and all penalties, forfeitures, fines, or liabilities incurred prior to the taking effect of Chapter II of this act, under any law embraced in or modified, changed, or repealed by Chapter II of this act, may be prosecuted, punished, and enforced in the same manner and with the same effect as if Chapter II of this act had not been passed.

SEC. 4. That section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed and all laws and parts of laws in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of Chapter II of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The title of the bill when it was first introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs was "A bill to establish military justice."

The Committee on Military Affairs referred it to a subcommittee consisting of Senators WARREN, LENROOT, and myself. After extensive hearings we reported back to the committee the bill which was known as Senate bill 64, with amendments, and the report of the subcommittee was adopted by the full committee, and the bill as reported to the committee by the subcommittee and adopted has been reported to the Senate. The committee agreed that the bill might be offered as an amendment to the Army reorganization bill, so called, and I now offer it as an amendment to the pending bill. I do not know of any objections to it. If there are any and any explanation is desired as to the purpose of the amendment, I shall be very glad to make it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Committee on Military Affairs authorized me to accept that as an amendment to the bill, and I take this opportunity of saying that this legislation, prepared by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], is exceedingly important. It is the result of months of study, reports from two or three committees and commissions of lawyers and officers in the Army, and accomplishes, we believe, a very healthy and much-desired reform in the system of military justice. I do not know what the Senator's intention is, but I think it would be rather a pity if the Senator from Oregon did not tell the Senate something about it, although he may decide to say nothing.

Mr. POMERENE. I am very much impressed with the title of the bill, "To establish military justice," and for one would very much like to have the Senator from Oregon explain his amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall be very glad to do it. It is really a reenactment of the Articles of War with certain changes which the World War has suggested, and changes which have been suggested by the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Senator may remember that on December 30, 1918, I delivered an address in the Senate attacking the court-martial system as it had been in force up to that time. Early in 1919, or possibly the latter part of 1918, I prepared an amendment to the Articles of War which I thought would correct the inequalities and injustices in the enforcement of military law. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs, beginning in February, 1919, held quite extensive hearings upon that bill, which was then pending. Amongst other witnesses who were called was Gen. Ansell, who entertained one view with reference to the power conferred upon the Judge Advocate General by the Articles of War, and Gen. Crowder, the Judge Advocate General, who entertained an opposite view. Quite a number of other witnesses were called in reference to the measure.

The whole controversy revolved about and hinged upon the construction to be given to section 1199 of the Revised Statutes, which vested in the Judge Advocate General of the Army the power—to receive, revise, and cause to be recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and perform such other duties as have been performed heretofore by the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

It was insisted by Gen. Ansell in substance upon the one side that that provision gave power to revise and to modify and, if necessary, to reverse sentences given by courts-martial and to send them back to the approving authority with instructions to make whatever disposition thereof the Judge Advocate General might see fit to make.

On the other hand, Gen. Crowder's construction of that provision of the statutes was that he had no power to modify or to change or to reverse the decision of courts-martial, provided only that the proceedings were regular; that he had no power, even if there were such irregularities in the trial as worked prejudicial error to the accused, if the proceedings were regular, to reverse or change or modify the sentence that was imposed by the court-martial. I am not going into that because it is a long, long story.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand from the statement just made by the Senator that the judgment of the court-martial then was final as to the facts?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Practically final.

Mr. POMERENE. And as to the law as well?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. This controversy came up as early as November 10, 1917, when Gen. Ansell, who was Acting Judge Advocate General, wrote a memorandum and brief to the Secretary of War for his personal consideration, taking the position that, under the act to which I have just referred and which I have read, the Judge Advocate General had the power to examine the record, revise it, and practically to reverse the decision of the court-martial. In other words, that he had practically supervisory appellate jurisdiction and power.

If the Senator from Ohio is interested in the subject, he will find this memorandum in the hearings reported by the subcommittee quite at length. That brief of Gen. Ansell was referred by the Secretary of War to Gen. Crowder, who, on his part, rendered quite a lengthy opinion taking issue with Gen. Ansell as to the power that the Judge Advocate General had and as to the revisory power of the Judge Advocate General. It led to quite a controversy in the Judge Advocate General's Department, the Judge Advocate and some of those associated with him adhering to his view, while there were a number of those associated in the Judge Advocate General's Department who stood with Gen. Ansell.

The Secretary of War, on the 27th of November, 1917, made this note after he had received the memorandum of Judge Crowder:

As a convenient mode of doing justice exists in the instant cases, I shall be glad to act in reliance upon a usual power and leave this larger question for future consideration, informed by the further study which the Judge Advocate General is giving it. Ordinarily, however, the extraction of new and large grants of power by reinterpreting familiar statutes with settled practical construction is unwise. A frank appeal to the Legislature for added power is wiser.

That was in November, 1917, and while the war was yet upon us. The Secretary of War lined himself up at once with the advocates of those who adhered to the view of Gen. Crowder, and from that time to this moment if there has been any change of heart in the Secretary of War I do not know it.

In any event, while these hearings were being had before the Committee on Military Affairs in 1918, the committee asked Gen. Ansell, a very distinguished lawyer and a patriotic soldier, and one absolutely without fear, as his subsequent conduct proved, to prepare amended articles of war and present them to the Military Affairs Committee in the form of a bill to meet the difficulties which had grown out of the different constructions which had been placed upon the law. He did prepare, and I introduced in the Senate, what is known as Senate bill No. 64. That was the bill which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by that committee referred to a subcommittee, as has been stated heretofore.

In addition to the appointment of the subcommittee to investigate the whole subject, and while the investigation was pending, the Secretary of War, for some reason best known to himself, appointed a committee of the American Bar Association, or some one in the War Department did so in conjunction with the president of the association, to investigate the matter. The committee so appointed consisted of the following gentlemen: Mr. Andrew A. Bruce, Mr. Martin Conboy, Mr. John Hinkley, Mr. S. S. Gregory, and Mr. William P. Bynum, all distinguished lawyers and members of the American Bar Association. That committee investigated the whole subject and in due course reported to the American Bar Association its conclusions and findings as to the Articles of War. This report was filed with the secretary of the executive committee of the association in July, 1919. It is a most interesting report, and I hope the Senator from Ohio will, at his leisure, read it.

Mr. POMERENE. Am I to understand, if the Senator please, that this report indorses the bill which was prepared by Gen. Ansell and to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it did not. That committee did not approve any bill. It made some recommendations, some of which were consonant with the provisions of the so-called Ansell bill and some were not; but while that committee was investigating the Secretary of War evidently feared to trust either the Military Affairs Committee or the committee of the American Bar Association and proceeded to appoint another committee, a military committee, consisting of Maj. Gen. F. D. Kernan, Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, Lieut. Col. Hugh B. Ogden, and Lieut. Col. F. M. Barrett. That committee also went into an examination of the whole subject and reported to the Secretary of War, I think, on July 17, 1919. That committee reported a set of amended articles of war, amending the then existing Articles of War in very many essential particulars.

Later on, after all of these reports were before the War Department, there came a reoprt from the War Department itself suggesting amended Articles of War to meet the conditions and troubles which had been suggested in the original construction of the law.

We have, then, for consideration here to-day the existing Articles of War, the so-called Kernan report, which is the report of the War Department committee that was appointed by the Secretary of War, and the articles which were proposed by the War Department itself.

The Kernan report adopted very many of the suggestions that are contained in Senate bill 64, the bill introduced by me. The bill proposed by the War Department contained many suggestions made by the Kernan board and many suggestions contained in Senate bill 64, and these constitute the basis of the pending amendment.

I am going to call the attention of the Senate to only a few of the provisions of the amendment, the purpose of which is to give a greater revisory and appellate power to the Judge Advocate General and to the board of review sitting in his office.

The most radical change made in the Articles of War is to be found in a new article known as 50½. That article was proposed by the War Department, but some important amendments were made to it by the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, and as amended the Military Affairs Committee approved it, and it is part of the amendment which I am now offering. I am going to read that. It is a little long, but Senators can get from a reading of it just exactly what a wide change was made in the Articles of War:

ART. 50½. Review; rehearing: The Judge Advocate General shall constitute in his office a board of review consisting of not less than three officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department.

Before any record of trial in which there has been adjudged a sentence requiring approval or confirmation by the President under the provisions of article 46 or article 48 is submitted to the President such record shall be examined by the board of review.

The board shall submit its opinion, in writing, to the Judge Advocate General, who shall transmit the record and the board's opinion, with his recommendations, directly to the Secretary of War for the action of the President.

No authority shall order the execution of a sentence of a general court-martial involving the penalty of death, dismissal not suspended, dishonorable discharge not suspended, or confinement in a penitentiary, unless and until the board of review shall, with the approval of the Judge Advocate General, have held the record of trial upon which such sentence is based legally sufficient to support the sentence, except that the proper reviewing or confirming authority may upon his approval of a sentence involving dishonorable discharge or confinement in a penitentiary order its execution if it is based solely upon findings of guilty of a charge or charges and a specification or specifications to which the accused has pleaded guilty. When the board of review, with the approval of the Judge Advocate General, holds the record in a case in which the order of execution has been withheld under the provisions of this paragraph legally sufficient to support the findings and sentence, the Judge Advocate General shall so advise the reviewing or confirming authority from whom the record was received, who may thereupon order the execution of the sentence. When, in a case in which the order of execution has been withheld under the provisions of this paragraph, the board of review holds the record of trial legally insufficient to support the findings or sentence, either in whole or in part, or errors of law have been committed substantially affecting the rights of the accused, and the Judge Advocate General concurs in such holding of the board of review, such findings and sentence shall be vacated and the record shall be transmitted through the proper channels to the convening authority for a rehearing or such other action as may be proper.

That is a power that Ansell always claimed the Judge Advocate General possessed, but the Judge Advocate General claimed that he had no such power. Now, that power is expressly conferred by the provision which I am now reading:

In the event that the Judge Advocate General shall not concur in the holding of the board of review, or if the board of review shall confirm the findings or sentence, the Judge Advocate General shall forward all the papers in the case, including the opinion of the board of review and his own concurrence therein or dissent therefrom, directly to the Secretary of War for the action of the President, who may confirm the action of the reviewing authority or confirming authority below, in whole or in part, with or without remission, mitigation, or commutation, or may disapprove, in whole or in part, any finding of guilty, and may disapprove or vacate the sentence, in whole or in part.

When the President or any reviewing or confirming authority disapproves or vacates a sentence the execution of which has not theretofore been duly ordered, he may authorize or direct a rehearing. Such rehearing shall take place before a court composed of officers not members of the court which first heard the case. Upon such rehearing the accused shall not be tried for any offense of which he was found not guilty by the first court, and no sentence in excess of or more severe than the original sentence shall be enforced unless the sentence be based upon a finding of guilty of an offense not considered upon the merits in the original proceeding: Provided, That such rehearing shall be had in all cases where a finding and sentence have been vacated by reason of the action of the board of review approved by the Judge Advocate General holding the record of trial legally insufficient to support the findings or sentence or that errors of law have been committed substantially affecting the rights of the accused, unless the case is dismissed by order of the confirming authority.

Every record of trial by general court-martial examination of which by the board of review is not hereinbefore in this article provided for shall nevertheless be examined in the Judge Advocate General's Office, and if found legally insufficient to support the findings and sentence, in whole or in part, shall be examined by the board of review, and the board, if it also finds that such record is legally insufficient to support the findings and sentence, in whole or in part, shall, in writing, submit its opinion to the Judge Advocate General, who shall transmit the record and the board's opinion, with his recommendations, directly to the Secretary of War for the action of the President. In any such case the President may approve, disapprove, or vacate, in whole or in part, any findings of guilty, or confirm, mitigate, commute, remit, or vacate any sentence, in whole or in part, and direct the execution of the sentence as confirmed or modified, and he may restore the accused to all rights affected by the findings and sentence, or part thereof, held to be invalid; and the President's necessary orders to this end shall be binding upon all departments and officers of the Government.

Whenever necessary, the Judge Advocate General may constitute two or more boards of review in his office, with equal powers and duties.

Whenever the President deems such action necessary, he may direct the Judge Advocate General to establish a branch of his office, under an assistant judge advocate general, with any distant command, and to establish in such branch office a board of review, or more than one. Such assistant judge advocate general and such board or boards of review shall be empowered to perform for that command, under the general supervision of the Judge Advocate General the duties which the Judge Advocate General and the board or boards of review in his office would otherwise be required to perform in respect of all cases involving sentences not requiring approval or confirmation by the President.

I have read that in full because I wanted it in the RECORD as a part of this brief statement. It is the gist of the whole proposed amended Articles of War, because it gives to the proposed board of review and to the Judge Advocate General powers which the Judge Advocate General claims he has not heretofore had and which, it seemed to me and seemed to the committee, are absolutely essential to do full justice to men convicted by courts-martial.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I have knowledge of a number of instances where, although there have been convictions and commitments, the person committed was later released. How has that been done—by what process?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator refers to what is being done now?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know by what authority much of it is being done, but I assume that it is because the authorities still have control of a man until his sentence has been executed.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will pardon me, such a case came to my attention from my own State some months ago. A young man was fighting in the trenches at a place to which no drinking water could be brought, and he became almost famished for water. Finding a little pool in the bottom of the trench, he drank from it, and in a short time was seized with pains to such a degree that he became delirious. In his delirium he wandered from the trench and went to the rear. He was arrested, tried, convicted of desertion, and sentenced to Leavenworth Penitentiary. He protested his innocence all the while, but no opportunity was afforded him to have his fellow soldiers come to testify in his behalf. After the armistice was signed and the troops were demobilized and the soldiers of his company returned—this soldier was from Delaware, Ohio—the matter was taken up by his neighbors. Affidavits were secured from his fellow soldiers corroborating in every particular the story of this soldier, who was then paying the penalty in Leavenworth Penitentiary. Through my office this matter was brought to the attention of the War Department. They saw that a mistake had been made, and, be it said to the credit of the War Department, the soldier was released, and be it also said to the discredit of the court-martial that that man was ever convicted.

That young man was one of the flower of his community; everybody had unlimited confidence in him and an utter lack of confidence in the court-martial. A grave injustice was done. I am sure not many cases of that kind occur, but I became convinced by the experience I had with that case that it was very necessary that there should be a complete opportunity for a full review of court-martial proceedings, and I am, therefore, in entire sympathy with the provision of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that it is the purpose of the amendment we have undertaken to make to the Articles of War to provide relief in such cases. We may not have gone as far as we ought to have gone, but we have certainly taken a vast stride in the right direction. If I were to undertake to tell the Senator of instances within my knowledge similar to the one he has cited I could spend the whole day relating them; but I have purposely avoided doing so. I promised that I would at some time call attention to them; but the war is over and I do not deem it necessary in view of the evident attitude of the Senate with respect to the pending amendment. Gen. Crowder promised at the hearing in February, 1919, that within 60 days there would be practically a jail delivery of the young men who had been sent up for long terms for breaches of military discipline.

The promise was not entirely complied with; there was not a complete jail delivery in 60 days; but I believe that practically every young man who during the World War was sent to prison for long terms for breaches of military discipline has been let out. Many of them, too, who were guilty of higher grades of crime have been permitted to restore themselves to the colors by being transferrred to the disciplinary battalion and then winning their way back into the esteem of their fellows and wiping out the stigma of conviction.

I really do not know where the authority comes from that is exercised to bring about all of these results, but I do know that no man will ever question the authority which has been exercised to relieve these young men from the sentences imposed upon them.

I have some feeling about this matter, I will say to the Senator, and it is hard for me to discuss the subject without showing that feeling. It was just as easy for the Judge Advocate General, if he had seen fit to do so, to have placed a construction upon section 1189 of the Federal statutes that would have enabled him to do all the things that this bill does now, but to have done so would not have been in conformity with the wishes of a military autocrat, who did not want the military command to be interfered with by anybody anywhere. So that, taking the case the Senator has cited, there might have been a complete miscarriage of justice by the court-martial, evidence might have been admitted there that was prejudicial to a substantial right of the accused; there might have been other irregularities that affected his substantial rights, and yet if the record had been regular on its face there was, according to the Crowder construction of the statute, no relief.

All in the world that the Judge Advocate could do under his construction of the law was to send that record back to the approving authority—that is, the commanding officer of that young man, the authority that appointed the court, and advise them—not direct them to set aside the judgment—but merely advise them, which advice could be entirely ignored by the approving authority. It frequently happened that the approving authority, namely, the commanding officer who appointed the court, set aside the judgment of the court and ordered a retrial, and sometimes a man who had been acquitted in the first instance was convicted or sentenced for a higher grade of crime than he was sentenced for in the first instance. That may be all right in the autocratic military sense, but it is un-American, particularly in a time of war, when the flower and chivalry of American youth was serving in the Army. It might be all right to the military mind to treat a lot of hoboes in that way and not give them the right of appeal anywhere, but here were the sons, the husbands, and the brothers of the best people in America, and, as in the illustration the Senator has cited—and I could give hundreds of further illustrations—to arbitrarily send the young man to the penitentiary without giving him a chance of review was outrageous to every sense of public justice. It was for that reason that I took this matter up as soon as the war was over; in fact, I commenced it while the war was on. It has been an uphill fight ever since.

I am not going to discuss it again, but I refer to the fact that in order to carry out the views of Gen. Crowder in this matter the Secretary of War allowed to be constituted in the War Department a propaganda bureau that, at Government expense, sent out letters prepared by a man or men in the Judge Advocate General's office espousing his theory. Such letters were sent to lawyers and people generally throughout the country to prejudice the case that was being made to Congress in behalf of the young men in the Army.

Another thing that is included in this amendment is to give these young men the right to employ civil counsel, and it requires the court-martial to appoint civilian counsel at the request of a soldier. It requires the appointing authority to appoint military counsel as well for the man who is on trial, part of which right he never had until these articles proposed to give him the right of counsel of his own selection. In many instances the soldier was not defended at all. Now he has that right. It is an American right. Whether he chooses to exercise it or not is for him to determine, but he has the right to do it if he sees fit.

Mr. President, there are many, many provisions here which tend to mitigate the condition of a man tried by a military court. I may say that many of the provisions of Senate bill 64 are embodied in this amendment. Many of the provisions of the Kernan Board's recommendations are embodied in it, as well as many provisions proposed by the War Department. In other words, we have taken the best of it all, and after extensive hearings and after testimony of distinguished men from all parts of the country—military and civilian lawyers, professors in universities, and other men—we have formulated Articles of War which may hereafter need amendment, but which are the best we could prepare at this time; and in the last analysis, I think, they will go a long way to protect the officers and enlisted men of our Army in future.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, was this bill approved unanimously by the full committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The full committee was not there, but a quorum of the committee was there. It was approved by those who were there.

Mr. POMERENE. By a quorum?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask that I may agree with the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee just where this amendment shall go in, so as to make the bill a consistent whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that permission is granted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can agree with the chairman as to that. There will not be any change in the form of the amendment, except the numbering of the sections so as not to interfere with the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Knox	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Hale	Lenroot	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Harris	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Harrison	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sutherland
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Dillingham	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
France	Kendrick	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Frelinghuysen	Kenyon	Pomerene	Wolcott
Gerry	Keyes	Ransdell
Glass	Kirby	Sheppard

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SMOOT answered to his name when called.

Mr. MCCORMICK and Mr. WARREN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. KING, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. MCCUMBER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The READING CLERK. On page 52, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "lineal list of his own branch" and insert the words

"relative list of the Regular Army"; and, on page 53, line 2, after the word "service," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no officer shall be placed on the list below any officer to whom he is at present senior on the relative list of the Regular Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the Senator from Mississippi want the floor?

Mr. HARRISON (to Mr. WADSWORTH). You can go ahead.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It is one that was discussed somewhat the other afternoon in a colloquy between the Senator from Mississippi and myself. It will make a most profound change in the arrangement of the single list as provided in the bill.

From time to time in the past Congress, by provisions inserted in appropriation bills and other acts of legislation, has expanded one branch or another of the Army, and, as promotions have been running within the several branches, the expansion of a branch resulted in the rapid promotion of officers serving in that branch, so that the several groups of officers serving in the several branches have profited tremendously by these expansions. The Field Artillery, the Engineers, and the Coast Artillery, as I recollect, have been expanded from time to time by Congress, with the result that officers in those branches have moved up in grade.

The single-list provision, as we have it drawn in the pending bill, will result in those officers who have profited by that kind of promotion, which I shall always insist was promotion which was not earned, pausing or waiting, as it were, upon the single list for promotion until officers with equal length of service have caught up with them. We do not take away from an officer, under the provisions of the bill, anything he now has in the way of rank. It may be said, however, that we take away from him the profits which he expected to get when he made the transfer to a branch which was expanding.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi is adopted, those Coast Artillery and Field Artillery and Engineer officers who have gone far ahead of their contemporaries on account of the vicious system which has prevailed will be assured for the rest of their Army careers of staying ahead of their contemporaries until they reach the age of retirement.

In other words, where an officer happened to be in a branch which was expanding, and was promoted as the result of that expansion, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi would crystallize into law every promotion so received, which I always insisted would give the officer something he did not really earn.

It may be said that if we had no single list for promotion at all officers of the Infantry, the Cavalry, the Signal Corps, and some others, might have some chance of catching up in years to come with some of their contemporaries who have been advanced so tremendously by reason of expansions and transfers, because at least they might come to Congress later on and persuade Congress, if they could, to expand their branches so that they could catch up with their fellows. They would at least have that chance. But now that we are going to adopt the single list—and that seems to be assured, as the House has passed a provision exactly like ours—we are going to write into law that the law of promotion in the future shall run along with the single list. But by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi we would write into the law a confirmation of all these inequalities which have been created prior to this time, so that in the future the officers of like ability, of like initiative, of like force, who by accident have been left behind because their branches have not been expanded, will never be able to catch up. In other words, we make it permanent if the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is agreed to.

I think myself that in the interest of fair play to all the officers of the Army the single list for promotion should remain as it is in the bill. Otherwise the men who managed to persuade Congress in years past to expand their branches and have thereby secured promotion will remain all the time ahead of their fellows, and there will be left away back in the rear the officers of the Infantry and the Cavalry, who did not get such lucky treatment in years past, with a hopeless handicap against ever catching up with men who graduated from West Point on the very same day.

It may interest Senators, Mr. President, to know that the committee has been assisted in drafting the section for the single list promotion by two officers of the Regular Army. They graduated from West Point on the same day. One of them joined the Coast Artillery; the other one, as I recollect, joined the Infantry. A little later on during their careers the Coast Artillery was expanded, and the Coast Artillery officer jumped four years ahead of his classmate. Those two officers helped draw this provision of the pending bill, and the Coast Artillery officer says that in fairness he ought to be required to wait until his classmate overtakes him. I find that to be the spirit amongst the majority of the officers of the Army with whom I have discussed the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from New York gave to the Senate that information as an excuse why the provision was put into the bill. I judge from the closing part of his remarks that it was done at the instigation of two Army officers, who were being used as experts before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, one of whom was in the Coast Artillery and the other in the Infantry. Both those branches of the military service will greatly gain by what the Senate Military Affairs Committee proposes to do by the single list. Both men will be greatly promoted, far beyond their deserts, by the action of the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

The branches of the service in which the officers will be retarded in their promotion will not be the Coast Artillery and the Infantry, but will be the Artillery field service, the Engineers, the Ordnance, and similar branches of the military service, and I wonder not that those men who appeared before the Senate Military Affairs Committee or acted as advisers to the committee, whether they be captains, majors, or lieutenant colonels, were in favor of a provision that would greatly promote them and hold back other men in the various branches of the military service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator will yield, I will state that I used it as an illustration.

Mr. HARRISON. It was a beautiful illustration; a most apt one.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Senator has placed a wrong interpretation upon it. The Coast Artillery officer to whom I referred will be held back under the provisions of our bill, and he thinks it fair that he should be.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the Senator sure, and can he tell the Senate that the Coast Artillery officer will be promoted by the passage of the single list?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; he will not be; not by our provision for the single list.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator investigated that proposition?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have.

Mr. HARRISON. He is sure of that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I am reliably informed, by military experts who have studied it, that officers in both the Coast Artillery and the Infantry will be greatly promoted, and it will be officers in other branches of the service, namely, ordnance, the Engineers, and the Artillery field service, who will be delayed in future promotions if the bill should pass in its present form.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The three branches of the service which have secured advantage in the past by reason of special treatment from Congress have been the Engineers, the Field Artillery, and the Coast Artillery. The committee provision requires those men to wait until their contemporaries catch up with them.

Mr. HARRISON. That is afield of the question. Of course, the Infantrymen and the Coast Artillerymen would naturally be in favor of the provision. The Senator conscientiously believes that the provision for the single list is in the interest of fair play; that it will promote better feeling and a better spirit in the Army. I take a different view. I think it is not in the interest of fair play, and that it will create demoralization in the Army. If the Senator will bear with me, I will try to tell him why I so believe.

These men went into certain branches of the service not solely by election, but partly because they won the right to go into those branches. The Engineer Corps is reckoned to be a service which needs the very best officers in the Army. It demands men of the highest order of intelligence and special technical training. That is proven by the fact that when men graduate from West Point only those who make the highest grades, who graduate at the very top, are permitted to go into the Engineers. The next in order are assigned to the Artillery, and so on down the line. The Infantry, I believe, is the last in order. So these men when they go to West Point study hard, they train themselves, they prepare themselves in order to make the highest grade, so that they can go into the particular branch of the military service where promotion is naturally the fastest. So these men did not get into the Engineer Corps simply by election, but they won their places, and that over very hard competition. They have studied and worked hard in order to get into that particular branch. So it is with the Artillery.

These men have traveled faster, as the Senator from New York says, than those in the Infantry branch or some other branches of the service. Now, while the bill does not absolutely demote anyone, if that provision is adopted it will indirectly demote some, and it is for that reason that I do not believe it is in the interest of fair play, and it will demoralize those branches of the service which have been expecting promotion.

I have placed in the RECORD how many numbers the Engineers would lose by virtue of this single list. It will affect the Field Artillery in about the same proportion. An engineer who graduated in the class of 1903, if he was a major at the outbreak of the war, reasonably expected, because of the enlargement of the Army and the increased number of officers created, that he would find greater promotion. Ordinarily, without the adoption of this legislation, the men in those particular classes would be promoted, say, to the rank of lieutenant colonel in six weeks. With the bill passing, those men can not be promoted for five or six years. It operates as a stop watch, so to speak, and it is indirectly a demotion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to ask the Senator if I understood him to say that there was an officer who within six weeks would be a colonel?

Mr. HARRISON. Not a colonel, but who would be a lieutenant colonel in six weeks, promoted from the grade of major, if the bill did not pass with the single-list provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator that he will be a lieutenant colonel whether this passes or not, because the bill is to result in the expansion of the whole Army so much that every man who is close to the top in the list of majors in the Regular Army to-day can not help being a lieutenant colonel shortly after the enactment of this law.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; that is the way it ought to work, and that is the way one would expect it to work; but that is not the way it does work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He would have his lieutenant colonelcy in any event.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask the Senator from New York——

Mr. WADSWORTH. But he would not be so close to a colonelcy.

Mr. HARRISON. No; a lieutenant colonelcy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He would not go clear up through and land at the top of the lieutenant colonels, close to a colonelcy, but he would have to wait as lieutenant colonel until other majors of equal length of service caught up with him.

Mr. HARRISON. Suppose a major should have to wait two years or one year before he would become a lieutenant colonel under the operations of the present law, if the single list is adopted he might have to wait six or seven or eight years to be a lieutenant colonel. Is not that true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under any such case he would not wait that long. The provisions of the bill would force him up to a lieutenant colonelcy.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the contention of the Senator that he would not have to wait at all, that he would not be retarded until all the other officers in the various branches caught up with him?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That particular officer would not have to. If he is up close to a lieutenant colonelcy now, the operation of the single list that we provide in the bill will not prevent him from becoming a lieutenant colonel in the future. He will go into it as a result of the increased numbers of officers in the Regular Army. We are doubling the number of officers.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand. It would appear to anyone that these officers would be promoted because you are doubling the number of officers, but in particular branches of the service you are holding them back until all the officers in every other branch catch up with them. That is what the Senator said in his remarks on last Saturday.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming a question before he asks me anything, because he was on the subcommittee, I believe. Did the subcommittee that drafted this provision in the bill have any military expert before them except one out of the Coast Artillery and one out of the Infantry? Did they have a single Engineer officer to testify before the committee and give his views?

Mr. WARREN. First, I did not serve on the subcommittee.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I withdraw the question.

Mr. WARREN. I was there incidentally as an outsider, and I was there often enough to know, with the great abundance of evidence that we had, that there were very many who gave their opinions as to the list who might be called experts.

As to the Artillery which the Senator mentioned, it is this way: The Artillery formerly was but 4,000, 5,000, or 6,000 at the outside, all told, and Coast and Field Artillery were all in one branch. Coast and Field have been since separated and enlarged three or four or more times as fast and as much, especially the Field Artillery, as the other branches. We attempted, but it did not seem to bear the fruit that it ought to have done, to take into the Field Artillery, for instance, some of the officers from the other lines, such as Infantry and Cavalry, but that attempt was not successful, and the result was that the Artillery officers went up from second lieutenants to majors, while officers in the Infantry, equally good, equally patriotic, by reason of their nonincrease, remained as first lieutenants or possibly captains.

Speaking of the men whom the Senator mentioned as being held back, look where other men have been held back in other branches of the service. If they had increased the Infantry as fast as the Artillery it would have been just the same all along, of course; but with the legislation that we had, great hardship has been placed upon those men in the service. In the Cavalry, for instance, it was even worse.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator in that connection, was he not chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs at that time?

Mr. WARREN. I was not chairman at that time.

Mr. HARRISON. Then was he not one of the most influential members of the committee when they made it possible for these men in these particular branches to obtain this promotion? And if it is such an outrage now, why did not the Senator see it as an outrage then?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator in the first place is rather hasty in that conclusion. At one time, a long time ago, I was chairman of that committee. I think one small advance in the Artillery was made then, and we expected that other branches would soon be raised comparatively with that, and so it drifted along until the years have passed, and that, like a good many other things, got moss-grown; but the fact remains, just the same, that it is an unjust thing to take one branch of the Army and leave it where it stands and take other branches and move them up and not consider the rank of those officers attached to the various branches.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator's committee here do that same thing with the Medical Corps and the chaplains, and was it not done by the chairman of the Senate committee last Saturday when he had five colonels added to the Judge Advocate General's office and made it retroactive?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator speaks of the Medical Corps. The Senator knows, of course, that it is entirely apart in many ways from the balance of the Army in that promotion there is according to years of service. That is another plan that has been presented heretofore to committees of Congress, to see whether all Army promotions, line and staff, should not be made in that way. It has been made in that way only in the Medical Corps, and it has been that way for a great many years in the Medical Corps.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand.

Mr. WARREN. They require there additional education in medicine, chemistry, and surgery. As to the chaplains, it has been and is yet a sort of prerogative for the Executive to appoint men from civil life, and it was only very lately that there was any promotion there at all. They went in as captains, remained as captains, and went out of the service as captains; but of late years there has been some promotion provided for them.

Mr. HARRISON. By an amendment adopted at the instance of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] last Saturday provision was made for five new colonels in the Judge Advocate General's office, and the first part of that amendment reads:

> Immediately upon the passage of this act the number of colonels in the Judge Advocate General's office shall be increased by five, and the vacancies thus created shall be filled by promotion as heretofore provided by law.

Mr. WARREN. That is another branch. In the Ordnance branch it has been provided that preferment could be permitted in the lower grades because of the superior education they must have in that technical line.

Mr. HARRISON. Ordnance is taken up and put on the single list here.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is a lawyer and he knows now whether it would be well to put in too many second lieutenants in law or whether to draw from civilians men who have that good abundance of experience and knowledge which can be made useful to the Army.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator suggests a question to me like that I will state to him that I would see no objection in the world to the single list. I can understand how in years to come it might bring about a better feeling in the Army, but I am not in favor of passing a retroactive law; I am not in favor any more of that than I am in favor of passing an ex post facto law. If you are going to have a single list, I think you ought to apply it from the passage of the act, and then list your men and let them start in the various branches from the day the bill becomes a law, making no exceptions, not in the Judge Advocate General's office, not in the medical branch, nor among the chaplains of the Army. If you are going to have a single list, have one, but put them all there, but do not go back and affect men who have worked for 20 years in their particular branch in order to get these promotions and then retard them—hold them back—until everyone else in every other branch catches up.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator if he happened to be in the Chamber on Friday when I read a letter here?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I read that letter; and I can read two dozen on the other side.

Mr. WARREN. I have not only a dozen, but many dozen, in the last two or three years, even before this matter came up in the shape it does now; and there are 10 to 1 who write to me in that way, a great many of whom have suffered severely and suspected what was coming; and they know where the penalty—if you term it such—is going to fall if a single list prevails.

Mr. HARRISON. If one who is going to be adversely affected by it, as in the Engineers, or in the Field Artillery, or in the ordnance, should write the Senator and say he is in favor of the single list because of its effect on these men, he is a curiosity, and I should like to see such a letter as that.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that the Army as a class is perhaps no different from any other class of people. Everyone in it would like the law so that it would benefit him particularly, but, of course, it is not possible to fix things so that all of them may have exactly what they want, because if they had, the man with the advantage of this minute would be given a further advantage, while the one who suffers a disadvantage at present falls back further and is more dissatisfied.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator understands my position. All my amendment does is to provide, if they fix a single list, that it shall be done from the passage of the bill, and then made to apply from that time. What the Senator proposes to do is to go back, and every man that is affected in his climb for promotion is retained until all the other fellows in relative rank catch up. That is the main difference.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is one exception. There are 150 Spanish War veteran officers who were discriminated against then, and they are not provided for in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. They ought to be.

Mr. McKELLAR. The discrimination still exists under present laws.

Mr. HARRISON. They ought to be provided for.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator remembers what happened after the Civil War. Men who had been major generals went into the Regular Army as captains and below that rank. It was not considered any backward step or any discouragement particularly, as they had been volunteers and liked the Army life; but they were not put in, because they had been major generals, over men of the Regular Army. They went to the foot of the list. These Artillery officers have had an advantage—I will not say unfair advantage, because they did not make that advantage themselves. Nevertheless it would be unfair if now, when we have the opportunity to arrange a reorganization, we did not adjust what resulted somewhat as an unfairness to these other men in other branches; and to continue this promotion straight from to-day would leave a greatly preferred class, affecting unfavorably other officers who have fought just as valiantly and were just as good soldiers.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator from Wyoming to think that this will be unfair to certain men in the Army—the adoption of the single list with its retroactive features.

Mr. WARREN. I believe the Senator must agree with me that in legislation we must consider the greatest good to the greatest number. I contend that there is no way known yet to the members of the Military Committee of long service whereby we can start on a general reorganization that some officer from his standpoint does not think that he has been legislated against. I was like the Senator when the matter first came before the committee in early times, and it took me some time to study the situation and become convinced that the one list was the way; and ever since then, in a further study of it without prejudice at all, because I have no interest in anyone who could possibly be affected by it, I have decided in my own mind that this is the nearest of all propositions to absolute equity and fairness to the officers.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think that in putting this legislation upon the statute books it would be fairer for us to date the application of the single list from the passage of the act, so that these unfair practices or unfair promotions in various branches might then be eliminated; that it would cause much less demoralization and would help the situation very greatly? The other policy compels you to go back and take away from a very deserving class those things that they have very rightly earned.

Mr. WARREN. We take away nothing. On the other hand, if we do what the Senator suggests, if we take away anything now we would take away dozens where one is taken out otherwise, but in neither case are we taking anything away.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator and myself just disagree on that. I think when a man has worked his way for 20 years in the Army, and chosen one particular branch of the Army and was admitted in that branch because of his peculiar qualification and singular fitness, because of his training and the high marks he made at West Point, where before the war started he knew in a certain time he would be promoted to the rank above, we should not now go ahead and clip his wings and destroy his hope and break the promise we have held out to him, and say that he must hold that same rank for years yet to come. It looks to me as if it is the same as if a merchant should employ a man in his store and say, "I will give you for the first year $100 a month, the second year $150 a month, the third year and each year thereafter a $50 a month increase," and at the end of three years, when the man knew and expected that his salary should be increased, the merchant should say, "No; you can not get any more increase; I am going to hold you back until all the other men in my employ catch up with you in salary."

Taking not into consideration the peculiar qualifications he has or the kind of service that he is rendering, he is held back merely in order to let the other officers catch up. That is what is proposed in the bill. Certain opportunities were given to the Engineer Corps; certain requirements were laid down for them, and they were told that they would be promoted within a certain time. The Senator from New York shakes his head; but throughout the country, I dare say, there are officers in the Engineer Corps who before the war, around their firesides at night, talking to their wives, were laying plans to build some home or to make some investment, on the theory that at a certain time they would be promoted and get an increased salary. They laid their plans; they made their investments, and they expected the Government of the United States to keep its promises. Here, however, at this time there is brought in an Army reorganization bill in which the promise made to them is broken; they are held at the same rank, and, of course, they may not meet their obligations. When you let the single list apply from the passage of the act then you take away from the men in the Infantry or the other branches not something that they did not have, but, if it is made retroactive, there will be taken away from the artillerymen and the engineers those things that they expected and which under the law they acquired.

This is the first time in the history of the country that such legislation has ever been attempted to be passed which is retroactive in its features. In the nineties a provision was enacted somewhat along this line, but it was made to apply from the passage of the act; there was not put into it retroactive features that took away from men those things which they had acquired from their Government.

Instead of bringing about a better spirit in the Army, as the committee no doubt expects it will, as no doubt was stated by officers in the Infantry and the Coast Artillery, on whose advice and suggestions the Senate Military Affairs Committee relied, it seems to me that it will create demoralization in the Army. It is all wrong.

How can an officer in the Engineer Corps or in the Artillery who, under the promotion plan that has been approved by the Government in the past and which he expected to be permanent, has built his hopes have very much enthusiam for the service when you stop him by the passage of this bill and say, "Hold on, old boy, wait until everybody else in the Army in your rank catches up with you"? A better feeling would be created, it seems to me, if the single list were applied from the passage of the act and its retroactive features were eliminated.

Recently I read in one of the Army and Navy journals that an officer in the Marine Corps was tried by a court-martial and was reduced in rank 10 numbers. In the Marine Corps that is, perhaps, thought to be very severe punishment; and yet the tabulation which I presented to the Senate on Friday last, and which is in the RECORD, shows that while officers who are now majors will not actually be reduced in rank, they will be retarded from advancement until indirectly the result will be in some instances a demotion not of ten numbers but of eleven hundred numbers.

It seems to me, Mr. President and Senators, that in passing this bill we sit here as a court-martial. Officers are on trial to-day in the Engineer branch of the service and in the Artillery branch of the service, and they are not even allowed to be heard.

The committee had none of them before it in order to get their viewpoint, but they had the General Staff, perhaps, to send some one down; and there came infantrymen and coast artillerymen, but no Engineer officer presented his claims to the committee; and yet by the passage of the bill we practically court-martial these officers and cause their demotion by a thousand numbers. You are passing sentence on them, and you are not allowing them even to file a plea or be heard.

If it is desired to promote the morale of the Army, if a better spirit and more enthusiasm are desired, let us apply the single list, but make it prospective, not retroactive. My amendment will accomplish that end and nothing more than that, so that from the passage of the bill a single list will be provided for without the retroactive feature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator from Mississippi about the injustice which he contends is going to be done by this legislation to some officers in the service. Take the very cases to which he refers. He says that those officers have worked their way to their present rank. That I can not concede. They have not worked their way to their present rank. Their present rank has not been earned; it has come about by reason of the fact that Congress, with no regard whatsoever to promotion or its problems, has created vacancies in the branch of the service in which these officers were serving, and they have automatically moved up into those vacancies. It can not, therefore, be said that they have worked their way to the rank which they now hold.

The committee wants that condition stopped. That practice has kept the Army divided into cliques for years and years. Each branch would come to Congress and try to get itself expanded. As Gen. Pershing said in his testimony, the average Army officer goes around with a reorganization Army bill in his pocket, generally for the purpose of reorganizing his own branch of the service and in such way that he will get promotion. That is just what has been done in the past, and the officers to whom the Senator from Mississippi refers are the very officers who have profited by that system.

The Senator from Mississippi constantly refers to the Coast Artillery officer who advised us on some of the technical details of the single list. That officer suffers by it in the same way as is described by the Senator from Mississippi, but he is man enough to say that he has had an unfair advantage over his colleagues; that there is no reason why he should reach his colonelcy so far ahead of officers of equal merit and of equal length of service, and that he can get to the grade of brigadier general before they will have a chance even to be colonel.

Mr. HARRISON. What is he now, a colonel or a major?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He is a captain now.

Mr. HARRISON. On the General Staff?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. HARRISON. Is he not working under the General Staff?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; he did not come from the General Staff to us at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I never said he came from the General Staff.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, regarding the Coast Artillery——

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have had the same expansion that the Engineers have had.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and the letter which I read here on Friday last was from a Coast Artillery officer who has had no staff promotion but has simply been in the field at all times. He loses many files, but still asks us to keep the line and the staff on a general list.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I recall, the Field Artillery is the branch which has received the best treatment of all.

Mr. WARREN. It has.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are men serving to-day as majors of Field Artillery whose contemporaries are at the foot of the list of captains of Infantry; there is a spread of nine years between them. Those Field Artillery officers have not earned, they have done nothing to merit, that promotion, but it is because the Field Artillery was expanded by Congress, so that vacancies were created and they moved up.

The House committee has a provision in its bill identical with that in the Senate committee bill without the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi; and the Chief of Field Artillery, Gen. Snow, who certainly has the good of his branch of the service in mind, appears before the House Committee on Military Affairs and says that he is in favor of the single list as provided in the pending bill, even though the Field Artillery officers will have to pause for a while and let their colleagues catch up with them.

The trouble with the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is that it will not do away with the discontent in the Army to-day, but it will perpetuate for 20 years by act of Congress the inequalities that exist to-day.

The Congress has never before legislated on this matter of promotion for the Army at large. Prior to this time, and at this time, promotion has run and it is now running inside the branches of the Army. Infantry officers are promoted inside the Infantry branch, and the Cavalry and the Field Artillery and all the other branches are promoted in the same way. If we establish by law a single list governing promotions and provide the initial single list from which it will all start, as we propose to do, and then put in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, we are going to put officers of the Field Artillery, of the Engineers, and of the Coast Artillery forever ahead of their colleagues by act of Congress, and their colleagues of equal service and of equal age will never be able to catch up with them; in other words, we shall have crystallized the abuse in the statutes.

The Senator from Mississippi talks about the morale and contentment in the service. I leave it to the common sense of Senators what effect such a provision would have. It would mean that it would be perfectly hopeless for an officer to secure promotion whose branch has not been influential enough in years gone by to get expansion by acts of Congress; it would destroy the whole thing and we would not have a single list for 20 years.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the question to ascertain if I understand the situation. Did the expansion acts of which the Senator has been speaking give anything resembling a guaranty as to what should be done in the year 1920?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all; nothing has been guaranteed these officers.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. Then, as I understand, all they lose is something in the future.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Undivided profits.

Mr. LODGE. No; not undivided profits, for profits that are undivided have been made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Prospective profits.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, prospective profits; that is what they are losing; they are losing a hope, an expectation in the future.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Is it possible that a law can be called retroactive because it deprives a man of a hope in the future?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think so.

Mr. LODGE. I wanted to see if I had the matter clearly in my mind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator has hit the nail exactly on the head.

Mr. LODGE. For in that case, then, all laws similar to the one now proposed would become ex post facto laws, so that after a corps had once been expanded the law could never be altered, because hope would be taken away, and by the establishment of a single list ultimately these officers would lose their prospective profits.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly. My hope and prayer is, let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts, that we will provide for a single list, place it on the statute books, and stop the lobbying that has been going on. Congress will never be free from lobbying on the part of the different branches of the Army until we put all the officers in the Army on one single list for promotion. If we provide for it in such a way as to perpetuate the injustices of to-day, we shall have caused more damage than good.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator. In the past I have served on the Committee on Military Affairs, and it seemed to me then, as it seems to me now, that a single list was very needful. At every session of Congress almost there is some group of officers lobbying to enlarge their particular branch, so that they may secure promotion ahead of their fellows. They have succeeded in one or two instances—perhaps in two or three—because of the fact that an enlargement of a particular corps became necessary. The result is that injustice has permeated the entire Army, so that we have officers of different length of service with conflicting promotions, with conflicting rank, and officers who ought to have the same rank are separated, perhaps as the Senator has said, as I recall, by as many as nine years——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nine years.

Mr. LODGE. By the accident of legislation or by lobbying. If anyone wants to know concerning the lobby on this bill, he has nothing to do but to look at the corridors of the Capitol when this bill is up.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, speaking about justice, these men in the Field Artillery and the Engineers and the Coast Artillery have had this advanced rank coming to them not by competitive examinations, not by competing with other officers of the same age and the same length of service—they have had it coming to them by accident. They have had increased pay all these years over their fellows; they have had better quarters in the Army posts; they have outranked their fellows and enjoyed all the privileges of higher rank. They have had no moral right to it; it has simply come to them in this accidental way. Now, it is contended that it will be an act of injustice to ask them to wait a while until their colleagues can enjoy the same advantages, to have an equitable arrangement by which men can go up through those grades and overtake their classmates who graduated on the same day from West Point and then go on along with them.

This bill, as a matter of fact, is going to expand the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army so greatly anyway that, regardless of this single-list promotion, none of these officers to whom the Senator from Mississippi has referred are going to be retarded very long. All of them will reach higher grades at an earlier age than they ever expected when they went into the Army originally.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know whether I understand the statement of the Senator—I doubt it—but I am asking the question simply for information. I understand that each branch of the service is supposed to have a certain force for efficiency and to balance the Army, and that to that force, for the purpose of efficiency, are allotted so many officers of various ranks. Take the Engineers, for instance. I do not know how many colonels they now have in the Engineers. Possibly the Senator can suggest the number, approximately.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not remember. There is no limit to the number they may have under this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. We will assume, however, just as a hypothetical case, that a vacancy should come about in the Engineers by reason of resignation or death or otherwise of all of the colonels, or a sufficient number so that it would be necessary, for the efficiency of the Engineers, to replace them with colonels. From what source would they be provided under your bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the rest of the Army or the detached officers' list.

Mr. PITTMAN. Where would you get your Engineers from? Would you take an Infantry officer and place him as a colonel of Engineers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Undoubtedly, throughout the whole body of the Army it would be possible—there is no question about it—to find an officer who was competent to do engineer duty.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the theory?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That argument never has been used by Engineers in discussing the single list.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not using it as an argument. I was just wondering whether, in this peculiarly technical service of the Engineers, if it became necessary for the good of the service to find colonels, instead of promoting a lieutenant colonel or major, you would go into the Coast Artillery or the Infantry for that purpose, and, if you could not find competent men there, still under this law you would not be able to promote competent men in that particular branch.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that is a state of affairs that never can come about. That was all discussed by the committee. We studied that just as thoroughly as we could, with charts and illustrative diagrams, and the study showed that in the event of a vacancy occurring, we will say, in the grade of lieutenant colonel, by reason of the death of a lieutenant colonel of Engineers, if the next Engineer officer in the corps was not of sufficient rank on the promotion list to step into the shoes of the lieutenant colonel who had died, without the slightest doubt an officer from one of the other branches or the detached officers' list who stood next on the general single list for promotion could be promoted into the grade of colonel, and a transfer made from another branch to take the place of the man who died in the Engineer Corps.

Remember, we have 17,000 officers from whom to find one man to fill such a place, and it is inconceivable that you could not do it. Of course, as a matter of fact, officers are to-day transferring back and forth among the branches. Many officers transfer from Infantry to Ordnance, and from Ordnance to Cavalry, and from Field Artillery to Coast Artillery. There never has been any trouble, with the limited number of transfers that we have, in finding men to fit into the right niche, and I do not think we have anything to fear of not being able to fill places in the Engineer Corps or any other corps.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. He said a moment ago that if the proposed amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] were to become law, it would retard the practical working of the single list for 20 years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator means to say that the number that are now engaged—let us say, for instance, in the Engineer Corps—are sufficiently in line of promotion that if this were not retroactive they would still continue to act under the practical effect of the present law for 20 years?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The injustices would not terminate until about 20 years, because a lot of these men have a considerable length of time to serve before they become 64 and are retired, and they would hold that advantageous place upon the promotion list of the entire Army until they retired. They would be on top of everybody else, and they would be there by act of Congress legislating directly on the promotion problem.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So that the effect of the bill, unamended, is to arrest all promotion except along the single line, so that those that are eligible for promotion from every branch of the service may be promoted to a higher rank regardless of the division of the Army in which they are?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator says that these injustices will play a part for 20 years to come, and that it will be by an act of Congress. That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is, if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. These men occupy their advanced places by acts of the Congress, do they not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not an act of Congress affecting promotion directly.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, by act of Congress that created the branch or enlarged the branch and made it possible for them to be promoted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The promotion system at the time the branches were expanded was vicious in itself. There never should have been that kind of a promotion system—promotion by a lineal list inside of a branch—and its viciousness was simply accentuated and illustrated by the effect on promotion of the acts of Congress increasing the number of officers and men in the Field Artillery, or the Coast Artillery, or the Engineers. Those acts were not acts changing in any way the system of promotion, but this bill is an act changing the system of promotion; and if we insert the Senator's amendment in this act, which is to establish a new system of promotion, we will have perpetuated the injustices of the old system for several years to come.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator whether he would change the rule at West Point touching those men who are highest on the list for graduation, that they shall enter a certain branch of the service—the Engineers, for instance, and the next on the list the Artillery, and so on?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. HARRISON. What incentive will there be for these young men who attend West Point to strive and study and train themselves in order to make the highest place, if there is no particular inducement held out to them; in other words, if the single list applies?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My opinion is that the legitimate inducement of the cadet at West Point is to join that branch of the Army where he can render the best service to his country.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But not try to join the branch where they can get the most money in the shortest time.

Mr. HARRISON. They join the Engineers, because their authorities thought they would be more proficient there than in any other branch.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; I have no objection to that; but I do not think they should join the Engineers on the theory that that is the place where they are going to get the biggest pay. On that theory, no one would join the Infantry under the old system.

Mr. HARRISON. Has that been the theory?
Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope not. I think not.
Mr. HARRISON. I think not, too.
Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to make promotion in the Engineers and in the Artillery and in every other branch of the service run along in a uniform manner, with no discriminations between them.
Mr. HARRISON. I think that is perfectly all right if you will make it apply from the passage of this bill, so that it will not go back and affect these people in the past.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].
Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.
The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Overman	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Pittman	Townsend
Dial	Keyes	Pomerene	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Glass	Lenroot	Sheppard	Warren
Harris	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Harrison	McNary	Smith, Md.
Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.
The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.
Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. KING, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. HALE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I doubt our ability to get a quorum at this hour, and I move that the Senate adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 20, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 19, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.
The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We would abide with Thee, our Heavenly Father, in the sacred attitude of prayer before entering upon the duties of the hour, that we may receive new inspiration and strength to sustain us.
I am come, said the Master, that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly.
To live, to think, to will, to do things worth while, is the larger life; and so we pray for that life, that we may be with Thee, live with Thee, for Thee. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 17, 1920, and of Sunday, April 18, 1920, was read and approved.

COTTON.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from Gov. Elect John M. Parker, of Louisiana, on the Comer amendment to the Agriculture bill. Gov. Parker is an experienced planter and merchant, and I regard his opinion as of value.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, April 13, 1920.

Hon. L LAZARO,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. LAZARO: From what I understand of the Comer amendment, it provides that at least 50 per cent of any cotton tendered for delivery on contract in the New York or New Orleans markets shall be middling or above, the remainder to be of any other of the standard grades, at option of deliverer. This would tend to restrict the quality and character of cotton that is tenderable on contract, and would naturally handicap the deliverer and benefit the receiver. The result would be a contract more favorable to the spinner and possibly less favorable to the producer. It would probably enhance the value of the contract as compared with the spot basis.
Any further restriction as to the kind of cotton that may be delivered on contract will naturally make that much less ready outlet for the producer.
Owing to the wide margin between the raw material and the finished product, and also labor conditions, spinners have found it to their advantage during the past few years to use only the better grades of cotton and have neglected the lower grades. The higher grades no doubt permit them to obtain a greater production in a given time and is more profitable to them. The discount on the lower grades—for instance, 3 cents below middling for strict low middling and about 8 cents below middling for low middling—seems rather excessive. In the crop of 1919–20 there is a great quantity of low-grade cotton, which spinners show little inclination to use, notwithstanding the big discounts at which such qualities are offering, and the greatest assistance that could possibly come to the cotton producer would be some means of stimulating a demand for the low grades. The contract market at the present time represents the value only of good grade white cotton, and so far as the contract market is concerned the lower grades of good sound cotton, say good ordinary and strict good ordinary, fair color, as well as low and strict low middling, spotted, off-colored, and light tinged, all of good spinnable value, might just as well not exist.
Thanking you for your kindly letter and with kind regards, I am,
Very truly, yours,
JNO. M. PARKER.

APPOINTMENT OF A SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that what I have to say is exactly a correction of the RECORD, but if I may be indulged for a moment I desire to call attention to the fact that on Friday last a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules amending the rules of the House was adopted which I fear, by implication, might go further than was intended. Section 7 of Rule I reads as follows:

He shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment: Provided, however, That in case of his illness he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding 10 days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore to act during his absence.

There was reported from the Committee on Rules a proposition which amended the first part of the rule, and in the RECORD of Friday, April 16, 1920, it reads:

Resolved, That section 7 of Rule I be amended so as to read:
"He shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond three legislative days."

It ends there and does not contain the proviso. By implication that might repeal the proviso in the rule. That, of course, was not desired or intended. I therefore ask unanimous consent that section 7 of Rule I may be so amended as that it will read:

He shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond three legislative days: Provided, however, That in case of his illness he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding 10 days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore to act during his absence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to amend the rule in the manner suggested. Is there objection?
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection and, indeed, that was the intention of the Committee on Rules. It was not intended that any modification should be made except that the first clause should be amended substituting three days for one. I am very glad to have the gentleman from Tennessee call attention to it.
Mr. GARRETT. I trust the gentleman from Kansas will pardon me for injecting myself into the matter at this time. I looked for the gentleman from Kansas, but did not see him on the floor, and thought that this should be corrected at once.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I just want to mention the fact that it takes Democratic assistance to carry out Republican intention.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is very clear that it was intended that this first clause only should be amended, and this is merely an interpretation of that intention.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.
There was no objection.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, April 22 is the anniversary of the beginning of the construction of the great State of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent to address the House on that day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for 20 minutes, on the subject of Oklahoma, its agricultural resources and prospects.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that on April 22, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, he be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the subject of Oklahoma. Is there objection?
Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that the day when the governor was originally inaugurated for the Territory?

Mr. HOWARD. No; that is the anniversary of April 22, 1889, the opening of the first part of Oklahoma's white settlement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BILLS RESPECTING A BONUS FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand the rule correctly, that all legislation proposing bonuses to soldiers shall go to the Committee on Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. That is the rule.

Mr. LITTLE. I introduced some legislation of that kind some time ago, which was inadvertently sent to the Committee on Rules. I am offering some more legislation now, and I hope that rule will be followed in its reference. I wanted to be sure that I was not mistaken.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Calendar for Unanimous Consent is in order to-day, and the Clerk will call the first bill.

AQUEDUCT BRIDGE, POTOMAC RIVER.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10328) to amend an act approved May 18, 1916, entitled "An act to provide for the removal of what is known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in the place thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILITARY PARK, PLAINS OF CHALMETTE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5918) in reference to a national military park on the Plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, when this bill came up several weeks ago it was objected to, and in accordance with the rules controlling or governing the Unanimous Consent Calendar it was stricken therefrom, but was restored in hopes of a happier fate on a better day. I thought, in view of the sentiment that is inseparately associated with the Plains of Chalmette and the magnificent victory achieved by American arms down there on January 8, 1815, that I would again place it before the House, in the hope that I might be as successful as the old woman in the beautiful story of appealing to Philip. I dare say that you know it, but I will tell it again, for sometimes a story carries more conviction than all of the logic in the world, and a good story like this immortal classic may be told any number of times.

I know you all remember it. It is the story of the old woman who said, when Philip turned her down curtly, "I will appeal, sir, from that decision," and he said in a very ironical tone, "Appeal, madam; to whom?" Her reply was, "I will appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober." I do not mean that any of the gentlemen who objected to this bill were intoxicated with passion or otherwise, but I thought I would appeal to them in a more generous mood to-day and get them to consider the splendid sentimentalities and all that lies behind this really magnificent work of the Colonial Dames and other great historical societies down there in Louisiana who are endeavoring to perpetuate the glories of a conflict which I thought would never fade away from America's mind. I say with all the feeling I am capable of, Mr. Speaker, that when I introduced this bill and saw it come to the floor with a favorable report, I thought that every Member of this House would gladly approve of it, for you know that that was the one great conflict that redeemed the War of 1812 from unparalleled calamities and catastrophies, which terminated in a national miserere—the burning of this Capitol. That battle down by the levees of the Mississippi gave joy to every child in the United States of America after gloom had hung over this country. It brought again renewed hope into the minds of our men and women. It is inseparably associated with all that is great in the martial chapters of this country and inseparably connected with the fame of the men who left Kentucky, Tennessee, and what is known now as Mississippi, and went down 1,200 miles and arrived in New Orleans, ragged and in their bare feet, and fought the most memorable contest in that section of the country, and, according to the best historians, maintained the Louisiana Purchase forever, and freed it from legal and diplomatic dispute, kept all of that part of America west of the Mississippi for future admission into this Union, and made possible, of course, that which lies beyond the west of it. [Applause.] My friends, that battle brings you back to the early pioneer days, before the "Days of old"; "Days of gold"; "Days of forty-nine." It carries you back to the days of the raft, when there were only one or two steamboats on the Potomac and Hudson and none on the Mississippi. When there were no railroads and no highways, when men came down largely by their instincts than by compass, and fought out that great and splendid battle which shall be written across the hearts and minds of all Americans, under circumstances and conditions that ought to thrill the heart of America until the last chapter is written in her history.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DYER. I do not think there is any question as to the historical aspect nor what a splendid thing it would be to establish such a park, but will the gentleman tell us what amount of money will probably be involved in the enactment into law of this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. There will be no money involved in the enactment of this bill.

Mr. DYER. Section 4 says——

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will pardon me, I intend to propose an amendment striking out all after the period in line 10, which would leave it a direction, pure and simple, to the Army engineers who are already in New Orleans, engineers on the Mississippi River Commission to make a survey of the field on which was fought the Battle of New Orleans, and report back to the Congress. The House has ordered, I understand, the survey of rivers, one of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said he could jump across. I submit, fellow Members, that sentiment should not be lost sight of altogether, even in this prosaic age. [Applause.] I dare say, with all the feeling I can summon to my aid that Jackson and Chalmette, the Leonidas and Thermopylas of our country, should be in mind of the Members in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will.

Mr. BEE. Let me ask the gentleman, and in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri, is it not true that the Engineer Corps of the United States Army is so thoroughly equipped and organized with its present organization that they can make this examination and report back in the near future the necessary facts without really any expense to the Government?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The expense would be absolutely negligible. I say, gentlemen, that it would not do anything other than to give to the Congress the necessary information upon which it may at some time in the future act. As a matter of fact, the bill carries with it or the apparent disposition of the House is a Kathleen Mavourneen suggestion, "It may be for years, and it may be forever." No one can tell when Congress will act upon the information conveyed. It must have the information sought before any other legislation can be considered. There is no way of telling or declaring when such a bill will come before the House.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, if these engineers should make a report and it was favorable, the gentleman would expect to come back and ask Congress to act upon that favorable report?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would say to the gentleman from New York, who has been so courteous in reference to this whole matter, to me, that I sincerely trust that I may have the privilege of coming back here to do noble things for the people whom I now represent; but not knowing whether I will come back or not, I must answer I do not know what I will do. If I thought the exigencies required it, that there was a great demand for economy, even if there were a favorable report, I would bow in submission to the demands of the time. I would not press any further legislation. That is my answer.

Mr. SNELL. Would the gentleman think it was a good time now to enter upon such a proposition of establishing parks throughout the country that eventually will cost at least $500,000 apiece?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not believe we should embark upon that program at the present time; but this bill does not contemplate any such expenditure. It merely calls for a survey, the expense of which would be insignificant. It merely lays a foundation on which Congress may or may not build or construct a park.

Mr. SNELL. That has been my objection in considering this bill at this time. I appreciate the statement that the gentleman has made, and I agree with him up to a certain extent, but it does not seem to me that under the present condition of the Treasury it is right for this Government at this time to go on record as recognizing the possibility of establishing national parks at such a great expense as this will eventually cost.

If we take the initial step, then the next man, whether it is yourself or some one else in that district, would say, "Congress has already recognized this; they have made the report and now you should do the rest and appropriate the money." That is my feeling in the matter, and that is the reason why I have taken the stand that I have, and I say that I feel the same about any expense of any kind in any estimate in any part of the country, and I think that we should not enter upon it at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thoroughly understand and appreciate the position assumed by the gentleman from New York. I have no question about his sincerity, and I know that his opposition would be manifested whether this battle field were located in the North, East, or West. I will answer him by quoting a sentence from "Lead Kindly Light":

I do not ask to see the distant scene.
One step enough for me.

It probably is sentimental to the extent of being tearful, but in my opinion it covers the question propounded by the gentleman very succinctly and well. I do not know what the future will produce. As a matter of fact, I would not want to look into it. I honestly believe, though, and I say it now, that I hope in the years to come, when this country does find itself in a position to do so financially, that all of these great and splendid battle fields, that ought to be entwined with the most beautiful memories in American history, will be made a trust by the people of this country and guarded in such a way as to suggest to all generations that we are not unmindful of the havoc and the suffering and the tears and the trials of the people who made this country great and splendid. I want these magnificent victories of the days when our Republic was young to be kept alive. I want them and their glories maintained lest we forget the days when our country was a vast wilderness from the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean, the days when even the eastern bank of the Father of Waters was barely known, when Kentucky was the dark and bloody ground, and Tennessee and Mississippi, whose sons marched with Old Hickory over what is to-day a great highway to repel an invader, were yet in the making; the day of romance and adventure when the brave hearts in the bosoms of women and the breasts of men beat down the difficulties of the wilderness and made a land that to-day is a justification of the apothegm: The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.

I hope that somebody will come after me when this country is in a position to afford it financially—if we are going to rest even for a time upon dollars and throttle sentiment—I hope some one will come after me and press such a measure, not only for Chalmette, but for other great and splendid places in this country, where American arms vindicated all that the people struggled and fought for during the memorable epochs that led to the greatness and glory of this country. [Applause.]

The Battle Abbey is a shrine to the people of England. The field of Waterloo speaks to all of Europe that which the written word can never convey. Chalmette should be as dear to Americans.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. I see from this report that this bill was submitted to the Secretary of War, and he submitted it to the United States Engineers' office for report, and that a report has been made.

I do not see what could be accomplished now by limiting the bill simply to making another report when a report has been made and submitted and recommended.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You will see that that was purely tentative, and was not carried out in the detail that they promised in the report.

Mr. DYER. I doubt if any other report is necessary unless we want to pass the whole bill as written. I move to strike out——

Mr. O'CONNOR. I move to strike out——

Mr. DYER. I think we had better find out if there is going to be any objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am appealing to you not to make an objection.

Mr. DYER. I ask for the regular order in order to find out if there is objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, purely in the interest of economy I feel obliged to object to the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

CLAIMS OF KLAMATH TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5163) authorizing the Klamath Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The bill should be reported, or it should be explained by some one.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that was up about a month ago on unanimous-consent day; its main purpose is to authorize the Klamath, Moadac, and Yahooskin Tribes of Indians to take into the Court of Claims a controverted matter concerning their reservation boundaries. It authorizes the Court of Claims to investigate the merits of their claim that they have lost some 400,000 acres of land from the land which they reserved to themselves when they ceded a much larger area to the United States. And if the Court of Claims finds that their claim is a just one, they will not be paid any more than the value of the land at the time of the loss, and that would be something under a dollar an acre.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5163) authorizing the Klamath Tribe of Indians to submit Claims to the Court of Claims.

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Klamath Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribe from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribe, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums, including gratuities, heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the tribe, or band or bands thereof, may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment; suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act, and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant; and any band or bands of said tribe, or any other tribe or band of Indians the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits, may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Klamath Tribe, or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribe or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That if it be determined by the Court of Claims in the said suit herein authorized that the United States Government has wrongfully appropriated any lands belonging to the said Klamath Tribe of Indians, damages therefor shall be confined to the value of the said land at the time of said appropriation, together with interest at 3 per cent per annum, and the decree of the Court of Claims with reference thereto, when satified, shall annul and cancel all claim and title of the said Klamath Tribe or any other tribe or band of Indians in and to said lands, as well as all damages for all wrongs and injuries, if any, committed by the Government of the United States with reference thereto.

SEC. 4. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action, the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians, under contracts negotiated and approved by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribe or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fee shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribe or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

The following committee amendments were severally read and agreed to:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "Klamath," insert "and Modac."

Line 4, strike out the word "Tribe" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Tribes," and after the word "Indians" insert "and the Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians, parties to the treaty with the United States, concluded October 14, 1864 (16 Stat. L., p. 707)."

Page 3, line 7, strike out the words "Klamath Tribe" and insert the word "Indians."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

IOWA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 806) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians against the United States.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on principles of justice and equity and as upon a full and fair arbitration of the claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians, of Oklahoma, against the United States, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States, for the determination of the amount, if any, which may be legally or equitably due said tribe of Indians under any treaties or laws of Congress or under any stipulations or agreements, whether written or oral, entered into between said tribe of Indians and the United States or its authorized representatives, or for the failure of the United States to pay any money which may be legally or equitably due said tribe of Indians: Provided, That the court shall also consider and determine any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counter claims which the United States may have against the said Iowa Tribe of Indians. A petition in behalf of said Indians shall be filed in the Court of Claims within one year after the passage of this act, and the Iowa Tribe of Indians shall be the party plaintiff and the United States the party defendant, and the petition may be verified by the attorney employed by the said Iowa Tribe of Indians to prosecute their claim under this act, under contract to be approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the facts alleged in said petition. Upon the final determination of the cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees and expenses as the court shall find to be reasonably due to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said Iowa Tribe of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums of money found due said Iowa Tribe of Indians: Provided, That in no case shall the fees and expenses decreed by said court be in excess of 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROOSEVELT NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5006) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt National Park.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington reserves the right to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Before we proceed to consider this bill, Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to know what it is that is proposed to be done in this great park, where a million acres are to be added to it. There are to be no monopolies. Why should this national park be different from the other national parks in that respect?

Mr. ELSTON. The reason why an area of a million acres is included would be very easily understood if the gentleman had an appreciation of the topography of the country that will be taken in. I do not believe that there is any part of the territory that is on an average below 7,000 or 8,000 feet elevation. The whole of this area comprises what might be called an Alpine country. It is under a deep mantle of snow during eight months of the year. During three or four months of the year it is one of the grandest scenic places in the world. It comprises some of the most wonderful scenic features aggregated in any one locality in the United States or in America.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That being so, the land would still have all these scenic features, even if it remains as it is, as a part of a forest reserve. But if it is made into a park a man can not go in there with a fishhook or with a gun with out becoming subject to the park regulations.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman has no doubt examined the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. I think I can assure him that those points have been pretty well covered in regard to the free entrance into the park and a reasonable use of their private holdings by settlers, mineral claimants, and all other kind of entrymen inside the park.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is not this bill simply extending the park provisions to a gigantic area, even though the gentleman says the bill is liberal in its provisions? As a matter of fact, all the regulations that now exist with regard to national parks will apply to this million acres added to it; and one reason for that, as I understand it, is that the mountain climbers from Los Angeles and San Francisco, in previous trips into the Sequoia National Park and then on in to northern California, have come upon valleys where they found sheep grazing. The sheep annoyed and interferred with the mountain climbers. Is not that one of the reasons?

Mr. ELSTON. That is decidedly not the reason.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not a reason, but, perhaps, a cause of complaint.

Mr. ELSTON. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed a moment, I think I can disabuse his mind as to those points. Whatever objections the gentleman may have with regard to the application of the national-park act to other parks, there has been a particular set of rules inserted in this bill with respect to this park. These rules and regulations are very liberal, and they are intended to cover some of the objections that the gentleman has just made. I do not believe——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is just the point. You have a national-park system, very big, very large, and very good, but with lots of rules and regulations which are necessary, whether they are oppressive to some of the people or not; but here you propose to greatly enlarge a fine national park—to make it six or seven times as large as any other, and eliminate it from the application of the rules that apply to other national parks.

Mr. ELSTON. There might be good reason for that, which I can point out to the gentleman if he will wait a moment. This country is not a grazing country or a cattle country. I am speaking now in a general sense. It is merely a wild range of mountain country with extraordinary scenery. Running through this park are the great Kings and Kern Rivers. Their canyons are comparable to the Yosemite, except that they are grander in their proportions; they are wilder, and in some respects they outdo the Yosemite. As to the Yosemite, the falls and other scenic features are more concentrated, whereas in these canyons of the Kern and Kings Rivers they are more distributed. The whole country is one mass of great giant mountain peaks, rugged upland, and deep canyons.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is all under the control of the Forest Service, with rangers and everything else provided by the Government. Now, the proposed park control would be a more intensive control by the United States, with a rim of forest-reserve territory all around it still controlled by the Federal Government.

Mr. ELSTON. As I said, for eight or nine months of the year this whole country is covered by snow. In this area there are no settlements; there is not one person who can live in this region eight months in the year. There are no settlements except temporary settlements for three months in the year by cattlemen, who drive their herds up into the high mountain meadows. Compared with the great area involved the grazing values are almost negligible.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Has it not been stated by people who are in a position to know that the scenic features of this park exceed even those of the Alps?

Mr. ELSTON. That statement has been made by John Muir, the great naturalist, and it has been made by other people of like authority, and I do not think it can be controverted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But if the people are not in there nine months in the year and there are no inhabitants, as the gentlemen say, why can it not go along as it is, as a forest reserve, rather than be placed under a more intensive administration as a national park? The bill is entitled to an objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have an answer that will meet that.

Mr. ELSTON. I hope the gentleman will withhold objection for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will withhold my objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Did not Col. Graves, who was then the United States Forester, testify before the Committee on Public Lands that a large portion of this area—not all of it, but a large part of it—was suitable only for park purposes, or in words to that effect?

Mr. ELSTON. That was the testimony of the Chief Forester, and this bill has the approval of the Department of Agriculture and of Col. Graves himself.

The only question related to the elimination of certain areas which were thought to be better for grazing or for timber culture, and those objections have been substantially met by committee amendments.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. FRENCH. I was wondering if it would be possible for waters to be stored in this proposed park for irrigation purposes?

Mr. ELSTON. Application of that kind could be entertained, and uses of that kind could be permitted in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr FRENCH. As I understand it, under the general law a right of way could be granted through a national forest reserve; but I do not understand that that could be done under the Secretary of the Interior through a national park, under a recent decision of the Secretary. I was wondering if the gentleman had taken that into consideration in framing the language of the bill?

Mr. ELSTON. This bill has been examined by all persons or associations in California that might be interested in the irrigation aspects of the case.

The fact is that the rivers and streams that come out of this territory come out at such an elevation and from such narrow canyons that it would be impossible to make any storage inside the lines of this proposed park. I have just stated that the western boundary line of this park on an average has an elevation of 7,000 or 8,000 feet. This territory is in the main range of the Sierra Nevada, reaching up to an elevation of 15,000 feet. So far as I know, there is practically no area inside of this proposed park that is suitable for the storage of water.

Mr. FRENCH. What I have in mind is this: I am in sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but it had been assumed with respect to some of the national parks that the Secretary of the Interior has authority to assist in the utilization of the water for economic uses, and then when a case was presented to him he felt that the law is actually not broad enough to give him that authority, and it seems to me that if there is any possible question of any future use covering the impounding of water, or the utilization of a right of way across a part of this proposed national park for the diverting of water, we ought specifically to set it forth in the bill that the Secretary of the Interior shall have that authority, so that no question about it will ever arise in the future.

Mr. ELSTON. That matter has never been urged by any persons whose interests might be affected.

Mr. FRENCH. I make the suggestion so that if it is necessary at all it can be inserted, because the gentleman is the one whose people are interested in this proposition, and we ought not to overlook it if there is any possible chance of it ever being needed in the future.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the gentleman will yield to me on that point, I will state that I have never heard any suggestion of impounding waters in this area that it is proposed to include in the park, but I believe that in the forest areas farther down there are plenty of places to impound water, if it is necessary for irrigation, without going into this proposed park area.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] evidently overlooks a portion of the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture when he says this bill has the approval of the Secretary and of the forester. The Secretary of Agriculture expressly withholds his approval and says this legislation ought not to be enacted. He gives his reasons. He tells about the number of settlers on lands proposed by this bill to be included within the park. His words are:

> The effect of the exclusion of cattle would be detrimental to many small ranches. There are within the area of the proposed park approximately 6,500 cattle and horses grazing under permit. A large part of the permittees are small men who have been undertaking to build up ranches in the foothills. In the majority of instances the privilege of grazing cattle in the national forest is essential to the success of maintaining these foothill homes; and the exclusion of these privileges will mean in a large number of cases not only great injury to these small ranchers but probably failure. It happens that most of the lands needed for the grazing of cattle are not of a scenic character that justifies their transfer to the status of a national park.
> The net result of the investigations is to convince the department that the measure has not given sufficient consideration to broad economic interests of the region. Lands long withdrawn and established as national forests, which are chiefly valuable and urgently needed for timber production and forestry and for range utilization, should be maintained and administered as national forests unless some urgent public reason makes their transfer to another jurisdiction for some other use necessary. No such urgency or necessity is known to exist in this case.

The Secretary points out also that efforts have been made by himself and the Secretary of the Interior to reach an agreement, but that no agreement has been reached as to definite or satisfactory boundaries, and that until these boundaries be agreed upon and defined in such a way as not to affect injuriously these settlers or interfere with the proper administration of adjacent land in charge of the Forest Service, this legislation ought not to be adopted. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman withhold the objection for a moment until I can set him straight on one item?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. ELSTON. The letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, or at least the portion that the gentleman has read here, refers entirely to the boundaries. Col. Graves, who testified before the committee for the Secretary of Agriculture, had the following to say, and this was after the letter which the gentleman has read was presented to the committee. Col. Graves testified as follows, as appears on page 34 of the hearings:

> The proposed park, I would like to say, in the first place, is one in which I am personally interested. I am in favor of a park which will include the great scenic features of the Mount Whitney region and the region of Kings and Kern Rivers. It seems to me also that it is very appropriate that this park should be named after Theodore Roosevelt.

Col. Graves and the Department of Agriculture objected only to the boundaries. These boundaries have been adjusted down to a point where they substantially agree with the suggestions made by Col. Graves. We eliminated nearly 200,000 acres after the introduction of this bill, to comply with the suggestions of Col. Graves.

The gentleman has referred to the settlers in the area of the park. The settlers mentioned in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture refer to settlers in the San Joaquin Valley outside the proposed park. They have been in the habit of sending small herds up into the mountain for the summer forage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There are private holders of land, and the minute this becomes a park up will come the demand that the Government buy them out.

Mr. ELSTON. There were large timber holdings, but we have eliminated them. There are no private holdings in there that the Government would want. There are some mineral holdings, but they have been properly safeguarded.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But sooner or later they will have to be sold to the Government.

Mr. ELSTON. If the gentleman will look at the hearings and report he will find that the idea of this park has been indorsed quite universally.

I would refer to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR], who represents the district in which this park is located. He represents the settlers which the Secretary of Agriculture has mentioned in his letter. If the gentleman wants any assurance as to the fact that these settlers are safeguarded, the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] would be able to advise how far this bill impinges on their rights. I think the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] will say that the bill is meritorious and the rights of his constituents are protected.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is on that point that I asked if the gentleman would yield for a moment. The Secretary of Agriculture wrote the letter which the gentleman from Michigan has read when the bill was first submitted and when the original bill was being considered by the Committee on Public Lands. In order to take care of the stockmen whom he mentioned, I offered this amendment, which is the proviso on page 12.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is my objection to the bill. It proposes to create a hybrid, neither a park nor a forest reserve. It wants all of the benefits and none of the responsibilities.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is proposed to take in a large area of land, but it will not be developed for park purposes for several years to come.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If there are no people in there except for the little grazing that goes on there, why put so many of the regulations of the national-park system into effect?

Mr. BARBOUR. Because it is necessary, if you are ever to make it a park, to start sometime. The proposition has been before Congress for six years. If the gentleman objects to the liberality of the provisions of the bill——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not. But I do believe that some of the great beauty spots of the West should be left so that a man may bait a fishhook or shoot a gun without violating some park regulation.

Mr. BARBOUR. I agree with the gentleman on that proposition, and it was with that idea of taking care of the grazing interests that I offered the amendment before the Committee on the Public Lands which permits grazing on this land at the same fees as is charged by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some serious disagreement as to the boundaries of this park and forest reserve. The gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] says there are to be further conferences and that they are to submit further amendments. Under these circumstances this bill ought not to be passed by unanimous consent, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

IRRIGATION EASEMENTS IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12466) authorizing the granting of certain irrigation easements in the Yellowstone National Park, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a short time?

Mr. TINKHAM. I withhold my objection until the gentleman can make a statement.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I wish the opportunity of explaining to the Members of the House the importance of enacting this legislation. We have just been considering a bill which proposes to add to a national park in California over a million acres of land. This bill is one to permit the use of 8,000 acres of land in the southwestern corner of the Yellowstone National Park, which, according to engineers' reports and the topographical maps of the United States Geological Survey, are near the center of a swamp, covering possibly 100,000 acres. This [pointing] is an enlarged map of the southwestern corner of the Yellowstone National Park. In the eastern section of the State of Idaho, adjoining, there are 200,000 acres of land that are partially irrigated from the reservoir sites at the heads of the streams, as will be observed by the map. Because of the lack of snow in the mountains a year ago there was such a shortage of water for irrigation purposes that over $10,000,000 worth of crops were lost last season. At the present time, on account of the lack of hay, resulting from a shortage of water for irrigation, the cattle are starving in that section of the country, as is evidenced by a newspaper item in the daily Idaho Statesman of April 13. Hay dealers are sending into that country hundreds of carloads of hay from the western part of Idaho to feed the starving cattle in the eastern portion, the shortage in hay, as stated, being caused by the lack of water for irrigation purposes last season. This map shows the relative size of the two reservoirs it is proposed to construct. It also shows the roads leading into and through Yellowstone National Park and their remoteness from the sites of the proposed reservoirs. There are three entrances, one from the west, one from the north, and one from the east. The proposed reservoirs are not within 40 miles of the entrance on the west and is removed from the eastern entrance and northern entrance the whole width of the park. The general right-of-way law which applies to the public lands does not apply to the Yellowstone National Park or to other national parks, and special legislation is necessary.

It is just a question of whether the Congress is willing to allow the farmers living in eastern Idaho to build reservoirs at their own expense to save for irrigation purposes the snow and rain which God Almighty sends for all of us or whether a few splendid but overly esthetic people, so far as the western country is concerned, who are living in luxury in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and other eastern cities, and who apparently have little interest or sympathy for those of limited means who are trying to build homes for themselves and families on the arid lands, are to be permitted to make it possible by defeating this legislation for these hardy pioneers who are reclaiming the desert to lose ten or fifteen million dollars worth of crops each year. These worthy people are just as much entitled to the use of this water as they are to the air and sunshine. If we enact this legislation, the farmers will construct the reservoirs without cost to the Government to store sufficient water for irrigation purposes to insure a bountiful crop, the food supply will be increased for all the people, and the country generally will be benefited.

The only site available for such storage is in the extreme southwestern corner of the Yellowstone National Park, a section which is marshy in its character and which is never visited by tourists because of the lack of roads or trails. Application was made to the Secretary of the Interior for a right of way for a reservoir under the general law affecting easements on the public domain, and after careful consideration the Secretary stated he was in doubt in regard to his authority to grant such a permit of easement under the general law and submitted proposed legislation, which is embodied in the bill under consideration, which gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to grant the necessary right of way in the extreme southwestern corner of the Yellowstone National Park for the construction of a reservoir, canals, and so forth, for the purpose of storing water for the purpose of irrigation.

It is specifically provided that the road to be constructed from the park boundary to the site of the reservoir shall be maintained at the expense of the grantees, who shall also permit the use of any telephone or telegraph lines which may be constructed. Also that timber within the limits of the reservoir shall be cut and removed so as not to mar the attractiveness of the reservoir, and that all plans and specifications shall be submitted and approved by the Secretary of the Interior before construction. Also that the Secretary of the Interior shall make and enforce rules and regulations necessary to carry into force and effect the purposes of the act, and to protect and preserve, in so far as consistent therewith, the beauty of said park.

The proposed legislation simply confers upon the Secretary of the Interior authority to approve the application for a right of way if, in his judgment, such action should be taken.

The approval of the Acting Secretary of the Interior of the proposed legislation is set forth in the following letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 6, 1920.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: I have your request of February 13 for a report on H. R. 12466, entitled "A bill authorizing the granting of certain irrigation easements in Yellowstone National Park, and for other purposes."

I have carefully examined this measure in the light of the policies of this department with respect to the protection of the natural conditions of the national parks, and I have reached the conclusion that no objection to the passage of the bill should be interposed by me, for the reason that no easements for irrigation purposes in the Fall River Basin, Yellowstone National Park, must be granted by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this legislation unless he first finds that such easements will not bring detriment to or interference with the uses of the land involved for park purposes.

Cordially, yours,

ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

The reasons upon which the importance of the proposed legislation is based are as follows:

1. There are about 30,000 people residing on farms, which are now in a high state of development and cultivation and in need of additional water supply in order to secure the maximum crops. The area affected is about 200,000 acres, situated in Fremont and Madison Counties, Idaho.

Except during dry years, these lands are fairly well supplied with water, but during the periods of drought a great shortage of crops are experienced.

2. A careful examination of the watershed has been made by the officials of the State of Idaho and the engineers, which examinations disclose the fact that this reservoir site in the Yellowstone National Park on Fall River is the only site which can be utilized in providing an additional water supply for the land in question.

3. On account of the peculiar conditions surrounding this site, its location, etc., the reservoir can be constructed and operated without any interferences whatever with the park.

The area intended to be used by this reservoir is of a swampy character and contains nothing whatever of interest. When this reservoir is constructed, this swamp will be converted into a beautiful mountain lake.

4. There is absolutely nothing in the way of unusual scenery or other interesting features in this part of the park, but the entire area contains only the ordinary western mountain landscape scenes, such as may be seen along the lines of travel for many miles by any tourist approaching the park from any direction.

This part of the park is not on the line of tourist travel and is never visited by the tourists on account of the topographic conditions; none of the tourist routes through the park ever reach this territory, as there is nothing of unusual interest to induce the tourist travel to visit this section.

During recent years, particularly 1919, a considerable menace existed to the entire Yellowstone National Park from forest fires. One of the fires most difficult to control occurred at the headwaters of Fall River and was only extinguished with great difficulty owing to a lack of roads and a means of access. When this easement is granted, a highway will be constructed from the railroad station at Ashton or Marysville to this part of the park, in order that they may gain access to their work. This highway will serve as a means of access to the park for fire protection and other purposes for all time to come.

5. Like many of the other Western States, Idaho is dependent entirely on the development of its agricultural resources by irrigation for further growth and prosperity. This development can only progress by the conservation of our water resources through the construction of storage reservoirs. Such reservoirs obviously can only be constructed where favorable sites exist and where adequate water supply is available.

6. Little need be said concerning the necessity of increasing the food production of the Nation and the world, but the following brief summary covers the crop production from this territory: Sugar beets, wheat, oats, and barley, peas, and other seeds, together with large quantities of forage for cattle and sheep, and potatoes and other vegetables are grown in large quantities.

The aggregate loss in crop failures, due to the shortage of water during 1919 on the lands which it is intended to irrigate from this reservoir, not including the loss in cattle, sheep, and other live stock, aggregated more than $15,000,000.

The growing of sugar beets as an industry in this part of the country is one of the most important, and owing to the shortage of water, all of which would have been avoided had this reservoir been in existence, this crop was not more than 40 per cent of the normal during 1919. The estimated loss of sugar beets in this territory during that year is about $5,000,000.

7. This reservoir site is not desired by any corporate interest for corporate profit, but by the farmers, who are organized and will furnish all the money to construct the necessary works, and its use will be entirely devoted to the creation of happy farm life and prosperity. At this particular time when extreme congestion occurs in our cities and congested centers of population, it is highly important that special inducement be offered to increase the rural population and relieve these congested centers.

8. At a time when the world is largely filled with unrest, due to the radical activities in Russia and elsewhere, to say nothing of our own Nation, it is well to remember that the owners of farm property and the people who are tilling their own soil are not radicals, but really constitute our most loyal and patriotic American citizens. In this respect it is, therefore, important to further increase our farm areas and build up our rural communities.

When this reservoir is constructed, the adequate water supply provided thereby and the increased production resulting therefrom will permit of material reduction in the present farm units in this territory and thus build up additional homes for many people.

Mr. Arthur P. Davis, Director of the Reclamation Service, who has visited this section of the park, stated to the committee that this section is of a marshy character, and that it is of the greatest importance that the water be conserved as proposed for irrigation purposes. The director has also submitted the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1920.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
Acting Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: In accordance with your request over the telephone this morning, I am submitting the following information concerning the reservoir site known as Fall River Meadows or Bechler Swamp in the southwestern corner of Yellowstone Park.

This site is desired for the storage of water for irrigation by farmers along the North Fork of Snake River in Idaho, and it is well adapted to the purpose. The region is partly covered with timber of little value and is, in general, swampy. A low range of hills passes through the swampy area, and by closing the gaps in these hills it is possible to store a large quantity of water for irrigation. The land that would be submerged by the lake thus formed is mostly of a swampy nature and is unsightly and without any scenic value or economic value that is comparable to its value as a reservoir.

The lake that would be formed would be more pleasing to the eye than the natural swamp and would eliminate a considerable area of mosquito-breeding territory. If the embankments proposed to form this reservoir are built in a workmanlike manner and the construction camps and equipments properly cleaned up, the proposed work will be a distinct improvement in the appearance of the region and the roads that will be necessary to construct and operate this reservoir will increase the accessibility of the southwestern portion of the park.

I know of no valid objection, either of a scenic or economic nature, to the proposed construction, and think by all means it should be allowed and encouraged by Congress.

Very truly, yours, A. P. DAVIS, Director.

Mr. Stephen T. Mather, Director of the National Park Service, also addressed the committee and recommended the passage of the bill, with the statement that before the Secretary acted upon the application for a right of way, he and the superintendent of the national park would visit the Fall River Basin country and furnish the Secretary of the Interior full information, which would enable him to take appropriate action on the application.

Many statements have been furnished the committee from farmers and others as to the value of crops lost last season because of the shortage of water supply, which would have been saved had the proposed reservoir been constructed and water conserved for such an emergency in the way of the shortage of water as existed last summer, a few of which are as follows:

STATEMENT OF DROUGHT CONDITIONS DURING THE SEASON OF 1919 IN THE UPPER SNAKE RIVER VALLEY.

I am farming 640 acres just south of Ashton; 300 acres sown to wheat, which with irrigation water available would have yielded not less than 12,000 bushels, brought 1,761 bushels; 250 acres sown to seed peas, which should have brought not less than 9,000 bushels, yielded 327 bushels, or considerably less than half the amount of seed planted; 20 acres of barley yielded 28 bushels, less than the amount of seed used; 32 acres of alfalfa hay, which with the ordinary amount of irrigation water available should have brought not less than 160 tons, brought 30 tons of very inferior hay.

The season of 1919, with its abundance of sunshine and warm weather, should have been a record-breaking year, if farmers of this section could have only enjoyed the usual amount of water for irrigating their crops. The above estimates of yields are based on what my experience of 20 years of farming here leads me to expect and are low. Any season, when the farmers here are compelled to allow the waters in the rivers to go by and supply older rights, the same crop failure will virtually recur.

To reasonably safeguard future farming operations in this section, it is absolutely necessary to augment the present supply of irrigation water. The only location that is left would be the reservoir site in Fall River meadows.

G. HARRIGFELD.

STATE OF IDAHO,
County of Madison, ss:

We, the undersigned, president and secretary of the Teton Island Canal Co., an irrigation corporation existing and operating in Madison County, State of Idaho, do hereby certify as follows:

That our losses on account of shortage of water during the year 1919 have at least been one-half of our entire crop and that we are badly in need of stored water for irrigation purposes, and we must have stored water to properly irrigate all tillable land under present irrigation system, and unless we provide stored waters our losses will continue to be great hereafter. And we will be short of water the years that our snowfall is light.

We, the president and secretary of the above corporation, certify that the above statement is true and correct.

My commission expires January 16, 1922.

STATE OF IDAHO,
County of Madison, ss:

Ross J. Comstock, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is the president of the First National Bank of Rexburg, Madison County, State of Idaho, and has for the past 19 years lived continuously in the said Madison County.

That during all the said time he has been identified with said bank and its predecessors, and that in the managing of said business he is personally and well acquainted with the irrigation conditions of said county.

The affiant further states that located in Madison County are 80,000 acres of irrigated lands which are capable of being irrigated from the water supply of the North Fork of Snake and Teton Rivers; that during the said time, on numerous occasions, more or less of said lands have suffered from lack of irrigation water, and the farmers have sustained material losses through failure to secure necessary water for irrigation purposes.

The affiant further states that this has been especially the condition during the irrigation of 1919 and that all of said lands have suffered from lack of water for irrigation, and he would estimate that said loss would exceed $25 to $100 per acre, with a probable general average of $35 to $40 per acre.

The affiant further states that in the development of said Madison County that the more scientific farming and the diversification of crops requires that a greater amount of water be provided than in former years and that it is apparent that the only manner in which said water can be provided and due protection given to the irrigation districts of Madison County is through the storage of water at the heads of the water supply that flow through the valley, and released during the time that the regular flow of the rivers will not supply a sufficient amount of water for irrigation purposes.

The affiant further states that the irrigated portions of Madison County being subirrigated, that by reason of filling the ground to raise the water table to properly subirrigate said lands, creates a reservoir or storage of water and the return flow to the river is immeasurably valuable to the irrigation districts below.

R. J. COMSTOCK.

I, Joseph E. Romrell, hereby depose and say that I am president of the Wilford Irrigation & Manufacturing Co., of Wilford, Fremont County, Idaho. That said company is a cooperative and nonspeculative corporation operated solely for the purpose of irrigating the lands owned by the members of the company. That there are over 2,000 acres of cultivated land under the company's canal owned and operated by the stockholders of the corporation. That the value of the land of said tract ranges from $125 to $200 per acre. That due to scarcity of water during the present year of 1919 the farmers comprising this company have lost $150,500 worth of crops, as follows:

Wheat	$68,000
Oats	6,500
Seed peas	50,000
Alfalfa hay	15,000
Grain straw and pea straw	3,000
Miscellaneous crops	8,000
Total	150,500

That we suffer yearly a shortage of water and extremely so such years as 1898, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1918, and the present year.

That we have joined in the formation of the Fremont-Madison Reservoir Co., subscribing $20,000 stock therein, or 5,000 shares at $4 per share, applying for 5,000 acre-feet of water annually, through said reservoir company.

Witness my hand and seal at Wilford (St. Anthony, R. F. D. No. 1), Fremont County, Idaho, this the 12th day of November, 1919.

STATE OF IDAHO,
County of Fremont, ss:

I, E. Cunningham, being duly sworn, say that I am a resident of Ashton, Idaho; that I have lived here since 1906. I am a farmer by occupation and know the conditions existing in this country relative to the aridity and need of irrigation water.

During the years 1910, 1916, 1917, 1919, it was extremely dry in this section of the country and the crops were very short in the three first-named years, and practically a failure in the last-named year for the lack of irrigation water. The crops grown here are very small grains, hay, peas, beets, and vegetables. It is impossible to successfully grow hay, peas, beets, or any vegetables in almost any year without irrigation. This section of country, being among the last to be settled in the Snake River Valley, found the water all appropriated before it was settled, leaving us nothing but flood water. In order to overcome this shortage of water it is absolutely necessary that we be enabled to secure storage facilities to hold the flood water in order that we may be able to get the necessary water for irrigation.

ST. ANTHONY, IDAHO, October 30, 1919.

To whom it may concern:

We affirm that G. A. Fitzpatrick has been the manager of the St. Anthony Flour Mills, of St. Anthony, Idaho, and has resided at St. Anthony, Idaho, for the past six years, and that, as such manager, he has had occasion, due to the nature and interests of the grain business, to observe, more or less, the shortage of irrigation water at St. Anthony and in the surrounding vicinity. We further affirm that during the growing season of 1919 there was such a shortage of irrigating water in this part of Idaho that only about 15 per cent of a normal crop was grown, which could have been avoided if proper reservoir facilities were provided to take care of the flood waters in the spring of the year.

This is not the only year that this has occurred, as two years ago the same condition existed, but not nearly as severe as during the year 1919, as there were not as many acres under crop then as during the present year. This also was true in the year 1913, but the shortage was not as severe as in the years 1917 and 1919. This is due also to the fact that there was not nearly as large an acreage planted as during the war period, when each farmer exerted every effort to plant every available acre that was possible. It is true, however, that the irrigation water is not sufficient to grow successfully crops throughout this district without reservoir reservation of water, and for St. Anthony and surrounding territory to be successful there must, in the very near future, be obtained reservoir facilities large enough to store the flood waters in the spring to take care of this later demand, as it is the late water that matures the crops and makes the country successful.

Very truly, yours,

ST. ANTHONY FLOUR MILLS,

The pea-growing sections in the United States as I know it are as follows: Parts of Wisconsin, Michigan, Montana, Washington, and Idaho. The two former are strictly dry-farm propositions, Washington partly, Montana and Idaho under irrigation, and without it very few, if any, peas can be successfully grown.

The Snake River Valley in Idaho has an ideal climate for pea growing, and with plenty of water it has no equal in the pea-growing game. Have been interested in pea growing in Canada, New York, Wisconsin, and Idaho, and have visited other sections during growing seasons.

Just to show what the scarcity of water did to some crops in this section this year: One of our growers, John F. Johnson, of St. Anthony, had two crops of peas for us, one crop that he had some water for—not enough, but enough to water parts of the field once. We paid him $1,057.85 for that, and for the other that he had no water at all for he owed us $108.94 for seed furnished him. In both cases land was the same. Cause: Shortage of water.

Others who had partial water:

J. S. Rudd, Parker, Idaho—from 60 acres we paid him $5,547.69.

Frank Fujimoto, St. Anthony—from 35 acres we paid him $2,907.10.

C. W. Brown, St. Anthony—from 20 acres we paid him $1,742.32.

Others with just as good land and farmers:

Paul Allan Parker—17 acres; did not get seed back.

T. W. Barger, Newdale—16 acres; total failure.

Seth Beam, Newdale—40 acres; total failure on as good land as ever lay outdoors.

Could go on and cite dozens of others in the same boat, but this will show conditions. At Ashton, Idaho, normally without best producing sections, this year almost a total failure.

We are unable to give actual loss to the farmers or ourselves owing to water shortage this year, but it runs into the thousands of dollars. Our own loss is extremely large, not only in dollars but in the loss of seed stocks that we have been years in breeding up and perhaps we may never be able to replace.

Respectfully submitted. JNO. B. DAVIS, Manager.

STATE OF IDAHO,
County of Fremont, ss:

Daniel Thomas, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is a resident of Fremont County, State of Idaho, and a citizen of the United States, over the age of 21 years. That he has resided at Ashton, Idaho, since November, 1916, and is one of the copartners of the firm of Thomas Bros., grain buyers, with elevators at Ashton, Grainville, Driggs, Felt, and Hetonia, Idaho; that he has been engaged in the buying of grain for years, prior to 1916, in the State of Kansas. That during the year of 1917 the firm of Thomas Bros. purchased at their elevators approximately 600,000 bushels of small grain, of the approximate value of $1,000,000; that during the year of 1918 they purchased approximately the same amount, and of the same approximate value; that in the year 1919 they will be able to purchase, due to the fact that there is no more in the country, not to exceed 30,000 bushels, of the approximate value of $45,000. The great difference in the amount purchased is due to the fact that in the year 1919 the shortage of water was so great that the canals of this section were shut off for the benefit of prior appropriators early in July of 1919; that this shortage of water has each year become more acute, due to the fact that sections with prior water right have become more highly developed, have used more intensive farming methods, entered industries requiring more water, and have become more densely populated.

That at the points where the firm of Thomas Bros., have elevators, other firms have elevators, whose purchases this affiant has no means of determining definitely but would judge ran about the same in volume and value as that of Thomas Bros.; that from his experience in the buying and handling of grain in other sections of the country your affiant is able to state that from his experience the section around Ashton is unsurpassed for the raising of small grain by any other section, either in quantity of yield per acre or in quality.

That the soil of this section is very fertile and productive, adapted to the raising of various products, for which markets are being established, and is susceptible of being easily irrigated; that due to the establishment of markets for various products, which are being raised, and which will require irrigation more extensively than small grain has heretofore, more water than formerly is going to be required for the proper development of the country, so that instead of the present supply of water becoming more adequate by the change to production other than the raising of grain, such supply will become further inadequate; that to insure the future development of this section, or even to maintain its present development, the waters that pass by in winter months will be required to be stored, and your affiant verily believes that the only solution to the problem is the construction of the proposed reservoir for storage water in Fall River Meadows, in Yellowstone Park; that by such construction, the future development of Upper Snake River Valley is assured, but that without such construction, this section must become of no great importance in production.

DANIEL W. THOMAS.

STATE OF IDAHO,
County of Fremont, ss:

W. L. Miller, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is the president and general manager of Miller Bros. Co., a corporation of the State of Idaho, engaged in the business of buying and selling grain.

That he has been engaged in the grain business in the city of St. Anthony continuously since the year 1900, and during all that time has bought and sold grain, and at times potatoes, hay, and feed. That during a large portion of the time he has been engaged in business the concern has operated and now are operating at seven different points on the branch of the Oregon Short Line Railroad, running from Idaho Falls, Idaho, to Yellowstone, Wyo., and to Victor, Idaho, all of which points, with the exception of one, are in the irrigated section of the Upper Snake River Valley and in the territory irrigated by the waters of Fall River and the North and South Forks of Snake River and tributaries.

That in the early period of the time that he has been engaged in said business the territory tributary to the points at which they operate produced largely grain, but of recent years the crops produced in this territory become very much diversified, and since more and difficult kinds of crops have been raised, such as sugar beets, potatoes, seed peas, etc., and the grain crops have steadily declined in acreage.

That the crops last above mentioned require irrigation later in the year than do the grain crops, and several years have occurred in which the crops of beets, potatoes, peas, and other late crops have not properly matured because of the lack of sufficient water in the latter part of the season, and particularly in the years 1916 and 1919, during which years the crops of grain and also the later maturing crops suffered extensively from want of irrigation, the crop of 1916 being estimated as 50 per cent short and the crop of 1919 being estimated as no more than 15 per cent of the normal yield for the territory embraced in the operations of his company. That the shortage of crop was due to no other apparent cause than the shortage of water, as is evidenced by the fact that the crops on the heads of the canals, where it was possible to obtain a sufficient supply of water and before any great loss had occurred by evaporation and seepage, were normally good, while the crops on the lower end of the same canals were, in some instances, particularly in the year 1915, a total failure.

W. L. MILLER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public, residing at St. Anthony, Idaho, this 29th day of October, 1919.
[SEAL.] NORA E. CARROLL.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to what the gentleman has said, from the settled community to the boundary line of the park and then into the park, at quite an enormous expense, these people are to build and maintain roads and telephone lines?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is provided in the bill, and the Government is to have the use of these roads and telephone lines without any expense whatever to it.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to that, the entire surrounding territory where the reservoirs are is to be kept in proper shape?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. To harmonize with the park and to be kept up at the expense of the reservoir people?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes. In the southwestern section of the park there are no roads or trails. No white man goes into that section of the country. It is a mountainous section, except in the southwestern corner, where there are nothing but swamps. The farmers propose to put a reservoir in the swamp section to conserve the water to augment the water supply to irrigate 200,000 acres in the eastern part of Idaho.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will this project interfere in any way with the scenic beauties of that part of the park, or with the accessibility of that part of it?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It could not possibly interfere with the scenic features. A lake is certainly more attractive than a swamp. A fine wagon road will be built in from the railroad to this section over which to transport material to construct the reservoir, and under the provisions of the bill the organized farmers must keep the roads in good condition. Eventually the Park Service could build roads to connect with other roads in the park.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has there been at any other time any effort to commercialize any part of the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Not to my knowledge, except that about 20 years ago there was introduced a bill to build a railroad into the park. This is legislation intended to save the crops of 6,000 farmers situated on 200,000 acres of land, where now about 30,000 people live.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to ask the gentleman further, whether or not this could not be used a little later on as a precedent for other efforts along the same or a similar line that might gradually take a slice here and there off of the beauty and attractions of the park?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That same argument might apply to any legislation or anything that we do. If we do something that is wise, we should do it because it appeals to our judgment, even if it establishes a precedent. Each proposition must stand or fall on its own merits.

Mr. FRENCH. I would like to ask the gentleman if it was not supposed the Secretary of the Interior had discretionary power to do this particular thing; in fact, the Secretary of the Interior about 1895 made a ruling practically on the same proposition applied to another park, holding that he did have that authority.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The general right-of-way law was supposed to apply to the parks as well as to the public domain, but recently the Secretary concluded it did not.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is very fortunate that there is no such discretion given any official so far as the Yellowstone Park is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question? Is it more important that this swampy portion of the park should be preserved as sacred than that 200,000 acres of land should be put under complete and intensive cultivation and support 30,000 people who are there now and the 100,000 who will be there within the next few years?

Mr. TREADWAY. Answering the gentleman's question, I call his attention to his own report wherein he says that ordinarily there is ample water there, "Except during dry years these lands are fairly well supplied with water, but during the period of drought a great shortage of crops is experienced." It does not seem to me the gentleman there makes out a very strong case.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Possibly a drought may come next year, which will result in another loss of $10,000,000 worth of foodstuffs and bring discouragement and possibly bankruptcy to thousands of people who are on these lands.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do.

Mr. RAKER. Now, the grant in this bill of the right of way is protected in the bill and is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The interests of the Government are protected just as specifically as the language could possibly be made.

Mr. RAKER. And the roads are to be built under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And the telephone lines the same.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. The dam and structures are to be built to harmonize with the rest of the park as nearly as it is possible to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. And at the expense of these farmers below?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Entirely. It will not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. RAKER. Is there a foot of land which by virtue of its being thus taken will detract from the park?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Absolutely not. The proposed improvement will be a benefit to the park and result in saving the water which is necessary to use on this desert land during the hot, long summer to raise crops.

Mr. RAKER. And this is just a swamp and mosquito pond at the present time? It will be transformed into a beautiful lake in the park, where these people and others may go to visit?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNELL. I understand there are 100,000 acres of swamp.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes, approximately.

Mr. SNELL. How can you make a reservoir of 9,000 acres on 100,000 acres of swamp?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. We expect to build the dam between the hills and back the water up over this swamp.

Mr. SNELL. How much do they expect to back up the water?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. On 8,000 acres.

Mr. SNELL. How many feet high—how high?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. On an average of 10 or 15 feet.

Mr. SNELL. What kind of timber is on the land?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Director Davis, of the Reclamation Service, who has recommended the enactment of this bill strongly, states that there is no merchantable timber there. The bill provides that any timber there shall be removed from the reservoir site so there will not be any tree tops sticking up out of the water to mar the beauty of the lakes to be created.

It is proposed that roads shall be constructed in an artistic way, and great effort will be made to make the reservoirs attractive to the people who may possibly come into this section of the country when the roads are connected up in the park.

Mr. SNELL. What is the attraction for people to go into a section of country where they can not live?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There is no attraction there.

Mr. SNELL. That seems to be the situation almost with all parts of Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There are many scenic beauties in the Yellowstone National Park which are now reached by roads without going into this remote section consisting of swamps.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is it not a fact now that there are no roads going into that area?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; and no trails by which tourists might go in there. Occasionally white men may go in there to hunt.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is it not a further fact that this could be made an asset to the park, whereas it is now a liability?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman please point out where the agricultural land is?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho (indicating on map). This land in eastern Idaho is the agricultural land to be supplied from that reservoir.

Mr. RAKER. That is south and west of the proposed dam?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. There is no road leading through this section up to the proposed reservoir?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; it is difficult to get in there. There is a trail up which possibly a wagon could go.

Mr. RAKER. But no automobile road?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No.

Mr. RAKER. How many people approximately live in this section who could be expected, if this road is built in there, to get the benefit of the park as well as everybody else that comes into that country?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Of course there are thousands of people living in eastern Idaho who might take advantage of it, but the people I am especially interested in are those who have homes and farms on this land, who are entitled to have this water, which the Almighty has placed there for their use, and which now runs unused to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. RAKER. And this would help in the development of the park itself?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Absolutely so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me that any canal or ditch company or association or corporation formed there who acquires the right to build and the use of that property, practically acquires title in fee of the area covered by the water that is collected there?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They would have the same sort of fee that a railroad has when it is granted a right of way across the public domain.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. A private corporation is permitted practically to carry on business just as they please as far as the use of water by themselves and others are concerned, and they have that perpetual right against everybody else. Is that the idea?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There is nobody else who could utilize the water other than the people living on the land below.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Somebody else might make use of it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In any event, the laws provide that those who first utilize the water are entitled to it, and it is a question, as I say, whether or not this Congress is going to permit these farmers to save the rain and snow, which is supposed to be free to everybody, or deprive them of the opportunity of storing it for use as it is needed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think everyone wishes them to have permission to use that and to have assistance in using it, but it seems to me a serious proposition to give the first one there the right for all time over that area.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Nobody else could use it but those living in that area.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The one who gets there first can control it and direct how everybody else can use it for all time.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Nobody else could use it except the farmers who are located there.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. In reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] if the lands sought to be watered by the waters of that reservoir indicated are organized under the laws of the State of Idaho into an irrigation district?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes, sir; there are several districts organized, and they have a central organization and are raising the money among themselves to make the proposed improvements.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Then it involves all the people who belong in that district, and no individual would suffer or have any special rights such as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is for the benefit of the people who are now on the land and who, because of these shortages in snowfall, occasionally find that they have not sufficient water to save their crops.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman from Idaho yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 5006 retain its place on the Unanimous Consent Calendar according to the regular procedure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Not to be brought up again to-day?

Mr. ELSTON. Not to be brought up again to-day.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. With that understanding, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable Representative from Idaho yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have received the following communication from the American Civic Association, and it was upon their communication and also one from Frederick Law Olmstead that I make objection. I think the honorable Representative from Idaho is entitled to hear what those communications contain, as is the committee. Referring to the bill now before the committee, the communication from the American Civic Association says:

> The act in question seems to us who are interested in the preservation of the Yellowstone National Park in accordance with the purpose manifested in the act of March 1, 1872, when it was set aside, to be a very unfortunate and improper attempt to exploit for the benefit of a comparatively few persons the precious and unreplaceable property of the whole Nation.
> We also believe that it is an erroneous and indefensible procedure to refer the determination of this matter to the Secretary of the Interior, for if Congress knew its own mind when it set aside the Yellowstone National Park as such, it certainly ought to have the opportunity to change the ideals concerning that park without depending upon an administrative official.
> I also draw your attention to the report accompanying Mr. SMITH'S bill, in which the claim is made that the consummation of the park destruction aimed at would largely increase the product of certain agricultural operators in the lower and contiguous portions of Idaho. On page 7 of that report there is a sworn statement of a seed-producing concern which gives the actual situation in respect to six successive crops in the valley to be benefited, ranging from 1914 to 1919. By this statement it is shown that of the six years five were abundantly successful, and the sixth year, 1919, by no means a failure. It would seem to any reasonable man that the farmer who can secure five successful crops out of six scarcely needs relief at the hands of the Federal Government, or, rather, at the expense of the people of the Nation, unless at the same time it is proposed to afford relief to the business man who after five successful years finds himself lacking a profit in the sixth.
> There is reason to believe that the introduction of this measure is merely the entering wedge toward a wholesale exploitation of the water resources of the Yellowstone National Park. In fact, the engineer of the Fremont-Madison Reservoir Co., the applicant for this special privilege, has admitted that under the permission given by the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the possibilities in the Betcher Valley Basin, those investigations were pursued so that the ultimate design includes the use of the Yellowstone Lake as an irrigation reservoir.
> If such a diversion from the original purpose manifested by Congress in the act of March 1, 1872, is to occur, it ought to be a diversion by Congress, and not indirectly through the Secretary of the Interior or any other official.
> Information has just reached me to the effect that the section of the Yellowstone National Park which is to be changed into a reservoir is the haunt of certain sadly diminished wild animals, which, of course, will perish if the design to maintain Yellowstone National Park in its original primitive wildness is interfered with by those who feel that losing one crop in six is too much of a risk.

I venture to urge on behalf of a large and influential membership, including able men and women in every State in the Union, that you interpose every objection to the passage of this bill. I am informed that it is now on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and may come up every Monday, with the opportunity to slip through the House, as a similar enactment has slipped through the Senate. At least such action should be taken as would force the proponents of this scheme to argue their case fairly and squarely before a committee of Congress, with an opportunity to come back on behalf of the public.

Very truly, yours,

ELEANOR E. MARSHALL, Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, evidently Mr. Olmstead does not know much about——

Mr. TINKHAM. That is the American Civic Association.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, yes; I know about this organization; but they do not know very much about farming in irrigated countries. If an irrigation farmer loses a crop once in six years, he is practically forced into bankruptcy, because he has had to spend so much money to keep up the water systems and pay the water-right assessments, maintenance fees, and so forth; and if he does not have a crop every year he is conducting a losing proposition, whereas in the eastern country, where you do not depend upon irrigation, you do not have to incur so much expense to maintain your land and to put in your crop, and as a result you can afford to lose a crop once in three years or four years and not be particularly harmed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, is there objection?

Mr. TINKHAM. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10917) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States" by adding thereto an additional section.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States," approved June 30, 1906, be amended by adding an additional section to said act, which section shall be designated section 12 and shall read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That said corporation may provide, by amendment to its by-laws, that the powers of the active members exercised at the annual meeting in the election of officers and the transaction of business shall be vested in and exercised by a representative assembly composed of delegates apportioned, elected, and governed in accordance with the provisions of the by-laws adopted by said corporation."

The SPEAKER. Is there——

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, is this bill for the National Education Association?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BEE. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Consent has already been given. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FESS. Would the gentleman like to discuss the bill?

Mr. BEE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa some questions about it. I want to say very frankly to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], because I believe he knows it, that my interest in matters of education has been a very large one always. I have discussed the matter with the gentleman from Iowa upon other occasions. I am not familiar with the provisions of this particular act; but is the effect of this law to concentrate in the Federal Government eventually—not, perhaps, by the provisions of the law itself—control and supervision of the education in this country? In other words, not talking now about the rights of the States—but education has been getting along very well with the States—what good is to be accomplished by this association in the cause of education that will not impinge or infringe upon the control of education by the States themselves? I am not familiar with the provisions, and I am asking the gentleman from Iowa for information.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has nothing to do with the proposition that the gentleman is asking about. The National Education Association is a voluntary association of the educators of the United States. The association was founded in 1857. It at first received a charter from the District of Columbia and later received a charter from Congress. According to the provisions of that charter the officers are to be elected and the business of the corporation transacted by the active members of the association. Now, the association has grown to be between 40,000 and 50,000 in active membership, so that it is impracticable to have a meeting of the active members. This bill provides that this association can amend its by-laws so as to have a representative meeting. In other words, it changes the form from a general democracy to a representative assembly. That is all that there is in the bill.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Has this association heretofore been incorporated?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BEE. It is now incorporated?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. It was first incorporated by the District of Columbia and afterwards by an act of Congress in 1906.

Mr. BEE. It is an association of educators, and the only object of this bill would be to give them the authority to amend their by-laws so as to provide for a representative meeting instead of a meeting of all the active members?

Mr. TOWNER. That is exactly it.

Mr. BEE. And it does not contemplate interference and has no power, of course, according to the gentleman's statement, of interference or reaching out and seeking control of the education in the United States?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; I will say it has no such power.

Mr. BEE. And no such authority?

Mr. TOWNER. No.

Mr. CANNON. What function does it perform?

Mr. TOWNER. It is a voluntary association of the teachers and educators of the United States in the colleges and county and State superintendents and teachers of the United States. It has been in operation since 1857.

Mr. CANNON. But what does it do?

Mr. TOWNER. It has its annual meetings and it publishes its proceedings. Its proceedings are sent all over the world, I will say to the gentleman, and form perhaps a body of educational discussion as valuable as anything else that we have in that line.

Mr. CANNON. Who pays the expenses?

Mr. TOWNER. They do themselves. They have their dues, just the same as any other voluntary association.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The association is made up of two classes, active membership and associate membership. The active membership fee annually is more than the associate membership fee, but with the membership fee as the only source of revenue, some years ago this association had over $100,000 in its treasury, so that it is not a matter that depends upon any outside support to assist it financially.

The only object, I will say to my friend from Illinois, is, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], an annual meeting in the summer of the entire membership, or at least it is open to the entire membership, and a second meeting in the spring, usually in February, of those identified with the superintendents, known as the superintendents' section, and of these two meetings all of the proceedings, including all of the addresses, are printed in an annual report.

I want to supplement what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has said, that these reports, extending back before the Civil War, form the most expert body of information on educational democracy that is extant anywhere to-day in the world, and the association is not dependent upon benefits in the form of contributions from either State, county, or Federal governments, but it is a matter purely dependent upon its own membership.

Mr. CANNON. Is it an organization for propaganda and controlling legislation or asking legislation, or is it a grand powwow and a banquet?

Mr. FESS. I have never known it to have the grand powwow or the banquet, and I have never known it to be offensive in legislative matters.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BEE. In answer to the question of propaganda, I suppose that there is hardly any organization at this day and time that does not indulge in propaganda. As to the grand powwow, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that a great deal of interest in these grand banquets has been removed by a recent amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. FESS. I am not interested in the banquet or the powwow, but I have had some correspondence from some of the officers now and then about some proposed legislation. I think that my friend from Illinois is not more offended than I am at unnecessary propaganda, and I believe that the National Education Association is pretty free from that charge. So far as I know it is as much so as the chamber of commerce.

Mr. CANNON. I am very glad to hear it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TOWNER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12956) extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved January 15, 1914, to be built across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State af Arkansas, by Ashley County, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of the approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY RESERVATION OF FORT LOGAN H. ROOTS, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13274) to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the payment by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, of such sum as he may determine to be the reasonable value of the premises (but not less than $150 per acre), to convey to the said company the following-described portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, near the city of Little Rock, State of Arkansas, to wit:

Beginning at the southeast corner of a 2-acre tract purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., approved by act of Congress August 14, 1912; thence north 1° 18′ east 437 feet to the southeast corner of an 18.75-acre tract purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., approved by act of Congress August 14, 1912; thence south 54° 30′ west along boundary line 250 feet to the southwest corner of said 18.75-acre tract, this point being also the northeast corner of the 2-acre tract above mentioned; thence south 33° 34′ east 350 feet along boundary of said 2-acre tract to point of beginning, same being a triangular parcel of ground located in the southwest quarter of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west, containing 1 acre.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into a revocable lease with the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., a corporation as aforesaid, on the following-described portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, near the city of Little Rock, State of Arkansas, to wit:

From cut-stone monument in boundary line of military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, approximately 150 feet southeast of brick pumping station, run north 37° 52′ west 624 feet from point of beginning; thence south 54° 30′ west approximately 240 feet to bank of Arkansas River; thence in a northwesterly direction, following up the left bank of river, approximately 1,300 feet to boundary line of a 2-acre tract purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., approved by act of Congress August 14, 1912; thence north 54° 30′ east along boundary line of said 2-acre tract to the southeast corner of said tract; thence south 33° 34′ east alongside of bluff 1,300 feet to point of beginning, same being a strip of ground lying along the east bank of Arkansas River in the southwest quarter of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west, containing 7.21 acres, at a rental value to be determined by the War Department.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JACOWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes the Secretary of War to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, a portion of the military reservation at Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas. This company has numerous large contracts with the road commissioners of many of the special road districts of Arkansas for furnishing crushed stone for road-building purposes. In support of this bill I desire to read a letter from Hon. William B. Owen, commissioner of State lands, highways, and improvements, as follows:

The Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., of this city, have contracts for several hundred thousand tons of stone for good roads which are building and are to be built in this State. We know that there has been a great shortage of cars for shipment, and they have explained to us that if they could secure a certain tract of land along the base of the Fort Logan H. Roots Reservation, paralleling the spur track which leads into their plant, that this would enable them to store a large quantity of stone during the time that cars were not furnished. If you can secure the tract of land for them, I feel that it will be of inestimable value to the State in facilitating the increased storage and delivery of stone to the road districts of the State.

It is the intention of this company to use this land for storage purposes. They will run their crusher steadily and place the crushed stone on this space, so that when cars are received they can be loaded promptly and shipped. The passage of this bill will therefore greatly facilitate the road-building work throughout the State of Arkansas. This bill has the approval of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LESSEES AT CAMP FUNSTON, KANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3706) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings on a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves the right to object.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which has passed the Senate, is to authorize the Secretary of War to settle with the lessees who erected buildings on a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans.

These people erected buildings on a Government reservation for the purpose of supplying amusements and merchandise to the soldiers in that camp. They also contributed toward the construction of certain utilities in the camp. They paid to the Government 10 per cent of their gross receipts, which went into the fund for camp activities, and after three years had elapsed of their five-year lease, which provided that the Government should have the right to cancel the lease whenever it needed the land for military purposes or upon any military exigency, the Government ordered these men out of their property.

It occurred to the committee which considered the bill that the claimants had an equity, and we felt that it would be adjusted more quickly and to the best interests of the Government by conferring power upon the Secretary of War to make a proper adjudication of these claims, if upon investigation it was found that they had an equity, and that is the shape in which the bill is reported to the House.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield two minutes to me?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been considered for some time by the Committee on War Claims. I feel that perhaps there are some of these men at Camp Funston who have a legitimate claim against the Government. In our deliberations we thought that if anything was done, it should be confined entirely to the people who sustained an actual loss on account of the Government having taken away their buildings and that perhaps the best way would be to let the people who had actually sustained the loss present their claim to the Court of Claims.

When the proposition was first brought to the attention of the War Claims Committee it was understood that there were only three different parties who had sustained actual loss, but later on, as the testimony was received, we found that there were several who thought perhaps they had sustained a loss.

I think that first we ought to find out the total amount of the claims made against the Government before any legislation is proposed, and I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he knows anything about the total amount of these claims.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not. I have never seen any figures, and I do not believe they have been put in concrete shape.

Mr. SNELL. The original statement made before the committee was that perhaps they would not exceed more than $150,000. Then afterwards there were several others that they did not know about.

Now, it seems to me this is opening up an entirely new field. These people had a definite contract with the Government. Of course, as everyone knows, when a man went there as a concessionnaire he went there for the purpose of making money, at least the majority of them did. If the war had lasted longer, of course they would have made more money; but it turned out that there were three or four or perhaps more who did not. I think it is a matter that should be considered very carefully and all the safeguards possible put around it; but I am not opposed to the people receiving the pay who have sustained actual losses from the fact that the Government took the property away from them.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. Some of the gentlemen who are interested in these claims have suggested the propriety of amending this bill by authorizing the claimants to go to the Court of Claims, the court to find only for those who sustained losses in their business enterprises there. Does not the gentleman think that would open up a rather dangerous precedent, to promote the idea that the Government ought to recoup people who sustained losses?

Mr. SNELL. It would not seem like that to me. It seems to me only a plain proposition. There is no legal obligation, as far as the Government is concerned, but, on the other hand, perhaps there may be some moral obligation from the fact that the Government has taken away buildings which they have built there and they have not had an opportunity to carry on their business long enough to get back the original cost. That may be the foundation for some moral obligation, but, of course, that is rather an uncertain proposition, and for this reason I think we should be pretty careful about any general and far-reaching powers we give anyone for settling these claims. We certainly can not be too careful in these matters.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will yield again, I will say that it occurred to some members of our committee who considered the bill that it would be better to confine the questions involved simply to those involved in the adjudication of the contract itself and of any equity that might lie in their claim, rather than to go into the question of those who had sustained loss, because that would open up a dangerous line of precedents and might involve the Government in considerable expense; and if these people have no valid or legal claim, the law officers of the War Department would certainly protect the interests of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. The Government complied absolutely with the contract that it made with each one of these people, and those who appeared before our committee did not claim that there was any legal obligation on the part of the Government.

Mr. ANTHONY. But would not the gentleman take the position that if the Government had complied with all the requirements of the contract no claim exists, and that the Secretary would so find?

Mr. SNELL. I would not want to take that position after the Secretary of War has said that he thinks they ought to be paid something.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. As I understand the situation it is this, that if we assume the position taken by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] we then enter into the field of speculation, because there is no way to tell what they would have made if the war had continued, and they were not entitled to anything except such as they would earn in the occupancy of their building; and Gen. Wood, in his testimony, states positively and definitely that there was no representation made as to the continued use of the camp for other purposes than for the preparation of men for war.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to offer this amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 3 and 4, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "that jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine and render judgment for the amount it shall find and determine to be the net loss."

Strike out the period in line 2, page 2, and insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, The claimant shall file his petition within one year after the approval of this act. In arriving at its findings the said court shall allow no profit to any claimant, nor shall the claimant be allowed interest in excess of 5 per cent per annum. The right of appeal is hereby granted to the claimant from judgment rendered by the Court of Claims."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that the bill be passed without prejudice until next Monday, and in the meantime the several gentlemen who have studied the matter may come to some agreement about the proper procedure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9932) a bill authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to accept and administer for the benefit of the public and the encouragement of industry inventions, patents, and patent rights, and for other purposes.

Mr. MacCRATE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12891) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on April 17 the House passed the bill S. 4073, identical with this bill, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be stricken from the calendar and laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TO ESTABLISH A WOMEN'S BUREAU.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13229) to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MERRITT. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply establishes under permanent law what has been carried on in the Department of Labor for more than two years. As it is, it leaves appropriations for it subject to a point of order by any Member of the House, and it is a very unsatisfactory way to carry on an activity of the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I find on lines 8 and 9, page 1 of the bill, the words "it shall be the duty of said bureau to formulate standards and policies." What is meant by those words?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The general acceptation of the words as used so far as the activities of that bureau of the Government will be concerned.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If they are as broad as that, they must embrace so many things that the gentleman from Kansas would be able to state some of them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They refer to standards——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Standards of what—wages?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; standards of utilities and standards for the conduct of laborers, as they are now maintained in the department for both women and men.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is certainly general enough.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; it should be general. All of the activities of this department are now being carried on and have been ever since 1918. The activities of women in industry are greater now than they were then. There are more women engaged in industry in the country than there were the first year of the war.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have no objection whatever to the idea involved in the bill, but inasmuch as they are given some duty and some power and authority I would like to know just what power and duty and authority the bill does permit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They are the duties that are usually exercised in a matter of that kind. The duties that the Labor Bureau exercises with respect to men in industry we are prescribing for the bureau for women in industry.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I did not know that the Bureau of Labor prescribed any kind of a standard. What kind of a standard does it prescribe—how much work a man must do or the hours he must work and under what conditions?

Mr. MERRITT. How little he must do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is not the intention of it. The standard for women, for instance, who work in a store—whether women shall stand up or sit down when off duty. That is a matter that comes within the scope of this bureau.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Would this bureau have authority to make regulations in respect to the matter the gentleman is speaking of and enforce them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; not to enforce them, but to suggest them, as it is doing to-day. A committee of women came to Congress some years ago and suggested that the women clerks in Washington were not permitted to sit down from the time they entered the store until they left it. A committee of Congress brought in a bill requiring merchants in this city to put in stools to permit their clerks to sit down when they were not engaged in work. That is one of the things that would come within the scope of this bureau.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That was a proper piece of legislation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is for the purpose of suggesting such things as that that this bureau will have to do. They have no power to say to an industry you shall do this or you shall do that; they simply have the same power to make suggestions that the Bureau of Labor has with respect to the employment of men. The women entering industry in this country bring in new features, and there is no man who knows anything at all about the employment of women but knows that there should be different standards with respect to the utilities, the conveniences, the rest places that are provided by the employers in this industry for women.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, having listened to the gentleman's very lucid explanation, I have no objection whatever to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The reason I think this bill is objectionable is that it makes into permanent law a war-time expedient. I think before we do that we ought to let the war get by, we ought to let this presidential year get by, and consider the Department of Labor and all other departments, with the idea of consolidating their activities and, if possible, economizing and making more efficient their operation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. So far as economy is concerned, we shall not spend any more money in this matter than we are spending to-day and, probably, will not spend so much.

Mr. MERRITT. We do not want to spend as much. Mr. Speaker, I think the women who have given this matter most attention believe that when women get all of their rights, as they have so many of them now—the same rights that men have—we ought not to differentiate as between men and women. Of course, in many respects, as the gentleman has pointed out, women must be treated differently from men, but I think to have a man's department and a woman's department in the Department of Labor is entirely wrong. I hope certainly that at all times there will be a certain number of women in that department, but I do not believe that now is the time to fasten onto that department a war-time expedient. Therefore at the proper time I shall object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will not object. We are carrying in the current sundry civil appropriation act an appropriation of $40,000 for the character of work which would be carried on under this bill. I think there is no doubt but that the Committee on Appropriations will make an appropriation for this work in the sundry civil appropriation bill, to be reported in a few days. I am rather inclined to think, if asked to do it, the Committee on Rules would be disposed to grant a rule to make that appropriation in order. The bill before us puts in proper legislative form, and in a very conservative legislative form, the direction of this work which is now being carried on without specific authority of law. I have no doubt but that it will be carried on—at least I hope it will—and I think it would be better to carry it on under conservative, constructive, specific legislation rather than as we are carrying it on now.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is not a constructive or conservative way to make this into permanent law, and therefore I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER, MINN. AND WIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13387) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of a bridge, authorized by act of Congress, approved August 7, 1916, to be built across the St. Louis River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, from the village of Fond du Lac, a suburb of Duluth, Minn., to a point on the Wisconsin shore about 100 feet westerly from the mouth of Dubrey Creek, is hereby extended one year from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "Dubrey" and insert in lieu thereof "Dubray."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARSS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13253) to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co., to be composed of the following members, namely: B. F. Flowers and C. H. Harp, of Elmer, Jackson County, Okla., and W. T. Gibbons, of Odell, Wilbarger County, Tex., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River at a point near the southeast corner of section 24, township 1 south, range 21 west of Indian meridian, Jackson County, Okla., to a point south in Wilbarger County, Tex.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "point" insert the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Texas" insert "in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCCLINTIC, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PILGRIM TERCENTENARY CELEBRATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 302, authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much appropriation does this carry?

Mr. LUCE. It carries $400,000, $300,000 for Plymouth and $100,000 for Provincetown, as recommended by the special committee of the House and Senate and further recommended by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of economy, I am compelled to object.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is true, but it is considered automatically in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, we ought to have this resolution reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman reserve the right to object?

Mr. McKEOWN. I reserve the right to object for the purpose of having the resolution reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 302) authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass.

Whereas on December 21 next will occur the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass.; and

Whereas the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the town of Plymouth have appointed a commission and a special committee to arrange plans for a proper and fitting observance of this historic anniversary; and

Whereas the plans contemplate the improvement and restoration of Plymouth Rock and the shore line where such landing was made, the improvement and protection of the burial grounds on Coles Hill and Burial Hill in Plymouth, where are buried the remains of those who succumbed to the rigors of the first winter and of those who died later, respectively, the erection of a memorial building, the placing of tablets at certain historic spots in the old Colony, and the undertaking of certain other improvements; and

Whereas the plans further contemplate the holding of certain appropriate exercises in December of the current year and also during the summer of 1921, for all of which matters there have been appropriated the sums of $275,000 by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and $320,000 by the town of Plymouth, and in addition thereto assurances have been given that the expense of certain features of the celebration will be borne in whole or in part by certain patriotic or fraternal societies or organizations; and

Whereas the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has further created by legislation a commission to prepare plans for the participation in the celebration by the town of Provincetown, on Cope Cod, in the harbor of which the Mayflower first came to anchor, and has appropriated $50,000 to carry out the plans adopted by the commission; and

Whereas it is contemplated making certain improvements adjacent to the Pilgrim Monument in Provincetown, which was erected several years ago, the cost thereof having been borne from funds provided by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, by the Congress, by the town of Provincetown, and by contributions of individuals, and it is now desired to provide a dignified and safe approach to the monument, to erect tablets or markers at certain points in Provincetown and the adjacent towns of Truro, Wellfleet, and Eastham, on Cape Cod, commemorating certain events associated with the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown, and to hold appropriate exercises in connection therewith and in conjunction with the observance of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth and the establishment of their Colony there; and

Whereas a joint special committee of this Congress has considered the matter of the participation of the United States in the observance of this historic tercentenary and has filed its report and recommendations: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the United States Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission (hereinafter referred to as the commission) and to be composed of nine commissioners, as follows: Three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, two Senators by the President of the Senate, and four Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The commissioners shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. (a) That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $400,000, to be expended by the commission in accordance with the provisions of this resolution.

(b) One hundred thousand dollars of such appropriation may be expended under the direction of the commission and in cooperation with the Provincetown Tercentenary Commission, the town of Provincetown, Mass., and such other agencies, public or private, as the commission may determine, for the purpose of completing and improving the approaches to and the grounds of the Pilgrim Monument at Provincetown, Mass.; of erecting suitably inscribed tablets or markers in the towns of Provincetown, Truro, Wellfleet, and Eastham, and for other work in connection therewith, in accordance with plans adopted by the Provincetown Tercentenary Commission.

(c) Three hundred thousand dollars of such appropriation may be expended under the direction of the commission and in cooperation with the Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission, the town of Plymouth, Mass., and such other agencies, public or private, as the commission may determine, for the purpose of restoring and improving Plymouth Rock and the shore line of the locality adjacent thereto, of protecting and improving the burial grounds upon Coles Hill and Burial Hill in Plymouth, Mass.; of erecting tablets or markers at appropriate places in the Old Colony, and for other work in connection therewith, in accordance with plans adopted by the Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission.

SEC. 3. That no expenditure shall be made or authorized by the commission until the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has, as determined by the commission, expended or contracted to expend the sum of $300,000 for the same purposes for which the commission may under the provisions of this resolution make expenditures. The United States shall not be held liable for any cost, expense, obligation, or indebtedness on account of the maintenance or upkeep of any property in respect to which any expenditure is made by the commission under the provisions of this resolution, nor for any obligation or indebtedness incurred by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Provincetown Tercentenary Commission, the Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission, or any other agency or officer, employee, or agent thereof, for any purpose for which the commission may under the provisions of this resolution make expenditures. All expenditures of the commission shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission, but no expenditure shall be made or authorized by the commission except with the approval of a majority of the commissioners.

SEC. 4. That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to issue a special series of postage stamps, in such denominations and of such design as he may determine, commemorative of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass.

SEC. 5. That the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this resolution shall expire December 31, 1921.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 7, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four."

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, inasmuch as this carries such a large appropriation, I think we ought to have some explanation of the resolution.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, it is a fortunate coincidence that this resolution comes before the House upon the 19th day of April, which in our State is celebrated as Patriots Day. Some years ago we joined two holidays, forming Patriots Days, out of the celebration of the Battles of Lexington and Concord, and out of Fast Day, a day that for more than 200 years had been a day of fasting provided by our Puritan forefathers as one of the two great holidays which they gave to this country, the other being Thanksgiving Day.

So it is not inappropriate that the House, if it sees fit, should to-day decide to share, not alone with Massachusetts, but, indeed, with all the English-speaking world, in the commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims. The three hundredth anniversary of this epoch-making occurrence will come in December, a time of year when only indoor exercises will be possible. The main celebration is to follow in the succeeding summer. The commission appointed by the Commonwealth to determine what sort of a celebration would be most fitting, reached the conclusion that it would not advise an exposition or anything costly in the way of a temporary and passing observance of the day. It seemed to them more in harmony with the purposes of the commemoration, the solemn purposes, that we should show our recollection of this episode out of which sprang so much of our history, by some permanent memorial. The special committee appointed by the House and Senate, which visited the spot last year, agreed with the Massachusetts commission that this was the form that the commemoration should take, and the Committee on the Library, for whom I am speaking, also accepted that view. The result, therefore, of these three separate studies of the problem is an agreement that there shall be a permanent expenditure at Plymouth and at Provincetown. To take the matter chronologically——

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. McKEOWN. As I understand this bill it carries $300,000 for Plymouth and $100,000 for Provincetown. Now, how much money does the Commonwealth of Massachusetts appropriate for that purpose?

Mr. LUCE. I was about to explain that at Provincetown, where a stately monument has been erected in part by the help of the Government, the State will expend $50,000, and if this bill prevails the Nation will expend $100,000 in furnishing suitable approaches to the monument. It is now almost inaccessible for vehicles and its surroundings are undignified and unworthy the monument itself.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Is this money to be used in buying up property around the monument?

Mr. LUCE. Only so far, I understand, as the approach may be cut through a parcel of land leading up the hill to the monument; but there is only a very small taking of property.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Is the larger part of this money to be spent in the buying up of property around there?

Mr. LUCE. Only a small part, I understand. The chief expenditure at Provincetown is the grading of the hill and the erecting of some sort of an approach, such as is found here at the Washington Monument.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Provincetown is going to get $100,000 out of this appropriation?

Mr. LUCE. Yes; and $50,000 from the State.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Does not Provincetown think it can get along with about half of that amount if we could not give the whole amount?

Mr. LUCE. On the contrary, they have urgently pleaded with the Massachusetts Members asking them to secure more. They do not think they can do the work adequately; but in the judgment of the commission which visited the spot, the Senators and Representatives who went there and with their eyes saw what ought to be done, this would be a reasonable amount to appropriate.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Does the gentleman think, in view of the financial condition of the country at this time, with the many necessary things demanded from other sources, considering the large bonus bill we are going to vote out in a week or two, that we should apppropriate $400,000 for a monument right now?

Mr. LUCE. That phase of the question received the most earnest consideration from your committee. The only answer to it is that the tercentennial observance of a great historical happening is a matter that can no more be postponed than could be postponed the World's Fair at Chicago, which, the gentleman will recollect, came in the very middle of the disastrous panic of 1893. Time and tide wait for no man. A celebration of this sort can not be materially delayed. Therefore it seemed to your committees, both the special committee and the Committee on the Library, that action now is justifiable. However, with precisely the point in mind to which the gentleman has brought attention, they recommended an appropriation less than one-sixth of what the Government spent for the celebration of the settlement of Jamestown. At that time there was an expenditure by the Federal Government of $2,650,000 to commemorate the landing and settlement of the Cavaliers. We ask but $100,000 to commemorate the landing and settlement of the Puritans. At the St. Louis Exposition there was an expenditure by the Government of $11,000,000 and more, something like twenty-five times as much as is here contemplated. In view of present conditions, we felt we would not be justified in asking anything like—I do not think it ought to be called the generosity, but anything like the liberality of Congress on those previous occasions of kindred nature. It was thought if we could in a general way match what was being expended locally it would be a fitting and justifiable procedure.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will.

Mr. WELLING. If this money is appropriated, will the monument be erected by the date of the centennial exposition?

Mr. LUCE Permit me to say that the monument at Provincetown is already erected.

Mr. WELLING. I mean the monument provided for in the bill?

Mr. LUCE. No monument is provided for in the bill itself.

Mr. WELLING. The bill has reference to certain markers——

Mr. LUCE. Those markers are very simple and can be very easily provided. They are simply tablets such as historical societies have placed in so many places. The money at Plymouth is to be almost wholly expended on Plymouth Rock itself and its surroundings.

Mr. WELLING. And the bay?

Mr. LUCE. And the bay.

Mr. WELLING. Will that money be expended by the date of the centennial or go over for another year or two afterwards?

Mr. LUCE. The hope is that it will be expended on these approaches and surroundings by the time of the general celebration which comes in the summer of the year 1921. The celebration in December, 1920, must take place indoors. Whether the outdoor work can be completed this summer or not, I would not undertake to guarantee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I renew my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

YANKTON AGENCY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2442) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church, by patent in fee, certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church, by patent in fee, the following-described premises situate within the Yankton Indian Reservation, county of Charles Mix, State of South Dakota: Beginning at the northwest corner of lot 9, section 27, township 94 north, range 64 west of fifth principal meridian; thence south 25° 4′, west five and fifty-hundredths chains to the southwest corner of lot 2, section 34; thence north 64° 56′, west one and forty-hundredths chains, more or less, to the east boundary of the Presbyterian Church and school reserve; thence north 25° 4′, east five and fifty-hundredths chains, more or less, along the east boundary of the said Presbyterian Church and school reserve to the northeast corner thereof; thence south 64° 56′, east one and fifty-hundredths chains, more or less, to the place of beginning; containing seventy-seven hundredths acres, more or less; for the uses of said church upon the payment by said trustees to the Secretary of the Interior of the sum of $75, the value of said premises as heretofore found by due appraisal thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title of the bill H. R. 5163 be amended to correspond with the text.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to change the title of H. R. 5163 to correspond with the text. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

COAST GUARD STATION, COOK COUNTY, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9228) to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CANNON. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn., in such locality as the captain commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether I shall object or not. I would like to know something about it. Who stands for the bill?

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this Coast Guard station that is recommended to be established by this bill will protect about 200 miles of rocky coast on the north shore of Lake Superior. From the Canadian line to the port of Duluth there is absolutely no protection to commerce, and a good many accidents have occurred there, many fishermen having been driven out to sea and lost; in some cases were lost in full sight of their families and friends, who were powerless to render aid. The captain commandant of the Coast Guard recommends that this station be established at a place called Grand Marais, where there is a safe harbor, and there they have wireless radio and telephone connection and a lighthouse. The committee reported the bill unanimously, and the captain commandant of the Coast Guard recommended that in the interest of humanity and for the protection of navigation this bill for the establishment of this Coast Guard station be passed.

Mr. CANNON. What is to be the cost of it?

Mr. CARSS. About $60,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the Chair ruled several weeks ago that as to bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, when unanimous consent was given to their consideration, could be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARSS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 301, to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that the resolution be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, to persons and corporations within said State, to be used for industrial and manufacturing purposes.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 7, after the word "purposes," insert "at such reasonable prices as may be fixed by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why it is necessary to have an act of Congress? Does not the power now exist in the War Department?

Mr. OLNEY. In the absence of Mr. MAYS, who had this bill directly in charge, I will submit a letter in support of this measure from the Secretary of War. He says:

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 25, 1920.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: With reference to your letter of March 20, 1920, requesting a report on House joint resolution 301, which authorizes the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes, I have the honor to advise you that the War Department recommends the passage of this resolution.

It has been ascertained that the removal of this sand will not be harmful to the reservation and that the Government will receive remuneration for the same.

Respectfully, yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say that I have no objection to the bill. I wish to inquire, though, in regard to the legal situation.

Mr. OLNEY. I think probably a resolution of this kind is necessary, as it involves an expenditure of money, or perhaps rather a financial transaction—that is, the purchase of sand and gravel by residents near this reservation who would pay reasonable prices for sand and gravel obtained on the reservation.

Mr. GARRETT. I had occasion recently to make an inquiry about a matter of taking sand and gravel from a navigable stream, and I learned that the department now had authority, without any act of Congress, to permit that in so far as the Government's interest was concerned. Of course, they would have to arrange with the riparian owners about the rights to it. I wondered if we did not have a general law to cover military reservations. I assume, however, that this is necessary, or else it would not be offered.

Mr. McKEOWN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is anticipated that persons may take this sand and gravel and speculate on it, instead of using it for their own buildings?

Mr. OLNEY. No. It is absolutely under the discretion of the War Department, who would protect both Government and the public, and the price is to be fixed within reason.

Mr. McKEOWN. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OLNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COMMUTATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES BY WORLD WAR VETERANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13592) to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to commute their entries.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the necessity for this bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the present law giving soldiers of the war with Germany a credit for the time that they served in the war compels them to live at least a year on the homestead. If they had served two years in the war they have to reside at least one year upon their homestead entries. Now, it has developed since the war that a number of soldiers were so severely wounded and incapacitated that they are unable to return to their homesteads.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This only applies to wounded and disabled soldiers?

Mr. SINNOTT. It only applies to wounded or disabled soldiers or sailors; those who were incapacitated during the war and are unable to return to their homesteads. It allows them to commute, and under the commutation laws one has to live 14 months on his homestead entry, less the absent period. This gives the incapacitated soldier an opportunity to purchase his homestead the same as a civilian may do to-day.

Mr. CANNON. How do you mean? He takes title without purchase, does he not?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; he takes title by paying $1.25 an acre. That is a privilege given to the civilian homesteader to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I notice in the State of Oregon to-day a large number of soldiers are applying now, having a preferential right. Do they have the right to commute?

Mr. SINNOTT. This bill relates only to those who were disabled or incapacitated during the war.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I wanted to know for information how the application was made. It seems soldiers have a preference right. They are going on the old California-Oregon line now.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is covered by a special act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They have a right to pay for the land later at $1.25?

Mr. SINNOTT. No. They pay $2.50 an acre, because the Supreme Court has held that the railroad was entitled to $2.50 an acre out of that grant.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He gets the preferential right?

Mr. SINNOTT. I think perhaps he would get credit for the time he was in the service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any settler or entryman under the homestead laws of the United States, who, after settlement, application, or entry and prior to November 11, 1918, enlisted or was actually engaged in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the war with Germany, who has been honorably discharged and because of physical incapacities due to service is unable to return to the land may make proof, without further residence or cultivation, at such time and place as may be authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, and receive patent to the land by him so entered or settled upon by making payment for the land at the price fixed by law as in case of commutation: Provided, That no such patent shall issue prior to the survey of the land.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GANDY. In line 10, after the word "residence" insert the word "improvement," so that it shall read, "without further residence, improvement, or cultivation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GANDY: On page 1, line 10, after the word "residence" insert the word "improvement."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. On page 2, line 2, I move to amend by striking out all of line 2 down to the semicolon in line 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GANDY: Page 2, line 2, strike out all of line 2 and down to the semicolon in line 3—

Mr. CANNON. What are those lines?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

by making payment for the land at the price fixed by law as in case of commutation.

Mr. CANNON. I understood this was to affect the boys that were wounded and unable to go on the land. We are taking awfully good care of those boys now. It runs up into many hundreds of millions of dollars. This is to give them a homestead besides?

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. I want to say that my thought is that after having provided that there first should be a finding by the Secretary of the Interior that the man, because of his service in the war, is physically incapacitated from going on the land, he ought not to be required to pay for it; or, in other words, he ought not to start out on this land with a mortgage on it.

Mr. CANNON. If a man is physically incapacitated, if he is armless or legless or sightless or otherwise physically incapacitated, he is wonderfully cared for, with hospital treatment, and his dependents are cared for, and he gets his $100 or $120 a month, and so on. Now, the question in my mind is whether this be in point of fact in the interest of the men that I have described or whether the very moment it becomes a law they will be encouraged by speculators and agents, and so on, to pay them so much for their services.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. This relates only to the soldiers who made their application for entry prior to November 11, 1918. It does not apply to soldiers returning from the war and thereafter making an entry.

Mr. CANNON. But it does apply, if they are not able to go on and get their $120 a month? Would it be apt to cut out soldiers who are not disabled and who are not receiving this money? Would it be so extensive that it would prevent them from getting the homestead?

Mr. SINNOTT. The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota would give the soldier the land without any further payment. That is the effect of the gentleman's amendment. I think it should be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It would have the same effect as if he introduced a provision that the soldier would not be required to live upon the land the balance of the residence period. It simply excuses him from residence and allows him to make final proof.

Mr. SINNOTT. It also excuses him from making the payment of $1.25 an acre.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If he went there and lived six months more on the land, he would get the land anyway.

Mr. SINNOTT. Not many of them have made application.

Mr. CANNON. I am anticipating that it will not be for the benefit of the soldier but for the speculator, you know, who never was in the war.

Mr. SINNOTT. It could not be taken advantage of by anyone else applying for the land.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that; but they can hunt up this man, if the land is valuable, and charge him so much for their services.

Mr. SINNOTT. He would have to be a soldier who made the homestead entry prior to going into the war, and then became so disabled that he could not return to the land.

Mr. CANNON. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, by unanimous consent, the title of the bill was amended to correspond with the text.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Yellowstone Park bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Yellowstone Park bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] may extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Pilgrim memorial bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. WALSH] may extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Pilgrim memorial bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS IN CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12788) authorizing any tribes or bands of Indians in California to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Let us have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which any tribes or bands of Indians of California may have against the United States may be submitted to the Court of Claims for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes or bands from the United States for lands formerly occupied and claimed by them in the said State, which lands are alleged to have been taken from them without compensation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribes or bands against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said court, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribes or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the said tribe or any band thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States shall be the party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribes the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the aforesaid tribes or bands of Indians of California, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary; official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribes or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action, the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribes, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fees decreed by said court be more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered by such cause, such fee to be paid from said judgment.

With the following committee amendments:

After the word "equitable," in line 6, page 2, insert the following phrase: "which shall be based upon the fair value of any such lands at the time the treaties were ratified by the several tribes or bands of Indians, not to exceed $1.25 per acre."

After the word "thereof," in line 15, page 2, insert the words "including gratuities."

Line 18, page 2, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, this bill ought not to be considered with a handful of Members present, and therefore I object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield; but I am going to object.

Mr. RAKER. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this morning already two bills on this calendar which are practically identical in form with this bill have passed the House—H. R. 5163 and S. 806.

Mr. CANNON. If those two ought not to have been passed, is that any reason why a third one should pass?

Mr. RAKER. They ought to have passed. This bill ought to pass, and I am satisfied that if the gentleman will permit me, I can call his attention to the extreme justice of it, and that he will not urge his objection.

This bill simply allows the Indians of California to present their claims to the Court of Claims to determine whether or not they have any rights against the Government; and it provides that all funds, gratuities, or otherwise that have already been paid them shall be charged up against the Indians and the Government given credit for such payments.

Full hearing was had on this bill by the committee when all the members of the committee were present. Representatives of the Department of the Interior and of the Indian Bureau were present, and I will say to the gentleman that the chairman of the committee said this seemed to be one of the clearest and plainest cases that had been presented since he had been chairman of the committee. It simply authorizes them to go into the courts and present their rights.

Mr. CANNON. What will happen then?

Mr. RAKER. Then, if they establish a valid right, the court may adjudicate what that is, deducting the amount already paid to the Indians by gratuities or otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. I call the gentleman's attention to section 3, which provides for the payment of the attorneys. We all understand about the attorneys in Washington, D. C., and we have a court that is already burdened, world without end. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there again?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RAKER. In the bill H. R. 1563 is this provision:

Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

In the other bill, which passed this morning, S. 806, is this provision:

Provided, That in no case shall the fees and expenses decreed by said court be in excess of 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment.

That identical provision has been contained in all these bills in the past during this Congress.

Mr. CANNON. They would not have passed by unanimous consent with a handful of Members present if I had been in the House.

Mr. RAKER. The same gentlemen are here who were here when those bills passed, and I want to say to the gentleman this——

Mr. CANNON. Well, I object. I do not want to be discourteous. I will withhold the objection if the gentleman wants to talk further. The objection is not personal to him at all.

Mr. RAKER. I want to appeal to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois on this particular claim. There have been 10 or 12 bills reported out by the Committee on Indian Affairs that contain practically the same provision as this bill. This bill goes further than any of them in protecting the Government. In allowing credits to the Government for moneys advanced to the Indians it includes the words "gratuities," so that whatever the Government may have given these Indians it will get credit for and the Indians will be charged with the amounts which they have received.

Mr. CANNON. This reservation has been sold, has it not?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Disposed of?

Mr. RAKER. Long ago.

Mr. CANNON. Under legislation?

Mr. RAKER. No; that is the trouble.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is not disposed of unless it is disposed of legally.

Mr. RAKER. It has been sold and disposed of. I know the gentleman will listen to this and will not object when he hears the facts.

Mr. CANNON. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. RAKER. In 1851 and 1852 there were tribes of Indians in California who entered into 18 treaties with the authorized agents of the Federal Government. The Indians then claimed under the treaty of Guadeloupe-Hidalgo between the United States and Mexico great tracts of land in California, and under the Mexican law and under that treaty it was theirs as of right, just as you and I own our property to-day. The Government entered into these treaties and the Indians reduced their claims altogether to 7,500,000 acres.

The Government agreed to give them that land in reservations. It also agreed to give them $1,500,000 in money. The Indians thought the Government would carry out its contract. They were to be faithful, were to abide by the law, were to assist the Government, which they did. Then the Federal Government went to work and took every acre of this land, and has sold it, and the Indians have not received 1 acre in return under these 18 treaties which they solemnly entered into with the Federal Government.

These Indians are now about 20,000 in number. All they ask is the opportunity to go into the Court of Claims and present their claims there to see whether or not they have any rights, whether or not the Federal Government took these 7,500,000 acres of theirs from them without just cause.

Mr. CANNON. There was a treaty with them?

Mr. RAKER. I had not quite finished. The Government took the land and the Indians got nothing.

Mr. CANNON. Then the Government has no right to take the land.

Mr. RAKER. But it took the land; the Indians are there and unprovided for. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to give these unfortunate Indians the permission to go into the Court of Claims and establish their rights.

Mr. CANNON. All this happened way back in 1852?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CANNON. I will object, for I think this begets a lot of lawsuits for speculators to work up claims. It has all the earmarks of a bill for the benefit of speculators, and I do not think it ought to pass.

Mr. RAKER. It has no connection with speculators; it has to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CANNON. That is an easy job.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman, under the circumstances, will not object. Two similar bills have passed to-day with the same Members of the House here present now. I want to say that the Indians of California have had poorer treatment than any other Indians in the United States.

Mr. CANNON. I want to understand the gentleman a little further. As I understand it, these Indians claim to own this land. The treaty was made with them in which they relinquished all their rights and the Government paid them as it agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. No; it did not. That is the trouble; the Government has not paid them a cent, but took over this land.

Mr. CANNON. Then the Indians have not parted with their title?

Mr. RAKER. The Government took it under the Mexican title. They claimed it all, and if they found an Indian that they did not like on the land they moved him off and sold it. These Indians were without any counsel, without any adviser, and without anybody to protect them. They have been pushed from pillar to post and thousands have starved to death for want of protection. The Department of the Interior has thoroughly investigated the case and says that the Indians deserve better treatment; they have had poorer treatment than any other Indians in the United States. Now, I think we ought to give them a chance to present their claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter further. It looks to me like there was an African in the woodpile. The Indians are all dead.

Mr. RAKER. No; there are 20,000 of them living.

Mr. CANNON. But they are the descendants of the original Indians.

Mr. RAKER. I know they are living, because I know where they live—all over the State of California.

Mr. CANNON. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I will object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, how often has this request been made with respect to this bill?

Mr. RAKER. This is the first and only time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution (H. J. Res. 302) with reference to the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

RAILROAD DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee reported the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARRETT reserved all points of order.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8690) for the relief of certain homestead entrymen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, some time ago we passed some homestead laws providing that where a man has settled on less than 320 acres of what is known as arid, nonirrigable, dry-farming land, under the enlarged-homestead law, he may take an additional homestead entry of a sufficient amount of the same character of land, if he can find any vacant, to make up the 320 acres. There is a 20-mile provision in one law. In other words, Congress decided that every settler is entitled to 320 acres of arid, dry-farming land, and that that amount of that kind of land is necessary to make a living upon.

Mr. GANDY. If the gentleman will yield, I hope the gentleman does not want that statement to go into the RECORD. The permission is not limited to 20 miles; he may go to any place in the United States under the section law and get the additional land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There was a 20-mile provision as to residence in one act, as I recollect it. The same kind of provision—as to allowing an additional entry of a sufficient amount of land to make up 640 acres—was passed in regard to the 640-acre stock-raising homestead. The Congress passed a law that every settler on the public domain was entitled to 640 acres of dry, arid, nonirrigable grazing land for stock-raising purposes as a stock-raising homestead. Since that time we have passed laws providing that where a man had made a settlement upon that character of land, and did not have the full 640 acres of such grazing, stock-raising ground, he might take additional entry of such an amount as was necessary to make up the 640 acres. But that did not and does not apply to people who are settled in any of the forest reserves. A good many people all over the West took some dry pieces of land within the forest reserves to try to make a living. Some took 40, some 80, and some 160 acres. They could not, and can not now, take more than 160 acres in any forest reserve. So that all settlers within the forest reserves have 160 acres or less. Some of them have good land and have it, or parts of it, irrigated, and have good homes, and are quite prosperous. But many of them have dry and arid and barren land, and their limited amount is not enough upon which to support a family, and they can not get any more within the forest reserves, principally because the Forest Service will not let them; so they must get some more land outside of the reserves if they can or practically starve out.

The Interior Department says that it is not fair to limit a man that happens to have 160 acres or less of that character of land in the forest reserve and not limit the man on the outside. So this bill has the hearty approval of the Interior Department to put the two classes of settlers as near as possible on an equality. That is all there is to this bill. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] has a suggestion which he desires to make in the form of an amendment, and I have no objection to it. The bill as I wrote it requires a settler to take land only within 20 miles of his original claim. He calls my attention to the fact that in some cases settlers can not get outside of the forest reserve within 20 miles. In other words, we should extend the distance or remove the 20-mile limit and let the man take it any place on the outside of the forest reserve wherever he can find any such land vacant.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is this land in detached portions? In other words, if he has a location of 75 acres he can get the other 245 acres?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; outside of the forest reserve, the same as the present law is now, as applied to settlers outside of the reserves.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. And it must be of the same general character of land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead entryman of 160 acres or less of lands of the character described as subject to entry under the provisions of the enlarged-homestead act of February 19, 1909, and June 17, 1910, who has not submitted final proof upon his existing entry, and any homestead entryman who has submitted final proof, or received patent, for such an amount of lands that are of the character described in said act, and who owns and resides upon the said homestead entry, where said lands are within a national forest, may make an additional entry for and obtain patent to such an amount of land, of that same character, not in a national forest, and within a radius of 20 miles from said homestead entry, as, when the area thereof is added to the area of the original entry, will not exceed 320 acres, and residence upon the original entry shall be credited on both entries; but improvements must be made on the additional entry as required by said act.

SEC. 2. That any homestead entryman of 160 acres or less of lands of the character described as subject to entry under the provisions of the stock-raising homestead act of December 29, 1916, who has not submitted final proof upon his existing entry, and also any homestead entryman who has submitted final proof or received patent, for such an amount of lands that are of the character described as subject to entry under the provisions of the said stock-raising homestead act, and who owns and resides upon the said homestead entry, where said lands are within a national forest, may make an additional entry for and obtain patent to such an amount of land of that same character, not in a national forest and within a radius of 20 miles from said homestead entry, as, when the area thereof is added to the area of the original entry, will not exceed 640 acres, and residence upon the original entry shall be credited on both entries; but improvements must be made on the additional entry equal to $1.25 for each acre thereof.

SEC. 3. That any person otherwise qualified who has obtained title under the homestead laws to less than one-quarter section of land may make an original entry and obtain title under the provisions of the enlarged-homestead act of February 19, 1909, and the act of June 17, 1910, for such an area of public lands designated thereunder, as will, when added to the area of the prior perfected entry, not exceed 320 acres, even though the former entry shall not have been designated, or be of the character subject to entry under the provisions of the said enlarged-homestead act.

SEC. 4. That any person otherwise qualified who has obtained title under the homestead laws to less than one-quarter section of land may make an original entry and obtain title under the provisions of the stock-raising homestead act of December 29, 1916, for such an area of public land designated thereunder, as will, when added to the area of their prior perfected entry, not exceed 640 acres, even though the former entry shall not have been designated, or be of the character subject to entry under the said stock-raising homestead act.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This bill is subject to debate?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. This is a Union Calendar bill, and should be read by sections. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to interrupt the passage of the bill merely to call attention to the fact that here is another land law that hops back and forth between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior. In this bill we are trying to relieve men who homesteaded within forest reserves, the forest reserves being under the control of the Agriculture Department. They are, however, to find lands which have been or may hereafter be designated or classified by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Outside of the forest reserves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. All this does is to allow a settler in the forest reserves to get another piece of arid land outside of the forest reserve sufficient in amount to make up, with what he has, the amount of 320 acres of dry-farming land or 640 acres of stock-raising land.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and that is all very well for a homesteader in a dry, treeless forest reserve, who is up against it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I know he is. I have some of them in my State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He has 160 acres and can not do much of anything except scratch for a livelihood.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; and the poor fellow can not scratch hard enough on that kind of land to raise a family.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But he can hop outside of the control of the Agriculture Department and into the control of the Interior Department and get another 150 acres of land, but you do nothing for the forest reserve fellow who is in a real forest reserve.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. God knows I would like to do something for him if it were possible. I am as much in favor of doing that as is the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He is inside a real forest reserve. He went there and went right through the timber to get agricultural land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is true in the gentleman's State of Washington, but in my State and most of its intermountains the settler I refer to in this bill is not in or near any timber and did not pass through any to get to where he has settled.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But this fellow that I am talking about is on a timber homestead in a forest reserve, where he has cleared 20 acres or so and is making a precarious living. He can not sell the timber.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not think his land would be designated as of this character. This bill will not apply to a settler on good land, or in timberland, only to dry land or rough or arid grazing land.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Absolutely not. That is it. He can not move. He can not get another piece of land outside.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. The settler the gentleman refers to is in dead hard luck.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He is surrounded by a forest reserve and until the Government wants to buy his timber or authorizes him to sell it he can not dispose of it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is true; I fully realize that, and I would like to help him, but we can not do so in this bill. I am trying to relieve some settlers in my State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the laws prohibit him from burning it, so he has an elephant on his hands. But nobody gives him any sympathy, because he is supposed to have some potential value in timberland that in thirty, fifty, or a hundred years from now may be sold.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But just because some of those settlers in his State are up against it the gentleman does not want to deprive many others of relief, does he?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; but I want to point out that the effort is always to relieve the fellow in the dry-grass country, but that the fellow in the timber is supposed by somebody to have stung the Government, which is not the case. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "of the character described" and insert "which have been or may hereafter be designated or classified by the Secretary of the Interior."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "lands," strike out the words "that are" and insert "which have been or may hereafter be designated or classified by the Secretary of the Interior as."

Page 2, line 10, after the word "but," strike out the word "improvements" and insert "cultivation."

"For the purposes of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate as subject to the enlarged homestead acts lands within national forests."

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "June 17, 1910," and insert "acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Also the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the comma, strike out the words "and within a radius of 20 miles from said homestead entry" and insert, after the word "entries," in line 10, the following: "if the additional entry is not more than 20 miles from the original entry, otherwise the residence requirements of the homestead laws must be complied with."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "lands," strike out the words "of the character described" and insert "which have been or may hereafter be designated or classified by the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 9, after the word "thereof," insert:

"For the purposes of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate under the stock-raising homestead act lands within national forests."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that the amendment comes to the very nub of the matter I discussed a moment ago. The amendment reads:

For the purpose of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate under the stock-raising homestead acts lands within national forests.

The Secretary of the Interior does not look after lands within the national forests.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me call attention to the fact that this language says "for the purposes of this act." Now, the purposes of this act are to allow a man who has some dry-farming land or stock-raising land in a forest reserve to take the same character of land outside, but it started out by saying, "Provided," virtually, "That the land has been now so designated." I call attention to the fact that the land has never been so designated yet, and we give authority to the Interior Department to designate before getting the benefit of that act, so that clause was put in there merely for the purpose of allowing the Interior Department to designate a piece of land that a man now has. It does not let him get any more land, it designates no more land, but if Mr. Jones has got now a 160-acre homestead in the forest reserve or dry-farming land which never has been designated as such the Interior Department will have the right to designate that man Jones's land as dry-farming land for the purpose of letting him get the benefit of this act. It does not encroach any on the forest reserves at all——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I wish it did encroach a little.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The trouble is we can not do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman think now that the Interior Department fellow is to do some "designating" that he will go around with his surveying instruments and map-making devices?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. It will only be on application. If a man applies to him and says, "I have been living here for 10 years on a piece of dry land; I can not irrigate it, it is arid land," he will ask to have the agent of the Interior Department, and they are the only ones who do that kind of work—ask to have one of those look at that land and report if it is the character of either an enlarged homestead or a stock-raising homestead, and if the agent of the Interior Department makes that report on that man's homestead then he will have the right to select outside.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope it will work that way, but I am afraid that it will result in duplications between the two departments, who will cross each other and be engaged at the same time in doing the same work, all to the cost of the Government and to the confusion and detriment of the settler.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; the forest reserves we do not encroach upon at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The Secretary of the Interior does not designate areas within the national forests which should be withdrawn from forest reserves and devoted to agriculture?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No, not at all; and this bill does not give him any such authority.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman says that if any question arises whether or not these designated lands should be withdrawn the authority to designate is with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said the Interior Department is the only department that ever designates any land as dry-farming land subject to entry under the enlarged homestead act, or as stock-raising homestead land subject to entry under the 640-acre stock-raising homestead act, and if a man now has a homestead within a forest reserve—and there are thousands of them who have these arid dry-farming lands, which they can not irrigate, and they can not get more than 160 acres within a forest reserve under the present law—what the settler would have to do would be to apply to the Interior Department and ask them to send an agent to look at his homestead, and if the agent of the Interior Department reports that his homestead is of a character of land that is now designated, generally speaking, as dry-farming, enlarged homestead land, or as grazing, stock-raising homestead land, then he can make application for an additional tract of land outside the forest reserve. Now, the Forest Service has got nothing to do with that at all. That transaction does not affect the Forest Service at all.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I understand this amendment suggested by the committee—I will read it:

For the purposes of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate under the stock-raising homestead act lands within national forests.

Now, pardon me just a moment. It seems to me that authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to invade the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture and go into the national forest and designate lands that thereafter shall not be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; the gentleman is mistaken. The lands now occupied by those homestead settlers are entered now under the homestead laws. They are not a part of the forest reserves and are not subject to the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department. They are within the exterior boundaries of the forest reserves, but they are not a part of them; and until they make final proof and obtain a patent to their claims they are under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. GANDY. Now, all this proposed measure does is to provide that one within a forest reserve who has land of the character described in the enlarged homestead act or land of the character described in the section act may take such amount of that kind of land as will bring the total up to the total provided for either the enlarged homestead or the section act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to designate land within a forest reserve——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. For the purposes of this act only.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For such and such a purpose, whereas now he has not such authority. The only authority for designated lands within the national forests which shall be withdrawn from the national forests and devoted to any other purpose is placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he must pursue the exact method pointed out by the law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. When a man now has a homestead claim within a forest reserve, why he is already outside of the forest reserve, so far as jurisdiction is concerned, notwithstanding his land is within the reserve. He is not under the Agricultural Department at all; he is under the Interior Department.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This bill does not let the Interior Department go one inch outside of its homestead claim.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But this authorizes it to designate land for certain purposes within national forests.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. It authorizes the Interior Department to designate the settlers' homestead claims only as to the character of its land.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is what the language means.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. It says, "For the purposes of this act." What are the purposes of this act? To allow the homesteader who is now in the forest reserve and has got a valid existing homestead entry, and who is now under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department to-day—it allows the Interior Department to say whether or not that homestead is dry arid land, but not a foot outside of his own ground can the Secretary designate.

If the settler was outside of the reserve, he has a right to have 320 or 640 acres of it, owing to its character. My good friend from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] will tell you, and anybody from the West will tell you, that this bill does not encroach one inch upon the forest reserves or upon the Agricultural Department or its jurisdiction.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Of course, I listen to the gentleman from Oregon when he talks about these matters, and he knows a great deal more about them than I do, but I know the meaning of plain words, and in my judgment it authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to exercise authority over lands within the national forests.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. He is exercising authority only over lands now under his jurisdiction.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It does not say so, and it is not safeguarded at all, in my judgment.

Mr. SINNOTT. All this amendment means is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to examine the lands within the national forests to ascertain whether or not the present holding of the homesteader is of that character as to entitle him to take additional lands outside the forest. That is all this means.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And that has nothing to do with the Agricultural Department or with the Forest Service.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is, in case the regular procedure has been taken, the Secretary of Agriculture having set aside this land within the national forests, and it having been located as a homestead, the Secretary of the Interior has the right to examine and determine the character of it, and determine whether the man has some other rights at some other place?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is right. Outside of the forest.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It may be properly drawn for that purpose, but it did not occur to me that that was its meaning. I like to see legislation drawn in such a way that it has only one meaning, and the head of a department can do only one thing—that is, what the Congress intended.

Mr. SINNOTT. Under this act there is no right given in any forest reserve, and this designation is made for the purposes of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, in line 20, page 2, after the figures "1916" and the comma, I move to amend by adding "and acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GANDY: Page 2, line 20, after the figures "1916," insert "and acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, strike out all of section 3.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 3, line 24, strike out all of section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to section 2, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 3, after the word "forest," strike out the words "and within a radius of 20 miles from said homestead entry" and insert, after the word "entries," the following: "if the additional entry is not more than 20 miles from the original entry, otherwise the residence requirements of the homestead laws must be complied with."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 1.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I notice that there are some other bills reported April 13 that are on this Calendar for Unanimous Consent. How does that happen?

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair has already been called to that. The Chair was going to state that he thinks those bills, while they are on the calendar, could not be considered to-day unless by special recognition of the Chair. Not having been considered will not injure their status.

THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House to prefer a unanimous-consent request.

The commission that was appointed to visit the Virgin Islands and make report are filing their report to-day, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed as a public document of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the report referred to be printed as a public document. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be indulged for one moment to make a statement concerning this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT. This report of the commission, of which I had the honor to be a member, is a unanimous report, and I think a most excellent one. I had nothing to do with drawing it, but I congratulate the gentleman who did draw it. I think it proper to say for the RECORD this, namely, that the commission reports that it is not deemed advisable at this time to undertake to change the plan of government now in operation. It suggests that there are some very vital and fundamental changes necessary in the system now in force, but proceeds upon the theory, and doubtless a correct one, that those now operating the government should first develop these new plans and processes. I think that is a correct idea.

I simply wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion, under the act of Congress—the date of which I have forgotten, but it was the act providing for the temporary government and our taking over the islands under the terms of the treaty—under that act, in my opinion, before the present government of the Virgin Islands can change their laws it will be necessary to have an enabling act by Congress. I think that should be said in order that those charged with responsibility in the Virgin Islands may clearly understand in the development of their laws and their new system that it will require an enabling act on the part of Congress. That enabling act, I have no doubt, Congress will be glad to give if the changes they make meet with the approval of Congress.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the question that is suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is an open question. The act by which we established the government in the Virgin Islands provided that the existing laws should be in effect until Congress changed them. However, the existing laws provide that the councils, which still continue in the islands, being the legislative assembly, should have the power to modify or to amend their laws whenever they so desire, so that there is a question as to just exactly how much power may be exercised by the existing councils.

Now, these councils have made, and are now making, a complete Americanization or recodification of the old Danish laws that have existed for many years in the islands. It was thought best by the commission that that work should be completed and that, in fact, it was best that they should be enacted by their local councils. It is always best that the local authorities should pass their own laws, and then if they require any approval by act of Congress we may give them such approval as may be necessary. So I think it would be the unanimous idea of the commission that they should go on with their amendment and recodification of the laws, and that if any act of Congress is necessary to make them effective we can give it to them.

THE WOMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill that I am sending to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13229) to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau.

SEC. 2. That the said bureau shall be in charge of a director, a woman, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive an annual compensation of $5,000. It shall be the duty of said bureau to formulate standards and policies which shall promote the welfare of wage-earning women, improve their working conditions, increase their efficiency, and advance their opportunities for profitable employment. The said bureau shall investigate and report to the said department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of women in industry. The director of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations in such a manner and to such extent as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe.

SEC. 3. That there shall be in said bureau an assistant director, to be appointed by the Secretary of Labor, who shall receive an annual compensation of $3,500 and shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor.

SEC. 4. That there is hereby authorized to be employed by said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, assistants, clerks, and other employees at such rates of compensation and in such numbers as Congress may from time to time provide by appropriations.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Labor is hereby directed to furnish sufficient quarters, office furniture and equipment, etc., for the work of this bureau.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a second.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know about that. Why should it be? There is just a handful of people here.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We can get them here.

Mr. CANNON. I guess you had better get them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will take their places as tellers. As many as are in favor of a second will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 0.

The SPEAKER. A second is ordered by tellers.

Mr. CANNON. I think a quorum is not present. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this vote 266 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has 20 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire that the gavel may fall when I have consumed as much as five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will notify the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This bill provides for the establishment under provisions of law in the Bureau of Labor of a woman's bureau. That bureau was created in the summer of 1918 and has been provided for by the Committee on Appropriations up until this time. The matter will undoubtedly be provided for in the appropriation bill this year, and it was thought to be the gracious and proper thing to do to pass a law under which that bureau should have an authorized existence in the Department of Labor.

Whatever else may be said, we may as well understand that from this time on women will have a greater part in the industries of the country in the future than they have had in the past. The war taught the women that they could perform useful labor in the industries of the country, and it also taught those engaged in industry that the women made good employees in many of the industries of the country. There is now no question about the necessity of providing for some regulatory measures for the proper employment of women. It is idle to say that their interests can be taken care of just as well by the Bureau of Labor under the control of men as under the control of women. If anyone will stop to consider for a moment, he will know that there are physical differences that the women understand, which make it important that provision be made in all the industries of the country for the methods under which the women work and for their accommodations while employed, which make it not only wise but humane that women shall have charge of this sort of thing.

I recall that a few years ago women employed in this city were not provided with the accommodations that humankind need. We passed a law making it necessary for those employing women to provide these human necessities for the women employed in those places. One of the men who strenuously opposed the measure providing for these necessities in his industry came back in six months and said that it was the best investment he had made in connection with his enterprise. He would not to-day be without the conveniences, the places for the women to rest, and so forth, that were provided for under that law. He would not dispense with them under any conditions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the proper conditions prevailed in our Department of Labor, which will have the appointment of some and the supervision of all of the employees in this woman's bureau, to be provided under this proposed legislation, I would be heartily in favor of this bill. I heartily favor a woman's bureau such as planned, although I am against establishing new bureaus, as the Government is already overridden with bureaus now. But I would vote for this woman's bureau were it not for the awful conditions now existing in the Department of Labor.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I do not wish just yet to be interrupted in the remarks I am making just now. But I call the attention of my colleague to the dreadful conditions which prevail in the Department of Labor at this moment. Let me read some excerpts of speeches from the RECORD. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 12, 1920, pages 5551–5552, excerpts from the speech of Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON of Washington, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the present situation concerning certain deportation cases. I wish to call attention to the fact that this morning, if the Nickle Plate train from Chicago was on time, there arrived in New York from New Orleans one Paul Bosco, who is, in my opinion, a dangerous alien, an anarchist, and an enemy of this country. The evidence against this man was such that in New Orleans his application for release on bond was denied. Appeals were made to let him out on $500 bond and denied. These appeals were made by New York attorneys who devote much time to the interests of Socialists, I. W. W.'s, and anarchists. Next the appeal was made to have the bond fixed at $1,000, and to have the alien transferred to New York. Weinberger, who continuously represents anarchists, got this fellow's bond reduced to $1,000, the bond to be placed at Ellis Island, New York, the man to be transferred from New Orleans to New York at Government expense, and there to be released on that bond, there to connive and bring about proceedings that will keep him in the country, even though he said at his hearing that he did not care to have an attorney; that he was perfectly willing to be deported; even though he stood up in the court room at Morgantown, W. Va., after he had been convicted, and said that he hoped the red flag would replace the Stars and Stripes in the United States at an early date.

Thus in no uncertain terms our chairman of the Immigration Committee, who has had one branch of the Department of Labor under investigation for some time, charges Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of the Department of Labor, with collusion with anarchists against the interests of this Government.

But let me quote further from the speech of this distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This alien Bosco believes in force against the Government. He wants the red flag in place of the Stars and Stripes. And yet, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is more than an even bet that he will never be deported from the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I have been telling the gentleman for months.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have plenty of law. Something is the matter with the execution of it. When there is doubt, the decision is against the Government.

According to the newspapers on Saturday morning, the Assistant Secretary of Labor, in the case of Thomas Truss, of Baltimore, arrested as a communist and ordered deported, has ordered Truss released. He referred to this case at length as typical of the thousands which he will be called upon to decide, and will, I suppose, release ninety-five out of every one hundred thereof.

And, Mr. Speaker, this chairman of the Immigration Committee on April 12, 1920, placed in the RECORD data concerning anarchist cases evidencing that numerous anarchist enemies of this Government have been protected, favored, and released from deserved deportation by Louis F. Post, the Assistant Secretary of Labor.

But let me quote further from the gentleman's speech:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me explain the situation: Here is the Department of Justice making a number of arrests, 2,700 or more, for deportation. The cases are turned over to the Department of Labor. The Commissioner of Immigration recommends deportation. The Assistant Secretary of Labor cancels the warrant. The Department of Justice can not make a charge against another department of the Government, or does not want to. But, if it answers the gentleman, here is the Department of Labor, through the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Post, resolving in favor of the alien wherever he can. The net result is that the large amount of money authorized by this Congress to be placed in the Department of Justice for arrest of radical and revolutionary persons has gone for little, and the further great amount placed in the hands of the Department of Labor for the deportation of such undesirable aliens has likewise gone for little. The law says the decision of the Secretary shall be final.

Now, Mr. Speaker and colleagues, the foregoing comes from the chairman of one of our committees which has had this matter under investigation and should know whereof he speaks. It is just what I have been telling you on the floor of this House during the past year or more, that the Department of Labor is turning loose dangerous anarchists faster than the Department of Justice can apprehend them, and when they are tried and convicted of anarchy and ordered deported they appeal their cases, and this Assistant Secretary of Labor, Louis F. Post, sets aside their deportation judgments and releases them to further prey upon this Government.

Now, let me read to you an excerpt from a recent speech of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY]. I read from page 5671 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 14, 1920, as follows:

Mr. DAVEY. Right here I want to bring out one of the saddest things in the history of the last few months of our Government. That is the action of one Louis F. Post in the Department of Labor. He serves in a Democratic administration, in a Democratic department, but what I am going to say is not an indictment of the Democratic Party, and I hope that no thought of politics will be injected into this. If it were an indictment of my party, I would mighty soon get out of it, but it is not. We have down there in the Department of Labor a man whose sympathies evidently are with the enemies of our Government. [Applause.] Just a little while ago this same man Post, after the warrant for the deportation of Ludwig Martens had been issued, withdrew this warrant and held up the deportation. Under our laws he has the power to do that. Furthermore, although Martens is the avowed enemy of our country, the avowed representative of Bolshevik Russia, and comes here to spread his damnable doctrines, yet this man Post allowed Martens to go free without bail on the recognizance of his attorney, ex-Senator Hardwick, and he assured Mr. Hardwick that he would take no action without consulting him.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just one moment, and then I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas. Here is the Department of Labor, with an Assistant Secretary who has final say in all deportation cases affecting anarchists, concerning whom numerous Members of this House have already expressed an absolute want of confidence. Numerous Members of this House have charged this Assistant Secretary of Labor with malfeasance in office, friendly to criminals, and with favoring the anarchist enemies of this Government by preventing their deportation; and there is a resolution pending right now in this House to impeach him, and I understand that it has met with such favorable approval from the steering committee that it will be brought up here within a day or two under a rule from the Rules Committee, which now brings in this rule seeking to make this legislation in order. Why do you not go higher up? Do you believe that for 14 long months an Assistant Secretary of Labor has protected dangerous anarchists in this country and prevented their deportation and released them, not one or two or three but hundreds of them, without the knowledge of his superior officer?

Do you not believe that after it was brought to the attention of the Secretary of Labor through the various speeches and resolutions here in the House, and he has taken no action whatever in removing Mr. Post, that the Secretary of Labor himself condones and approves of his action? What other conclusion can you reach? It is the only conclusion that a reasonable man can reach. Has not Secretary Wilson been trying to free the anarchist Mooney? Yet you now want to put another department in his hands for maladministration. If they understood present conditions, our good women would vote against this measure just now, until we clean up this department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. In one moment; I have not quite finished. I have before me volume 1, No. 1, April, 1920, issue of the Knot-Hole, a magazine just out, published in Washington. It has for its front-page salutation the following:

Conceived in sin and brought forth in Washington. We have no high moral purpose in publishing this paper. The Knot-Hole is simply a two-faced undertaking without manners or morals.

And on its editorial page 4 we find that Hugh Reid is editor and the following admission:

The Knot-Hole is sometimes scurrilous.

On page 286 of the Congressional Directory for February, 1920, we find that this Hugh Reid is private secretary to this same Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of the Department of Labor; and on page 1044 of the Official Register we find that this Hugh Reid is drawing from this Government a salary of $2,100, which, with his $240 bonus, makes $2,340 per annum. That is the salary he is drawing from the United States Government as secretary to Assistant Secretary Louis F. Post, of the Department of Labor, and at the same time he is editing a scurrilous magazine of this character. What does it do? It attacks Congressmen in a vicious way. It does not stop there. It attacks members of the Cabinet, and even the President himself—my President and your President. And yet you want to add another bureau to and put more employees in this Department of Labor. Here is a letter that I wrote Mr. Post on March 31 asking him whether or not Hugh Reid was one of his employees, and to this good day he has never answered it. Have I not the right to an answer as a Member of Congress? Not getting his answer, I had to find out some other way, by looking up the matter in the Directory and Official Register, that he was his private secretary, because I knew that Hugh Reid must be an employee of the Department of Labor as soon as I saw the scurrilous magazine edited by him and then found articles therefrom immediately reproduced in the Olden Advance, published in my district.

I am so glad that there is one man out of that Department of Labor that I do not know what to do. John B. Densmore is at last off the Government pay rolls to-day, thank God.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment; I have not quite gotten through. You remember a year and a half ago when I began the fight against Densmore's $10,000,000 bureau in the Department of Labor some of you could not quite agree with me at that time. Here is a list of those highly paid officers in his department that by my fight we have at last gotten practically all of them off the Government pay roll. Now, my good colleagues, you can see the purpose I had through an investigation that I made by hard work at night when some of you were asleep. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD this list showing the employees that were on the pay roll of this department here in Washington on February 5, 1919, and the most of which now we have succeeded in cutting off the pay roll, and thank God that we have at last gotten rid of John B. Densmore and much of his crowd.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a list which he referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Practically all the foregoing long list of useless employees have at last been gotten off of the pay roll, and no Government business has suffered, for there are more jobs now with good pay than there are men willing to work to fill them.

You will remember that during the debate on the sundry civil appropriation bill on Friday, February 28, 1919, I took the position that the balance of the previous appropriation made still available of $1,543,400, supplemented by the $1,800,000 provided for in H. R. 16187, passed that day, was amply sufficient to carry on the Employment Service, and I opposed the extra $10,000,000 demanded by Director Densmore. And when Mr. WATKINS offered his amendment to grant this department the additional sum of $10,033,808.10, I made a point of order against it, and the Chair sustained my point of order. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] offered his amendment to grant this sum of $10,033,808.10 to this department, and again I made a point of order against it, which was sustained by the Chair. Then the renowned Socialist Member from New York, Mr. London, offered an amendment to grant it the sum of $10,000,000, and I again made a point of order against it, which was sustained by the Chair. Then the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Decker, offered his amendment to grant the department $10,000,000, and again I made a point of order against it, which the Chair sustained. And thus this $10,000,000 was saved and not wasted, and now at last we have gotten most of these high-salaried, useless employees off of the pay roll.

Now, let me ask you one thing. Have you gentlemen an abiding confidence in this Assistant Secretary of Labor, Louis F. Post, who manages most of the business down there? He is the First Assistant Secretary of that Department of Labor, and has final say in anarchist cases. I am in favor of this legislation, and I would vote for it if that department could be cleaned out. But I will not vote for it now. It would have been cleaned out before this if unfortunately the President had not been taken sick. If he had not lost his health he would have cleaned it up so quick that it would have made their heads swim, but unfortunately he has not been able to look into these matters.

Are you willing to put this new bureau in the Department of Labor on the eve of passing upon impeachment proceedings against this Assistant Secretary? You may be willing, but I want to tell you that the people of this country are not willing that you shall do it. The people of the country are getting their eyes open on this question. Now I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that at most the Assistant Secretary of Labor can remain in office only 10 months and 11 days longer. Fortunately, the gentleman from Texas has not assailed the Woman's Bureau that has existed in the Department of Labor for two years or more. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; and I do not oppose this legislation, but most of the employees will be controlled absolutely by the Assistant Secretary, and my friend from Kansas knows it, and I am not willing for Mr. Post to have this responsibility. Now, I do not want him to take my time any further, because I want to yield to the gentleman from Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have more time. The gentleman from Texas is for this bill on its merits and has consumed all of the time except four minutes in repeating his labor arguments, which we have heard before. I am not lecturing him, but I ask unanimous consent of the House that the time may be extended 15 minutes for the gentleman from Kansas and 15 minutes for myself.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, may I modify that request and ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 10 minutes, giving the gentleman from Illinois 14 minutes and I ask for no additional time? Will that be satisfactory to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. It will.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I voted to submit the amendment to amend the Constitution of the United States giving women suffrage. I have advocated woman suffrage in my own State, where, so far as the State constitution would allow, she has the right to vote. The constitutional convention, I have no doubt, will give her full rights. I am not opposed to the women. My mother was a woman, my wife was a woman, my two daughters living are women, and the great-great-granddaughter will be a woman. She is a mighty handsome kid right now. [Applause.]

This appropriation was made last year for $40,000, which includes $5,000 for the lady who is employed as the head of the bureau, and it was done as a war measure. Then there is in addition to her the assistant and also the chief clerk provided for. I think very likely this bureau ought to be continued. I heartily agree that the Children's Bureau, established long before the war, is headed by one of the most competent women in the United States. I was very glad when she was appointed and that she has retained her position. Women know better about children than we men do and have more to do with forming their character.

This appropriation is estimated for and has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member, and I am informed is to be carried for the coming fiscal year in the sundry civil appropriation bill. I oppose this motion to suspend the rules and make this bureau permanent law, because I would like to see it tried out for another year, until we can get that much further along in unscrambling the eggs. I have favored it heretofore. I shall vote for the appropriation, whether this legislation is had or not. No doubt the head of the bureau will be continued with the same salary. But how wonderful it all is, and does it not beat all how men fall over themselves? My good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] performs about this Department of Labor and attacks it all along the line. It is not perfect, and I hold no brief to defend much of its action. There are many good employees down there—I do not know how many—but I think we would better wait a little bit. Let us bide a wee before we rush in and move to suspend the rules and create this bureau permanently in the Department of Labor.

There are many of these departments that to some extent will need to be upset. It is all on a war basis now. Let us get our heads and see whether it ought to continue entirely along the line on this war basis. "Oh," said a friend to me, "CANNON, you can not afford to vote against this proposition, for women are voting now." I said, "I was once challenged years ago about the women voting," and I laughed and said it satisfied my woman audience when I said to them, "You women are as good politicians as we men; you bear the children, you nurture them, you form their character, and when politics comes up you take your share. You control your husbands more than they control you, and you mold the children; and what is to become of us poor men when, added to all of that, you vote?"

I say again that I have no objection to their voting. Oh, how gentlemen fall over themselves when they are assured that the House will have a chance when we report the sundry civil appropriation bill to continue this bureau! They tell us that the women will be angry unless they pass this legislation. The women not only bear the children and nurture them and control their husbands more than their husbands control them, but we are told that they must go to work. God grant that they will not have to work any more in any munition factories; that they will not have to work as the men return and pick up the burden of doing the work. I want the women to become mothers who will build homes. I have no objection to their voting. That is all right; but how we do fall over ourselves! Being assured that this appropriation will be reported, gentlemen fall over themselves and move to suspend the rules and make this a permanent act of legislation.

Oh, I do not agree with Madam Roland. It is said that she said away back in the French Revolution, "The more I see of men, the better I like dogs." I suppose that was correct away back there in that great revolution, but it does not apply at present in its full force. But the more I see men just turning double somersaults, the more I hear them say that this is a good political move and that we ought not to turn it down, the more I am inclined to say to you that I do not think, whether this passes or does not pass, that it is going to affect 10 votes in the United States. [Applause.] If the time comes for me to determine what my course shall be in the future, I want to get rid of the fever heat that is all over the country; I want to see how much the general expenditures can be properly reduced. I do not want to reduce them in passion. I do not want to do it hurriedly; but propositions of this kind and many other kinds can well wait until we do get down to normal. That is all I have to say. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], it is very bad policy for the Congress to pass a law providing for this bureau and a very wise thing for the Committee on Appropriations to have appropriated for it. I do not quite get the logic of that sort of a situation. I yield five minutes——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I thought the gentleman said he was not going to use any additional time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield two minutes——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I have no objection to the five minutes, but I am going to ask to be recognized for the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How does the time stand?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has six minutes and the gentleman from Kansas 15 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand why there should be any opposition to this measure. All of us who take the kindly and sympathetic view of the gentleman from Illinois would be happy if it were not necessary for women to engage in gainful occupations, if they were not required, as many of them are, to become wage earners.

But the fact is that a great many women are compelled to become wage earners, to go into the industries; and that being the case, I think it is not only proper, but right, just, and equitable, that special provision should be made in the Department of Labor for an organization that shall have their welfare in charge. We have such an organization now in temporary form in the Department of Labor, but it is best that that activity shall be carried on under definite legislation. The bill before us provides that legislation, and I am very much in hope that the vote for the legislation will be well-nigh unanimous. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How many speeches has the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. I propose to yield the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat disappointed to hear the speech of the distinguished ex-Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. That speech was made a good many years ago, but it is too late now. The women of this country have been deprived of their rights for years. They are getting them now. This is not a question of expense, it is a question of absolute necessity. The women by virtue of the change in economical conditions of this country are no longer able to remain at home and do the work. They must go out in the field of actual activity and earn their living. The purpose of this bill is that the Government through this agency creates a women's bureau with a woman at the head, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, "to investigate and formulate standards and policies which shall promote the welfare of wage-earning women." Can anybody object to that? "Improve their working conditions." Can the people generally or any Member of this House object to "improving the working conditions of women"? No. "Increase their efficiency." Can there be any objection to increasing their efficiency? Clearly not. "And advance their opportunities for profitable employment." Everybody ought to be for that. We ought to be ready and willing to expend money for the purpose of making that effective. "The said bureau shall investigate and report to the said department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of women in industry." Anyone who has given this subject any thought or consideration realizes that while you may speak of the father and the son representing the wife, mother, or sister that day has passed. They want and are entitled to represent themselves. On May 20, 1919, I introduced H. R. 1134, referred to in the committee's report on this bill. I am for this legislation. It is right.

The sundry civil bill for the fiscal year 1919 carried as one of the war emergency items an appropriation of $40,000 to enable the Secretary of Labor to carry on investigations touching women in industry, and this appropriation is carried in the current law. The purpose of the legislation now proposed is to make statutory provision for the work which is being carried on under the above-mentioned title and to provide for its enlargement as appropriations may be made for that purpose.

During the war hundreds of thousands of women took the places of men who had joined the Army and did men's work. Their efficiency and competency were proven in every branch of industry. There are still hundreds of thousands occupying important places and positions of trust and in manufacture and in trade.

The purpose of this bill is to create a permanent women's bureau in the Department of Labor and give it a legal status.

In the introductory part of the first annual report of the Director of the Woman in Industry Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, we find the following:

The Woman in Industry Service was organized in July, 1918, a year and three months after the entrance of the United States into the war. It was confronted at once with the problems involved in a rapidly increasing reliance upon the work of women, as the sole reserve force of labor to be called upon to measure up to the demands of an augmented program of production for the war in the face of the withdrawal of men for military service at the rate of a quarter of a million a month. It was clear that for the sake of production and for the good of the Nation the Federal Government must provide not only for the recruiting of women workers, but for the safeguarding of the health and efficiency of these women who were meeting in many instances the requirements of new and unaccustomed tasks. Because they were new for women—at least, in such large numbers—standards for their employment had not been established in the customs of industry.

On page 5 of such report we find the following specific statement of the purpose of this service:

1. To consider all general policies with respect to women in industry and to advise the Secretary of Labor as to the policies which should be pursued.
2. To keep informed of the work of the several divisions of the department in so far as they relate to women in industry and to advise with the divisions on all such work.
3. To secure information on all matters relating to women in industry and to collate such information into useful form.
4. To establish useful connections with all governmental departments and divisions on this subject and with voluntary agencies and societies.

In the hearings before your committee the following letter of the Secretary of Labor appears:

MARCH 4, 1920.

GENTLEMEN: As I am unable to be present at your joint hearing to-day for consideration of H. R. 12679 and S. 4002, to establish on a statutory basis the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, I am sending you this letter to urge a favorable report by the committees.

This bill does not propose a new bureau. The present Women's Bureau was made possible by the appropriation for the War Labor Administration in July, 1918, and so proved the necessity for it that it was continued by a special appropriation in 1919. It is common knowledge that during the war the number of women in industry increased greatly and the range of the occupations open to them was extended. It is even more important than before the war, therefore, that there should be a bureau in the Federal Government concerned with the special problems of women in industry.

The enlarged appropriation is made necessary in order to meet the many demands for the services of the bureau which comes from State departments of labor and citizens throughout the Nation who realize the importance of improving the conditions of the employment of women in industrial occupations.

Very truly, yours, W. B. WILSON.

III. INDUSTRIES, TOTAL NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES, AND NUMBER OF WOMEN EMPLOYEES INVESTIGATED.

In the course of two general State surveys of working conditions for women, and of several studies of conditions involving groups of women in special industries, the Women's Bureau has secured information on the actual working conditions of approximately 34,000 women employed in industries where the total number of employees amounted to approximately 75,000. The two largest groups of women, 12,000 and 18,000, were covered by State surveys made in Indiana and Virginia. In these two surveys conditions in the representative industries of the State where women were employed were the subject of investigation. The establishments covered included those manufacturing boots and shoes, caskets, clothing, drugs, food products, hosiery and knit goods, leather goods, metal products, paper and paper products, peanuts, pottery and glassware, ruber goods, textiles, tobacco, wood products, printing establishments, and laundries.

The bureau sought to be established is not an experiment or a new adventure. It has proven its worth, and now that the right of self-government has been extended to women their demands are entitled to favorable consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have six minutes left. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, what I object to about this bill has nothing to do with the merits of the employment of women in industry. It is admitted that these very women whose positions in the Bureau of Labor are provided for by this bill are now employed and will be employed and will do exactly the same work that the bill calls for for the next two years whether this bill passes or not. What I object to is putting into permanent law a temporary war expedient just at a time when everybody knows that every department of the Government, including the Department of Labor—I do not agree with all the criticism by the gentleman from Texas, although probably there is a good deal of basis for it—when every department, now that the war is over, and when the general election is over should be investigated with the idea of reorganizing it along new lines, along efficient lines, along economical lines, and therefore we should as business men look at this proposition in a businesslike way. What is the sense of putting this bureau into permanent law which will make any reorganization of it more difficult. It will not help the women one iota. I acknowledge that women in industry ought to be taken care of and I am in favor of doing anything necessary to that end, but this bill does not give them any additional care, and all it does is to confuse the operation of the Government. It is a bill to increase the confusion and not to help the women. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS].

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I favored the passage of this bill in the committee, and I am in favor of it now. As much as many of us deplore that women have to give up homemaking and go out in the world to make a living we find that condition existing to-day and we have to meet it.

There are about 13,000,000 women wage earners in the United States to-day. They are in industry, and they are going to remain in industry, and if we are to retain the health of the coming generation and raise a rugged, virile race of people, we have got to provide for those women in industry, and we have got to establish a bureau that will make inspection and report the conditions, and see that those women are protected from anything that might tend to injure their potential motherhood. We might as well face the facts in this case. I hope this bill will be passed. I am very much in favor of it, and I would like to see it become a permanent law so that it can not be knocked out on a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have two minutes remaining. I had supposed that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS], holding the views that he does, would have gotten his time from the other side. But that is all right. It does not make much difference one way or another. Now, in my two minutes I do not know that I can add anything to what I have already said. I think there is more little peanut politics in this motion to suspend the rules than there is merit. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACCRATE].

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Speaker, I can not understand just what the gentleman from Illinois meant by "peanut politics" so far as this particular measure is concerned. Surely it is no small matter to legislate for 13,000,000 women who are members of our families. The Committee on Labor considered several proposals for the establishment of a women's bureau, one of which carried an appropriation of $100,000 and another more than $50,000 and another about $40,000. By this bill we provide for a chief and keep control of the bureau in the hands of our Appropriations Committee. We held extended hearings and heard many witnesses. The committee insistently inquired what purpose the bureau would serve not now served by an existing governmental department. With a majority of this Congress we feel that new ventures should not be undertaken unless absolutely justifiable, and in determining to report this bill in its present shape we were greatly influenced by the testimony of the head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Mr. Meeker. He was asked if he believed the bureau should be established, and he emphatically replied that it should be. He was asked why his department could not do the work, and he answered there was a different point of view taken by a woman when she went to investigate industries. He was asked if his appropriation was increased could he do the work as well as a separate bureau would do it, and he said he could not. We asked him if a woman was made associate with him would that serve the purpose, and he said it would not. We inquired if he had had more money in the past could he have done the work of the proposed bureau as well as it could, and he said it is not a question of money, it is a question of human differences. A man can not see as well as a woman what effect a given industry will have on women, and although Mr. Meeker must have realized that the creation of this bureau would not increase his authority, he advocated its creation with a woman at its head. [Applause.]

Men may deeply regret the entrance of women into the commercial, industrial, and professional fields, and long for the days when the spinning wheel helped to make the family income meet the family's needs. But modern mechanical genius has made machinery respond to the touch of a woman's hand or foot. Commerce has taken many forms, and women are seen in all sorts of positions. It might have been better for society had the home industries been maintained, but we are face to face with a fact of life and not a social theory. Women, young and old, daily go to the office, shop, farm, and factory to earn their bread in the sweat of their brow. By this bill we seek to know what effect womanhood has on industry and industry has on womanhood. We are providing a means whereby knowledge of modern methods may be distributed to all the employers of the country and whereby both the woman and her employer may know where she can be employed for her own good as well as the good of her employer. We are to furnish a means by which those who toil and those who employ the toiler will gain the information which will make for mutual understanding.

The necessity for meeting the increased cost of existence is driving more and more women from the home into the industrial and commercial world. Men would prefer that their daughters should not be forced to stand amid the roar of belting and machinery, but they find themselves unable to meet unending rental and food price raises. Within the past year not only have daughters been forced to help their fathers, but countless wives have found that, save and stint as they might, the end of the week found them in debt, and they, too, have been obliged to work.

We have listened to men discuss the burden resting upon officials who administer the financial affairs of the city, State, and Nation, and we have wondered what these governmental experts would do were they limited to incomes as are the women of our homes. Governmental officials are continually exceeding the amount allotted to their departments and Congress, too frequently without condemnation, appropriates more. Did the average housewife of America spend what comes to her from the family with the open-handed carelessness of some departmental heads the unrest which we see about us would be multiplied a thousandfold. It is utterly impossible to calculate what the women of America are doing to-day toward keeping down riot and revolution. On pay day they get a definite amount which must cover a definite period. There are no sources from which it can be increased before the next pay day. Yet somehow or other, in spite of many demands unforeseen, the average American home-keeper keeps the family free from debt. If our efficiency experts in the field of government could make a little go as long a way and could adjust expenditures to income as well as do the women of our household, this Nation would soon see its indebtedness reduced. With prices outstepping wages the task of keeping contentment in our homes has been tremendously increased, but our womanhood are meeting the task heroically.

It may be that multitudes of the women who work will never become housewives and mothers. Nevertheless, the great majority of them will not keep at out-of-home tasks all their lives, but will become the joint makers of American homes. Industry may or may not affect women, so far as home making is concerned, but can we do the future a greater service than establish this bureau which will gather the facts from which we can accurately say just what effect industry does have on our womanhood? It may be America has other foundations but we are certain it has none more sure than its families kept contented by the tact and skill and love of its womanhood.

Mr CARSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine, Judge HERSEY.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kansas for added honor.

As a member of the Committee on Labor I wish to add this: The committee had exhaustive hearings upon this bill. We heard all sides, and the committee made a unanimous report in favor of the legislation, amending, of course, the many claims and reducing it to a simple matter of business. Gentlemen, there is no woman suffrage in this bill. Gentlemen, there is no attempt in this bill to impeach any member of the Cabinet. There is no attempt in this bill to examine into the work of an Assistant Secretary of Labor. We had no jurisdiction to do that. But we simply recommend to you, gentlemen, as a matter of business, that the Woman's Bureau in the Department of Labor, that did such efficient work during the war, on a temporary, as we might say, war emergency should be continued in times of peace for the next fiscal year. And for this reason: Nobody who has examined the question for one moment would claim but that the bureau is needed and is efficient. Anyone who has examined it must admit that. It should be continued. But we know this, that should the matter come up for permanent law there would be some one in this House, and you can mention the name, who would rise up and say, "I will make a point of order against that," and out it would go, and the bureau must expire for want of appropriations. Let it become a law. All that there is to it is to take this matter which has been temporary and make it permanent law for the next fiscal year. Why? Because you can make the bureau more efficient thereby. You place a woman in authority, with assistants under her to gather information, and that is all it is, of the 13,000,000 women in industry, as to the hours of labor, the conditions under which they labor, and what can be done to improve their condition. The economy of this measure demands this legislation and it should have a unanimous passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 7.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the House having divided, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing the bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 256, nays 9, not voting 162, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana presented the following conference report and statement of the House conferees for printing under the rule.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on a certain amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Bureau of Efficiency, together with its books, papers, and records, furniture, equipment, and supplies, is hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of Congress; and its officers and employees are transferred in their present status without reappointment. The Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall hereafter be appointed jointly by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and may be removed from office by them. All other employees of the bureau, including a disbursing officer for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the bureau, shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. The Bureau of Efficiency is authorized to investigate any matters relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government whenever directed by either House of Congress or requested by the heads of such services and shall from time to time submit to Congress reports of its investigations with recommendations looking to greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of the public business. It shall make such special investigations and reports as may be required by either House of Congress or by any committee or subcommittee thereof of either House having jurisdiction over appropriations and expenditures. Administrative officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of its duties, and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate amendment No. 53 to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees as to the said amendment:

On No. 53: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, transferring the Bureau of Efficiency from the executive branch of the Government to the jurisdiction of Congress and modifies the Senate amendment in the following manner: Provides that the chief of the bureau may be removed from office by joint action of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House instead of by concurrent resolution; limits the investigations of the bureau relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the administrative services of the Government to those which may be directed by either House of Congress or those which may be requested by the heads of such administrative services; limits the special investigations and reports which may be required by either House or any committee thereof to those requested by committees having jurisdiction over appropriations or expenditures and extends the authority for requesting such investigations to any subcommittee of either House having jurisdiction of appropriations and expenditures.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12581. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between the said States; and

H. R. 12260. An act to amend section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to agricultural fertilizer distributors or users a supply of nitrate of soda.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MOORES of Indiana, for 15 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, April 20, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Postmaster General, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Post Office Department for inland transportation by star routes, payable from postal revenues, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 731); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, submitting a proposed paragraph of legislation authorizing payment from existing appropriations to Hon. J. W. Harrold, being unpaid rent due him by the Department of Agriculture, but withheld under section 114 of the Penal Code (H. Doc. No. 732); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of private act No. 37, Sixty-sixth Congress, "An act for the relief of the estate of John M. Lea, deceased," approved April 7, 1920, and to state that the said act does not provide an appropriation for payment of the same, as defined in the act of June 30, 1906 (H. Doc. No. 733); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A report from the joint commission appointed under authority of House concurrent resolution 46, of the Sixty-sixth Congress, on conditions in Virgin Islands (H. Doc. No. 734); to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting two paragraphs of legislation for inclusion in the pending sundry civil appropriation bill required for the Public Health Service (H. Doc. No. 735); to the Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and Printing and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 20, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we bring to Thee the high motives of this place and office with a resolve to do our best to uplift the world and to glorify Thy name. We open our hearts to the impression of Thy truth as we start upon the duties of a new day, and pray Thee to guide us in all our deliberations. May our conclusions have Thy favor resting upon them. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1920.

To the SENATE:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

M. SMOOT thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer for the day.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 806. An act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians against the United States; and

S. 2442. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church, by patent in fee, certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation.

H. R. 9228. An act to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn.;

H. R. 10917. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States" by adding thereto an additional section;

H. R. 12956. An act extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas;

H. R. 13229. An act to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau;

H. R. 13253. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River;

H. R. 13274. An act to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas;

H. R. 13387. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin;

H. R. 13592. An act to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to make final proof of their entries; and

H. J. Res. 301. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 12260) to amend section 600 of the act approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 9228. An act to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn.;

H. R. 12956. An act extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas;

H. R. 13253. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River; and

H. R. 13387. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 8690. An act for the relief of certain homestead entrymen; and

H. R. 13592. An act to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to make final proof of their entries.

The following bill and joint resolution were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 13274. An act to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas; and

H. J. Res. 301. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes.

H. R. 5163. An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 13229. An act to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION.

H. R. 10917. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States by adding thereto an additional section was read twice by its title.

Mr. KING. I did not hear the suggestion which the Secretary made to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has asked that the bill go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. KING. I think it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. All such measures which provide for Federal charters go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that matter is receiving consideration there now. I ask that no reference be made of the bill until the Senator from Iowa is here, as I would not want to make any motion in his absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted by Boston Lodge No. 264, International Association of Machinists, of Boston, Mass., favoring the release of certain Federal prisoners; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Hamilton S. Hawkins, Camp No. 43, Department of California, United Spanish War Veterans, of Soldiers Home, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition; which was ordered to lie on the table.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, reported it with an amendment.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (H. R. 13387) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and I submit a report (No. 529) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of a bridge, authorized by act of Congress approved August 7, 1916, to be built across the St. Louis River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, from the village of Fond du Lac, a suburb of Duluth, Minn., to a point on the Wisconsin shore about 100 feet westerly from the mouth of Dubray Creek, is hereby extended one year from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4255) establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4256) to amend sections 3 and 6 of the act of July 11, 1916, entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," as amended by sections 5 and 6 of the act of February 28, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4257) granting a pension to Leonora Forney; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MYERS (for Mr. WALSH of Montana) submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell at public auction lots 1, 2, and 3, block 120, with any improvements, of the original town site of Billings, Mont., used as a United States mine rescue station, etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SWANSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT OF PANAMA CANAL ACT.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," known as the Panama Canal provision, and I introduce the bill by request under circumstances which I ask leave to state to the Senate.

When the railroad bill was pending before the conferees the bill from the House contained a clause modifying the Panama Canal act and permitting the railroad companies to own steamships with which they compete on the Great Lakes and on the other inland waters, except the Mississippi River and the Panama Canal. I opposed this measure in conference, and it was rejected by the conferees, with an understanding, however, that I would introduce it by request as a separate bill, and that the Committee on Interstate Commerce would give the communities mostly interested along the Great Lakes and the New England coast a hearing upon the bill. The New England Representatives were very anxious to clarify the railroad situation between New York and Boston and various intermediate towns where the New Haven road owns certain steamship lines.

Pursuant to that understanding, I introduce this bill. I did not favor it as a member of the conference committee, and I do not think I shall favor it now; but certainly the communities interested are entitled to a hearing, and there are Senators who desire to have the bill become a law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator? Probably the Senator is going to have the bill read, and in that case I can ascertain what I rose to ask, and that is the purpose of the measure.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will state the purpose of the bill. The Senator will recollect that the Panama Canal act prohibits any railroad company from owning and controlling ships through the Panama Canal or any of the inland waters or coastwise waters of the United States where the railroad competes with those steamship lines. This provision, which has been adopted by the House, is intended to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it thought it was in the interest of the public and not unduly restrictive of competition, to permit railroad companies to own ships on the Great Lakes and the inland waters and the coastwise waters, although they were competitors. I thought that the Panama Canal act had been passed, after years of agitation and public discussion, as a policy, and that certainly it ought not to be amended by a mere provision adopted in a railroad bill of which the public seemed to have no knowledge whatever. So I agreed that I would introduce this bill and ask the Committee on Interstate Commerce to grant hearings to interested parties. Personally I have not changed my opinion at all.

The bill (S. 4254) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

CALLING THE ROLL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is detained at a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is absent on official business.

I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] in attendance at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SWANSON answered to his name when called.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. KEYES, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. TRAMMELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

M'CLINTIC-MARSHALL CONSTRUCTION CO.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1353) for the relief of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co. This is a bill that was reached on the calendar about two weeks ago. There is no objection to it, except that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] asked to have an opportunity to make some investigation as to an objection that had been made to him by a constituent. I understand the Senator from Ohio does not desire to pursue that any further and has no objection to the consideration of the measure. Am I correct?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I did make objection to the consideration of the bill, and in a very general way I stated the ground of my objection. My objection was based upon some correspondence that I had with an Ohio manufacturing firm that I understood bid upon the same work in which the company named in the bill was concerned. I am frank to say that I have not been able to get my files in the matter, and I do not know the name of the firm; it escapes my memory. The Senator from Pennsylvania, however, assured me the other day that this claim was based upon other elements than those which I had in mind. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. KNOX. That is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. That being so, I have no disposition to interpose my objection further. I do not feel that it would be quite just under the circumstances to the claimant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1353) for the relief of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co., which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co. the sum of $714,007.39, as recommended in the report made to Congress under date of February 11, 1916, by the commission appointed under the act of June 24, 1914, and approved by the Governor of the Panama Canal (H. Doc. No. 906, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), the said act being as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That George W. Goethals, Governor of the Canal Zone and formerly chairman and chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the claim of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, having its principal office in the city of Pittsburgh, in said State, and to ascertain what amount, if any, is in justice, equity, and fairness due and owing to said McClintic-Marshall Construction Co. from the Isthmian Canal Commission for work and labor done and material furnished in connection with the construction and erection of lock gates and appurtenances for the Panama Canal and in connection with and incidental to the doing of the work and furnishing of the materials provided for in a certain contract between the Isthmian Canal Commission and the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co., dated June 21, 1910, taking into consideration the claim of the contractors that the work was done under requirements as to character and finish not fairly within the meaning of the specifications.

"The said Col. George W. Goethals, Governor of the Canal Zone, is further authorized and empowered, either personally or through such commissions as he may appoint, to investigate such claims and the various items thereof in such manner as to him may seem best, and, either personally or through such commission, is hereby empowered to administer oaths and affirmations to witnesses and to issue subpœnas and to compel the attendance of witnesses. He shall report in detail to the Congress of the United States his findings."

The amount herein appropriated shall be chargeable as part of the construction of the Panama Canal and reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds authorized by section 8 of the act approved June 28, 1902, and section 39 of the tariff act approved August 5, 1909.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

PAY OF NAVY AND COAST GUARD.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, for a long time past the attention of the public has been called to the unfortunate condition of the officers and men of the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard, owing to the increased cost of living, but I do not believe that the true seriousness of the situation is realized, for not only is injury being done to the men and their families but all of these branches of the service are being crippled, and the Navy certainly placed in a position where it will take some years to put it in the condition that it was in before the war. I intend to confine my remarks to the Navy and Coast Guard, because, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am familiar with their condition, and the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee has already explained on the floor of the Senate very fully the situation that exists in the Army.

The responsibility for this retrogression of our fighting forces rests upon Congress. It was called to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate by the Secretary of the Navy last August, and to that of the chairman of the House committee, I believe, in September. In November it was again called to the notice of the latter committee, and in December a letter was written to the Speaker of the House urging action. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] introduced an increased-pay bill for the Army and Navy in November, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and reported out from that committee in December. In January a bill for partial relief was introduced in the House by Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That bill granted an increase in pay to the enlisted men only. In February a bill increasing the pay of the officers and men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service was passed by the Senate, and a conference with the House was asked for. In the middle of March the House granted the conference. I am informed this morning that the conferees have again disagreed, and that therefore more delay must ensue. It is only fair to say that the responsibility in refusing to grant these increases does not rest with the Senate.

I desire to call attention to some statistics which, I believe, are convincing as to the actual situation, and shall refer principally to the testimony of Admiral Washington before a subcommittee of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee.

The most deplorable feature about this whole delay is that had this bill increasing the pay been passed last October, between 70,000 and 80,000 ex-service men would have returned to the Navy. It is not believed now that one-fourth of this number will go back, even if this measure is enacted into law. The older men who have returned to civil life and taken up work on shore are each week less likely to desire to renew their naval service. At the beginning of the winter, at Bay Ridge, N. Y., there were about 1,200 to 1,400 men whose terms of enlistment had expired or was about to expire. These men had been 8, 12, or 16 years in the Navy, and were thoroughly trained and efficient. They held over with the hope that Congress would pass an increased-pay bill, and when Congress adjourned in December without any action several hundred of them immediately asked for their discharge, and it had to be given to them. Others stayed on until early in January, and finally practically all of them left.

Fifty-five per cent of the present total strength of the Navy is made up of men who first enlisted since December 4, 1918, and it is estimated that 66 per cent of the first enlistments, from December 4, 1918, to January, 1920, were boys under 19 years of age.

The petty officers and chief petty officers are leaving the service in alarming numbers, and they are the leaven that is so vital to the training of the new recruits. There is nothing that could do more harm to the service than the loss of this part of the personnel. The men, however, can not be blamed for wanting to leave when a sailor, who gets $32.60 a month in the Navy, can go with the American Transport Service or with the Shipping Board and immediately get $75 per month; and, besides this, receive $1.50 or $2 additional for subsistence and other expenses. A seaman, second class, getting $35 in the Navy, gets $100 with the Shipping Board, and so on right up the line.

The Shipping Board and the American Transport Service pay men two to three and one-half times the amount the Navy pays. They are able to do this because their appropriations, I understand, are made in lump sums, which allow them to use discretion as to wages and meet conditions in any part of the world.

Under those circumstances, is it unnatural that requests for discharges are being received at the average of 28 per day? About 7 of such requests are approved each day, and with a few exceptions the older men are those making the applications for release, not only because of the advantages that they can obtain by seeking employment in civil life, but also because the present pay of the Navy is not sufficient for them to maintain their families with, and they feel, and I think quite properly, that the United States Government is doing injustice to those who have been its faithful public servants.

During the last six months of 1919 the desertions among the enlisted men have become appallingly large, and affected a class that has practically never been touched by this before, namely, the petty officers and chief petty officers. There were 4,666 desertions, which included 1,057 petty officers and senior rated men—seamen and firemen, first class—of whom 60 were chief petty officers. In January last 898 men deserted, and in February 765. The number was less in February probably because the fleet was in southern waters, where it was more difficult for men to reach home should they leave their ships. Of the number who deserted in February, there were 60 rated petty officers and 7 chief petty officers. Admiral Washington stated that it was practically impossible to recover any considerable number of these deserters, owing to their going to sea, and so forth, and that they were therefore lost entirely to the service.

The Navy enlisted personnel allowed by law up to July 1, 1920, is 170,000. In the service on March 1, 1920, there were about one hundred and one thousand and some odd men—in other words, a shortage of about 68,000 men. Of this 101,000, roughly, 79,400 are first enlistments and 22,000 reenlistments. At the present time recruits have been withdrawn from the training stations after one month to six weeks' training, instead of three or four months, as is usual, therefore, of course, increasing the need of the desirability of a nucleus of trained seamen. Our battleship fleet to-day is manned by about 70 per cent of its normal crew.

If we take the condition on one of our great dreadnoughts, the situation shows up even more clearly. The Pennsylvania by August, 1920, will lose over 300 experienced men who remained from last year. One out of every six of the electricians will be gone, and out of the engineers' complement one out of three, and similar percentages in other departments.

Turning to the officers, the condition is just as bad. At the present time we are short of regulars in the line to the number of 2,638. Afloat on the different ships in the dreadnought class there are 954 officers, but there ought to be 1,500. On the predreadnoughts, they have 444, where they also ought to have about 1,500. On the armored cruisers, they have 200, where they need 1,200. On the gunboats, they have 60, where they should have 150; on the destroyers, 875, instead of 1,800, and on the submarines, 269, instead of 400. The staff shrinkage is proportionate to that of the line. The officers are seeking to leave because they, too, are unable to support their families and keep out of debt. Many of them have been forced to make great personal sacrifices in order to remain in the service, and I am sure that nearly every Senator, from the seacoast States at least, has had facts called to his attention that make him indignant that splendid men should be placed in such an unfair position, and that their families should have to suffer because of their serving their country.

There are now pending 88 resignations of line officers. The Secretary is holding up all applications of those who have been less than eight years in the service. If resignations were easier to obtain, it is the feeling of the department that many more would be asked for. The Naval Academy will not fill up the line of the Navy for 10 years under the present circumstances, and during that period all our ships will be short of necessary line officers.

In the Coast Guard the situation is equally bad. Probably the clearest way to show the situation is to call attention to some statistics from a district with which I am familiar. The quota of this district is 146. The number of men discharged at their own request in January was something like 50 men, which is practically a third. These men represent some of our best American stock, the tribe of old-fashioned sailor, a gallant worker in all weathers. There is probably no finer body of men in the world. They have done magnificently in peace and did equally well in the war, but they can not be expected to continue in the service if they do not receive enough to support their families.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey, I understand, has also been so crippled by resignations that it will be difficult for them to carry on their chartings, a very serious condition for the Navy and merchant marine.

Mr. President, I believe the above data can not fail to impress anyone with the serious condition that we have to meet. The greatest thing for any fighting service is its morale, and we can not have a high morale when officers and men feel that they are being treated with injustice, and are continually worried by the fact that their families are not being adequately supported and are suffering privations. When this is aggravated by the knowledge that men in similar occupations are being adequately compensated, it is human nature that they will desire to change their condition, if possible, if not for their own sake, at least for that of those who are dependent upon them; and if they are unable to do this, there will be great dissatisfaction.

Apart from the psychological aspect, efficiency in such a highly centralized service as the Navy means years of experience and training. This training can not be properly carried out unless there are a large number of teachers, and the teachers are the trained men of the service. The statistics I have quoted show that they are leaving in appalling numbers, and unless something is done very soon, if it is not already too late, the Navy will not be in a high state of efficiency for some years to come. The seriousness of a condition like this can not be questioned by anyone.

The Senate has refused to ratify the treaty of Versailles and enter into the League of Nations. If we are to go back to the old conditions that existed previous to our entry into the war and continue our policy of isolation there can be no question that we shall need a great and efficient Navy. The paramount importance of sea power has again been clearly demonstrated by this war, and I believe that a great and efficient Navy as a first line of defense is essential to America. From the earliest history of the Republic our Navy's record has been our pride, and this war was no exception to the rule. What it accomplished during the year and a half of hostilities is, I believe, something that the country will always point to as showing what America can do.

Hindsight is, of course, always better than foresight, and perhaps one thing or another might have been better done if it had been done differently, but that can never be proven. The fact remains, however, that the objects set out for were obtained and that no branch of the service failed in doing its duty, but did that duty splendidly and to the credit of its officers and its men.

The Senate to-day is conducting an investigation of what was done, and perhaps this may develop in the future in some sound suggestions for the improvement of the service. Up to date, however, there is only one thing that stands out as absolutely essential for the future welfare of our Navy, and that is that the officers and men should receive adequate compensation to meet the unparalleled living conditions. It is idle to criticize the Navy for this and that, or to talk of improving it by doing this or that, until Congress has passed an increased pay bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to repeat his first statement concerning the disagreement of the conferees? I did not quite understand what has been done with a view to ameliorating this condition.

Mr. GERRY. I will say to the Senator from California that I was informed this morning by one of the members of the conference committee that the conferees had again disagreed. I think the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] probably can answer that question better, as he is a member of the conference committee.

Mr. PHELAN. Then I address my inquiry to the Senator from New York, if he will answer. The Senator from Rhode Island has just made an alarming statement as to the condition of the Navy, due to disagreement, as I understand, concerning pay, by the conferees on the subject of the Navy and Army pay bill; and I rise to inquire what is the condition in the conference, and whether there is likelihood of an agreement?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, to-day the conferees adjourned until to-morrow morning. It is true that to-day they did not reach an agreement. The committee, however, has not decided to report a disagreement as yet. I feel as deeply about the question as does the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, without undertaking to criticize or reply to the address of the Senator from Rhode Island, I desire to call attention very briefly to one or two matters.

It is true that men were paid by the Shipping Board wages vastly in excess of the wages paid in the Navy, and it is undoubtedly true that the effect upon the Navy has not been good.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GERRY. I will say to the Senator that it is not only the Shipping Board that are paying very large wages; it is all the employers of sailormen.

Mr. REED. I desire to address myself to the single proposition. Months ago the Shipping Board obtained lists of the American sailors and employees on ships of the Navy. Months ago they learned what the wages of these men were, and when they arrived at American ports they were greeted with letters from the Shipping Board stating, and stating with accuracy, in substance, "Under your present employment you get so much per month; the Shipping Board will pay you so much more." So we had the spectacle of one branch of the Government service deliberately trying to rob the naval branch of the service of its men. I have that fact from a naval officer, who complained to me bitterly about it months ago, and stated that the Navy was losing men every day. It is only another proof of the fact that there ought to be some kind of a system of coordination between the different branches of the Government service.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I know nothing about the conditions to which the Senator refers, but I simply want to call his attention to the fact that no matter what the Shipping Board did, the situation of the Navy will be very serious unless the men are granted an increase of pay, and the crucial question is the increase of pay. That is a point that we must not forget.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not discussing that phase of the question.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I have heard from naval officers in whom I have entire confidence precisely the same statement which the Senator from Missouri has just quoted. There is no doubt but that the Shipping Board are paying a great deal more than private firms, and are drawing men directly away from the Navy, and it has a good deal to do with the necessity, which is very great, of raising the pay. But it also shows, as the Senator from Missouri said, the bidding of one branch of the Government against another in the matter of wages.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield again?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GERRY. I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he has any doubt of the absolute necessity of granting increases in pay?

Mr. LODGE. It is absolutely necessary if we are going to have any Navy at all.

Mr. GERRY. There is no question about it.

Mr. LODGE. There is no question about it whatever. But the great sinner in this thing has been the Shipping Board, spending Government money and offering unlimited pay, far higher than private yards, high as the pay is in those yards.

Mr. GERRY. Does not the Senator know that the private concerns are also offering a good deal higher pay than is paid by the Navy?

Mr. LODGE. The pay at private concerns, of course, is higher than that of the Navy.

Mr. GERRY. They would be drawing them away anyway, then.

Mr. LODGE. It is higher than the pay in private concerns, and it is the Government bidding against itself.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose a reasonable increase in pay for the Navy. But the Senator calls attention to the fact that greater pay is being given not only by private concerns but by the Shipping Board. I am calling attention to the fact that the Shipping Board, representing the Government, pursued the tactics and methods I have already described. The truth is that whoever was responsible for it in the Shipping Board ought to have been incontinently kicked out of his job within 10 minutes after the fact was discovered. It would be quite one thing for the Shipping Board to send to the employees at private concerns and tell them they would offer a better wage; but for the Shipping Board to get the pay roll of the employees of the American Navy, and then write each employee as he came into port that they would raise his wages, is about as intolerable, as impudent, and as senseless a thing as I have heard of in my life. We not only have done that, but similar occurrences have been frequent in other branches of the public service.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Missouri intimates, at least, that the men in the Navy should not be advised what other branches of the Government are paying for a given service. Does the Senator believe that because a man has enlisted in the Navy from patriotic motives he should be prevented from knowing what wages he could obtain in other branches of the service, and that he should be kept in ignorance of those facts?

Mr. REED. The Senator has the most peculiar mind of any man I ever knew. I think if he were to run the Lord's Prayer through his intellect he would be able to bring it out covered with suspicion and bearing evidence of artifice and fraud calculated to deceive even the Almighty. What I said was that that branch of the service got the pay roll of the Navy and sent to the men who came in a statement that they were receiving a certain amount of pay, and if they would quit the service of the Navy, "this patriotic service" the Senator talks about, and come over to another branch of the Government service not quite so patriotic, they would get more money. Thus the Government was bidding against itself. I did not talk about keeping men in ignorance or anything of that sort. That is all the reply I care to make to that kind of a question. It was not a good-faith question.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I resent the latter statement made by the Senator, that the question was not asked in good faith. I insist that the Senator's argument was based upon the assumption that these enlisted men should not have information as to what was being paid in other branches of the service. While it may be true that the Shipping Board was bidding against some other branch of the service, yet what I sought to do was to get the views of the Senator as to whether the remedy which he suggested was the proper remedy or not, whether you should keep these men in ignorance or whether you should devise some plan for rectifying this evil, which we all admit.

There is no one in this Chamber who realizes more than I do that we ought not to have the different branches of the Government bidding against each other, but the remedy is not to keep people in ignorance; it is to bring about some arrangement whereby there shall be equal pay for equal service in all branches of the Government. The question I asked the Senator was asked in good faith for the purpose of developing that idea.

Mr. REED. The Senator speaks of the remedy I suggested and makes a speech about it. I had not suggested any remedy nor said a single word about a remedy. It is only another one of those peculiar intellectual quirks of the gentleman in which he so frequently indulges. I simply stated a fact, that the Shipping Board was bidding against the Government itself, and was trying to rob the Navy of its men at a time when the Navy needed its men, and I had not gotten along to the point of discussing the question of remedy at all.

I do not think any special pleader for the Shipping Board can in any manner mitigate the infamy of their conduct by claiming that they were engaged in the delectable business of merely disseminating information. They were not disseminating information; they were robbing the Navy of its men, and it was an outrageous piece of business.

Other branches of the service have done the same thing. One of the great evils we have had to contend with during this entire war has been the bidding by one branch of the Government against another branch of the Government. That has nothing to do with the question as to what are fair and just wages. It is a good deal on the level of two women who are friends, or supposed to be friends, each trying to get the other woman's servant away from her, although it is a good deal more foolish than that.

Mr. President, just one other thing the Senator from Rhode Island said to which I want to call attention. He declared that if we are going back to the old order, having rejected the treaty of peace, we must have a strong Navy. I wonder if the question of our having a strong Navy depends upon the rejection of the treaty of Versailles, the treaty of treason, the treaty of surrender, the treaty of peace, or whatever you want to call it.

Unfortunately for the Senator the record is written on that question, and it was written before the rejection of the treaty. It was written at a time when the administration expected the treaty to be affirmed out of hand. It was written at a time when the distinguished leader upon this side of the Chamber announced every morning that the treaty would be ratified the next morning, or thereabouts. That record is that the Secretary of the Navy had demanded $913,000,000 for more fighting ships and a personnel for the Navy of 250,000 men.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. That was to carry out a program which was laid down in 1916.

Mr. REED. If it was to carry out a program laid down in 1916, which I deny, if we had determined to supplant the old order of affairs with the new millennium and the millennium was regarded as assured, what was the sense of going on and carrying out the old war program?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I may remind the Senator that it was not to carry out the old program; it was to add very largely to it; and it was done under the statement, made publicly by the Secretary of the Navy, that it was necessary to coerce England and have the greatest fleet in the world. We are carrying out the 1916 program now.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Massachusetts, with his usual clarity, has stated the case better than I could have stated it. I was going to make a somewhat similar statement.

You can not fool anybody by that sort of talk. The Secretary of the Navy is on record and the Secretary of War is on record and the Chief of Staff is on record that after the millennium is inaugurated, after the white doves of peace have become so numerous as to envelop the skies and shut out the light of the sun, it will still be necessary to have a standing Army nearly six times as great as we ever had, 576,000 men, to police the millennium, and 250,000 men in the Navy, and both the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff testified that the military program was necessary in order to redeem our obligations under the League of Nations.

Besides that they said we had to have universal military training—that is to say, universal military servitude—the forced draft of every boy of 19, which would have given us approximately 200,000 constantly in the Army, training, so we would have had over a million men as the permanent military and naval personnel of this country; and this was to be the condition after Christ had come to reign, with Japan and the British Empire as his vicegerents on earth.

More than that, since it has become certain that the treaty is about as dead as Julius Cæsar, Congress has cut down the size of the Army program immensely. The first fruits that we have of going back to the old policy of Washington and Jefferson is that we are not to have as large an Army; we are not to have the forced draft of every boy of 19 under the euphonious and sweet-sounding name of military training. My only regret is that the military bill can not be modified so that we shall not have an Army of over 200,000 men. That is all we need.

I have said several times on the floor of the Senate, and I repeat, that I want some one to tell me who is coming here to whip the United States. The only countries that have any excuse to regard us with enmity are prostrate, either disarmed or dismembered. Are the countries with which we did propose to go into partnership in order to regenerate the world, and to which we recently rendered great service in the war, coming here to conquer us? If they are, the sooner you quit talking the miserable nonsense of a partnership with them the better for this country. I want no partnership with a man who stands ready to cut my throat; I want no partnership with a nation that I have just helped save—and I am speaking now of the country and not of myself—if it is ready to turn and put its knife at the throat of my country.

Mr. President, I have been led aside from what I rose to say. I only wanted to call attention to these two facts. So far as the Navy pay is concerned, I am willing to sit down with the other Senators and do whatever is just and right in that matter, and whatever is necessary. I believe that we ought to have the personnel of our Navy at a high standard of efficiency, and I believe that we ought to have a good Navy, for while I have never indulged in any of the dreams which have disturbed other people, and while I have never indulged in the fear that we are to be immediately attacked by any other country, nevertheless I recognize the fact that the building of a Navy is a matter of slow progress and of development; that no nation can afford to allow itself to be helpless—League of Nations or no League of Nations; that power is always respected; that as long as we are able to defend ourselves we may be sure that our rights will be taken care of; that as long as this country is a great, powerful country we will not be molested by other countries.

I am confidently of the opinion that if at the time the European war broke out we had begun taking some radical steps for preparation we might never have been dragged into that war. Germany twisted Uncle Sam's nose because it thought Uncle Sam could not or would not fight. Germany would not have made that mistake if we had been in a better state of preparation. Whatever you may say of the Army, it is true that a Navy is a matter of slow growth and of development, and I am in favor of the United States being in a position so that if she is ever challenged by any nation her war fleet will not be obliged to duplicate the performance of the German war fleet, run for protection under the guns of forts.

So I am in accord with the Senator's purpose to see that the pay of the Navy is adequate, always having due regard, of course, for economy, but I am not going to support any such measure because the Shipping Board bid against the Navy, neither am I going to support it on the theory that we have gone back to old conditions. We never got away from old conditions. Before they sat down at the peace table at Versailles, Great Britain served notice that she would not take a single vessel from her fleet, that she would not consider the question of the freedom of the seas. Her statesmen said they had the freedom of the seas and they intended to keep it. I am in favor of the United States of America being able to say the same thing.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HARRISON, which was, on page 52, lines 3 and 4, to strike out the words "lineal list of his own branch" and insert the words "relative list of the Regular Army"; and, on page 53, line 2, after the word "service," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no officer shall be placed on the list below any officer to whom he is at present senior on the relative list of the Regular Army.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to have to oppose the amendment offered by the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], for whom I have such a high regard. I have talked to a number of officers in the different branches of the service, some of whom will lose by the single-list promotion, and there is not one of them who does not approve of it and say it is the fairest plan by which the promotion of officers can be made.

There is one injustice that the bill will work, and that is with reference to the class which graduated at West Point in 1917 ahead of its time. I have discussed the matter with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and had expected to offer an amendment, but I know he feels that to make an exception would be unwise. I hope, however, that when the bill gets into conference the conferees will take up the wonderful record of the class of 1918.

I am heartily in favor of the single list for promotion in the Regular Army. To my mind Congress could enact no legislation that would be more conducive to contentment among the officers than to require promotion to be made according to the length of commissioned service. This places all officers on the same basis, and no arm or department can feel that it is being discriminated against in the matter of promotions.

While I realize the danger of making any exceptions to the rule laid down in the bill, this rule works such injustice to one class of officers that I feel it is my duty to call it to the attention of the Senate.

The class of 1918 of the United States Military Academy was graduated August 30, 1917, and I believe it is recognized by all those familiar with their record that no class or group of officers rendered more distinguished service on the field of battle or made greater sacrifices than the class of 1918. As I previously stated, the class of 1918 was graduated August 30, 1917.

Of the 148 graduates, 111, or 75 per cent, served overseas prior to the signing of the armistice.

Ten members of the class were killed in action or died of wounds received in action, and 2 died of disease as a result of exposure in the campaign, a total of 12 deaths, this being 10.8 per cent of those who served overseas, or 8.1 per cent of the entire class.

Ten members of the class were wounded in action, making a total of 22 casualties overseas, this being 19.8 per cent of those who served overseas, or 14.8 per cent of the entire class.

Ten members, 9 per cent of those who served overseas, or 6.76 per cent of the entire class, were awarded the distinguished service cross.

Thirty-three graduates of the Military Academy were killed in action or died of wounds received in action. Of this number, 10, or 30.3 per cent, were members of the class of 1918.

The percentage of graduates of the class of 1918 with service overseas—75 per cent—is 26 per cent greater than the percentage—59.49 per cent—of all officers of the Regular Army with service overseas.

The percentage of the graduates of the class of 1918 that were killed in action or died of wounds received in action—6.8 per cent—is six and a half times as large as the percentage—1.065 per cent—of all officers of the entire Army who were killed in action or who died of wounds.

The percentage of graduates of the class of 1918 awarded the distinguished service cross—6.76 per cent—is nine and two-thirds times as large as the percentage—0.7 per cent—of officers of the entire Army awarded the distinguished service cross.

Fifteen days before the graduation of the class of 1918 of the United States Military Academy more than 27,000 young men were graduated from the first of the series of officers' training camps and commissioned in the Officers' Reserve Corps. Later, and subsequent to the graduation of the class of 1918, a number of these men were commissioned in the Regular Army, and there are now 893 of them in the Regular Army, all of whom are junior to the graduates of the class of 1918 of the United States Military Academy. If the bill as it now stands becomes a law, all of these 893 graduates of the first training camps will jump over and become senior to the graduates of the class of 1918 of the United States Military Academy. In addition to this, unless some provision is made, every one of the 27,000 graduates of the first training camp that is appointed to the Regular Army under this reorganization bill could and probably would be made senior in rank to the graduates of the class of 1918 of the United States Military Academy, who had been trained for more than three years, while those jumped over them were in training only three months.

While I do not underrate the work of the graduates of the training camps, I am sure no one would claim that the three months' military training they received in camp was equivalent to more than three years' training at the United States Military Academy. Because they happened to complete their course at the training camps 15 days before the graduation of the class of the Military Academy would not seem sufficient to justify their being jumped over these Military Academy graduates, who are now senior to them.

I would not take from the graduates of the training camps any of the rights or privileges they enjoy under the existing law. Eight hundred and ninety-three officers are nearly 11 per cent of the total number of commissioned officers on the active list of the Regular Army to-day. To jump such a large per cent of all the officers of the Regular Army over the members of the class of 1918 would very seriously retard their future promotion and would be most discouraging and disheartening to these young men who have rendered such arduous and distinguished service in defense of their country and in the cause of humanity on the field of battle. To take from these young men the rights and privileges they now enjoy under the law would, to my mind, be ungrateful, to say the least. I believe in rewarding those who have done the hardest fighting, regardless of their branch of the service or anything else, and certainly the record of this class of 1918 should be a pride to the Army and the people of our country.

Mr. President, I have opposed the provisions of this bill relative to the National Guard, and I think it is unjust to deprive the National Guard of the States of the rights that have heretofore been given them. The adjutant general of my State, many other National Guardsmen, and members of the Georgia State Militia, who rendered brilliant service in Cuba, Mexico, and France, have protested against the passage of this part of the measure.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I probably would not have said anything further touching this question had it not been for the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

I have no interest in the world in the amendment which I have offered. I want to see a good spirit in the Army. I voted for increased pay for the officers as well as for the enlisted men in the Army, and for increased pay for officers in the Navy. I offered a resolution in the Senate, and the Senate adopted it, calling on the Secretary of War to know why such gross unfairness was practiced by the General Staff in the demotion of officers. Everything I have done has been with an eye single to adding to the spirit and the morale of the Army.

I have offered this amendment with the same purpose. I believe the effect of it will be to bring about that result. I believe it, and believe conscientiously, that if the provision is adopted as embodied in the bill it will cause demoralization among the officers in the Engineer branch as well as the Artillery and perhaps the Ordnance. That is the sole object of offering the amendment. The issue is clearly joined. If a majority of the Senate want to adopt the plan of the single list and let it be retroactive, as is provided in the bill, then that is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi calls for a division on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I am asking for division on the question whether the yeas and nays shall be ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that one-fifth of the Senators present did not second the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Comer	Frelinghuysen	Gronna
Brandegee	Curtis	Gerry	Hale
Chamberlain	Dial	Glass	Harris
Harrison	Lodge	Pittman	Sterling
Henderson	McCumber	Pomerene	Sutherland
Jones, N. Mex.	McKellar	Ransdell	Swanson
Jones, Wash.	McNary	Reed	Thomas
Kellogg	Myers	Sheppard	Trammell
Kendrick	New	Simmons	Underwood
Keyes	Nugent	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
King	Page	Smith, S. C.	Warren
Kirby	Phelan	Smoot	Wolcott

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained on official business.

Mr. GRONNA. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], upon which he asks for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANSDELL. I offer an amendment, which I have previously presented. It comes in on page 20. I will ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 20, line 5, after the words "major general," it is proposed to insert the words "2 assistant chiefs of engineers with the rank of brigadier general," so that the section will read as follows:

SEC. 22. Corps of Engineers: The permanent personnel of the Corps of Engineers shall consist of 1 Chief of Engineers with the rank of major general, 2 Assistant Chiefs of Engineers with the rank of brigadier general, and 900 officers and 16,000 enlisted men, in their appropriate grades, all of whom shall be detailed or assigned from the permanent personnel as provided for in this act. The reserve personnel shall consist of all reserve officers and reservists of the organized reserve and National Guard of the United States assigned to Engineer Corps units as provided for in this act.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to add two general officers in the Corps of Engineers of the Army. There is one Chief of Engineers at the present time with the rank of major general, and I should like to add two brigadier generals.

I have had prepared a statement in regard to this amendment to which I will ask the attention of the Senate, as it is a matter of considerable importance.

The amendment will not increase the number of brigadier generals, which is fixed at 50 by section 12, page 9, line 22 of the pending bill, and hence it will not increase the cost of the Army. The purpose is to recognize by law the need for two Assistant Chiefs of Engineers and to insure that these officers shall be available for duty in the office of the Chief of Engineers irrespective of changes of policy due to changes of personnel in the General Staff or in the War Department. The Secretary of War in his hearings before the congressional Committees on Military Affairs has advocated legislation authorizing two such assistants.

The need for these two assistants has existed for a great many years, but it has been greatly intensified in recent times. The diagram hereto attached indicates the functions of the Corps of Engineers and the great number and variety of duties devolving upon the Chief of Engineers. It indicates also the proper functional organization of the office of the Chief of Engineers and the duties to be performed by his two principal assistants, who should have the title of Assistant Chiefs of Engineers with the rank and pay of brigadier general.

It is to be noted that there are a great number of administrative duties to which, in compliance with law, the Chief of Engineers must devote his personal attention. These are connected with works, activities, and institutions of a miscellaneous, civil, and military nature. They are indicated in the diagram in the upper left corner. These duties render the position of the Chief of Engineers quite different from that of the chiefs of other combatant arms and staff services of the Army; they require for their performance a large part of the time of the Chief of Engineers.

I will read from the diagram referred to the duties of this officer, so that they may be clearly before the Senate.

Duties requiring personal attention of the Chief of Engineers: He is a member of the Rock Creek Park Commission; of the Board of Control of Rock Creek Park; of the committee on suburban highways of the District of Columbia; a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications; a member of the board of commissioners, Soldiers' Home; of the board of commissioners, United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth; of the board of review, a war activity which has been terminated; of the subcommittee of the committee on engineering and education, Council of National Defense, a war activity which has also been terminated; chairman of the advisory board, Port and Harbors Facilities Commission, United States

Shipping Board, another war activity which has been terminated; of the board for fireproof laboratories, and so forth, of the Bureau of Mines, Pittsburgh, Pa.

He is obliged to make recommendations in connection with the following matters: The establishment of anchorage grounds; bridges, dams, dikes, and causeways in navigable rivers; permits for structures in navigable waters; occupation of Federal structures in connection with navigable waters; allotment of various indefinite appropriations for operating canals, snag boats, and so forth; charges for benefits arising from storage dams; modifications in plans for construction of canals; and adjustments arising from collisions.

Those are his purely civil duties. In addition, the military duties requiring the personal attention of the Chief of Engineers are as follows: He is in charge of the whole Engineer Corps, which, according to the bill under consideration—Senate bill 3792—will number 900 officers and 16,000 enlisted men, and under the House bill—No. 12775—600 officers and 12,000 enlisted men. The Chief of Engineers is technical adviser to the Chief of Staff and the General Staff on (1) all matters of engineer policy for the Army; (2) training and employment of Engineer troops and engineering duties of other troops.

He has to look after the assignment of the Engineer personnel, the field equipment for the Engineer troops and the Engineer equipment of all troops; to see to the training (a) of officers, including special service schools; (b) enlisted men, including schools and troops in the field; (c) training in appropriate engineering duties of all officers and troops; and also has duties to perform in connection with officers furnished to the Panama Canal and the District of Columbia.

There are a great many duties which under my amendment would be performed by one or the other of these brigadier generals. One of them would be assigned to civil duties and the other to military duties.

The civil duties to be performed by one of the brigadier generals would be as follows:

River and harbor works:
Ten territorial divisions.
Fifty-three territorial districts.
Examination, surveys, and reports.
Estimates.
Execution of works.
Maintenance and operation of works.
Board for Rivers and Harbors.
California Débris Commission.
Mississippi River Commission.
Flood control.
Operating snagboats.

Under the miscellaneous civil works to be performed by the brigadier general in charge of civil works are the following:

Leases of water powers on Government dams.
Establishment and regulation of harbor lines.
Recommendations for and supervision of operation of bridges over navigable waters.
Recommendations for and enforcement of rules for the navigation of navigable waters.
Recommendation for and supervision of removal of wrecks.
Supervision of Alaska Road Commission.
Supervision of supervisor, New York Harbor.
Supervision and operation, Lake Survey.
Erection of the new Aqueduct Bridge in the District of Columbia.
Erection of various memorials.
Preservation of Niagara Falls.
Washington Aqueduct, District of Columbia.
Conduit Road in the District of Columbia.
Public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia.
Supervision of anchorage grounds.
Supervision of the erection of dams, dikes, bridges, and causeways in navigable waters.
Supervision of erection of structures in navigable waters (concurrent authority).
Supervision of the occupation of Federal structures and lands on navigable waters.

Those are some of the civil duties that would be performed by one of the brigadiers under my amendment. Now, I come to the military duties to be performed by the other brigadier general.

Supply staff service:
Estimates for engineer supplies.
Development of equipment for construction, engineer equipment for fortifications, field searchlights, ranging, and so forth.
Procurement, production, and accounting for engineer supplies; railroad equipment, except railroad artillery mounts; electrical equipment in fortifications, field searchlights, tugs, barges, lighters, and so forth; cranes, rails, and accessories; power generating sets; field construction manchinery, ranging equipment, and spare parts for above.
Technical adviser on specifications for all types of engineering equipment.

Under the operating staff service, he would advise in regard to 9 territorial departments, 6 territorial divisions, 22 territorial districts.

Separate engineer staff functions in corps and larger units.

Under fortifications, he would advise in regard to sites, plans, estimates, construction and maintenance, power plant and electric installation, and location of buildings.

In military mapping, he would advise in regard to estimates for field work, reproduction, distribution, membership on board of surveys and maps, Federal Government.

In connection with military roads, railroads, and bridges, he would advise in regard to examination, estimates, construction, repair, and maintenance, and various items of military construction.

A vast variety of duties come under the Chief of Engineers, and many of them would be performed by these two assistants.

Aside from these duties, the Chief of Engineers is:

First. The chief of a combatant arm of the service consisting of 16,000 enlisted men under the terms of the bill—over 300,000 men during the World War.

Second. The chief of a military staff service, which in turn comprises two major activities: (a) A supply service—analogous to the ordnance service—which procures, stores, and issues supplies of a technical nature for its own use and for the Army as a whole; and (b) an operating service charged with the construction, repair, and maintenance of seacoast fortifications and frontier defenses, when required, the construction of military railways and military roads, the conduct of military mapping operations, and in time of war construction of all sorts within the theater of operations.

Third. The execution of river and harbor improvements throughout the United States and its island possessions, including enforcement of laws for the protection of navigation.

In the bill as drawn the Chief of Engineers has been recognized as the chief of a combatant arm only and he has been placed on a parity with the chiefs of Infantry, Cavalry, Coast Artillery, and other combatant services, each of which is provided with a chief with the rank of major general.

I call attention to the fact that the Chief of Engineers, who is charged with so many and such important civil duties, is treated in this bill solely as the head of a combatant arm of the service and placed on a parity with the other combatant arms of the service.

The bill, however, takes no cognizance whatever of the other multifarious duties of the Corps of Engineers, either as a supply staff service or as an operating staff service, nor does it take any cognizance of the river and harbor work and other miscellaneous civil duties of the Corps of Engineers.

If it be granted that the Chief of Engineers can personally perform the duties of a chief of a combatant force of 16,000 enlisted men, he will, nevertheless, require assistants with proper rank and experience to perform the technical staff duties which devolve upon his office and also to administer the river and harbor activities under his jurisdiction.

These military staff duties involve the supervision of an annual expenditure of millions of dollars for purchase of technical supplies, for construction and maintenance of fortifications and military railways, the conduct of military mapping and engineer operations in the field. These duties are greatly increased in time of war, and the office of the Chief of Engineers must always be so organized and administered as to permit of ready expansion in an emergency.

The Corps of Engineers differs from all other branches of the Army in that it has charge of river and harbor improvements. This work is provided for by the annual river and harbor appropriation acts, and its present magnitude is indicated by the expenditures made during the past 20 years, as follows:

Average annual expenditure (1900–1919)	$29,567,681.82
Maximum annual expenditure (1914)	49,320,425.55
Minimum annual expenditure (1902)	14,902,980.74
Total for 20 years (1900–1919)	591,353,636.40

The above figures do not include expenditures on account of the following activities, viz: United States lake survey; preservation of Niagara Falls; Alaska Road Commission; public buildings and grounds, District of Columbia; Washington Aqueduct; Anacostia Park improvement; Potomac River bridges (Key Bridge, Aqueduct Bridge, and Highway Bridge); monuments and memorials outside the District of Columbia, national parks.

The river and harbor act of October 2, 1914, and that for March 4, 1915, made lump-sum appropriations of $20,000,000 and $25,000,000, respectively, and the pending river and harbor bill as it passed the House carries a lump-sum appropriation of $12,400,000, to which the Senate has added about $8,000,000, the bill pending before us carrying something over $20,000,000. These lump-sum appropriations involve additional work and responsibility for the Chief of Engineers and for his assistants, owing to the fact that they must prepare estimates of the amount to be allotted by the Secretary of War to the various localities needing improvement. This task demands intimate knowledge of the requirements of each locality, of the relative urgency of the respective projects, and the Chief of Engineers must be able to controvert with sound argument the vast number of claims presented by local interests seeking larger allotments for their respective localities.

Mr. President, I can testify personally how important the work of the Engineer Corps is in connection with river and harbor expenditures. I have had more or less connection with that work ever since I entered Congress 21 years ago. I know it has been done in a most faithful, efficient, and able way. It is growing more and more all the time, and certainly there should be a brigadier general in charge of this work under the Chief of Engineers, who has so many other duties to perform, and who can not possibly perform all these river and harbor functions himself.

This work connected with rivers and harbors is administered by a section in the office of the Chief of Engineers with a field organization covering the entire United States and island possessions. The territory is divided into engineer districts which, in turn, are grouped into territorial divisions, each under the administration of a colonel or other higher officer of the Corps of Engineers. There is, in addition, a large civilian personnel averaging 23,000 to 25,000 employees and a tremendous amount of equipment. Although the administration is decentralized to the greatest possible extent, the work devolving upon the office of the Chief of Engineers is nevertheless very great.

I suppose we will be told by the chairman of the committee that we do not need two brigadier generals to assist in handling a force of only 16,000 men.

Mr. President, there are fully 25,000 civilian employees, many of them of high rank, magnificent men, of the highest order of intellect among the civilian engineers of this country, who are engaged in work on rivers and harbors under the Engineer Corps of the Army. So you can add to the 16,000 men given regularly to the Engineer Corps in this bill 25,000 civilian employees engaged in river and harbor work, making a total under the Engineer Corps of fully 40,000 men.

It includes the preparation of the annual estimates for river and harbor improvements, the presentation of data required by Congress, the allotment of funds, the examination and review of projects for improvements, the supervision of all contracts and agreements for work, the issue of permits for bridges and other miscellaneous civil activities connected with the Alaska Road Commission, the Mississippi River Commission, the California Débris Commission, the Washington Aqueduct, Public Buildings and Grounds in the District of Columbia, and other miscellaneous duties.

With the increase in population and wealth of the United States the magnitude and the number of duties of the Chief of Engineers have steadily increased until now it is humanly impossible for one officer to discharge all of these duties and give to each a careful and conscientious study which it requires. Assistants must be provided upon whom the Chief of Engineers can rely. These must be men of mature judgment and extended experience. They must, in fact, be the best men to be had. They should have pay commensurate with their responsibilities and should have rank which will place them in the proper relation to the officers coming under their jurisdiction in the field.

It has always seemed strange to me, Mr. President, to have a colonel here in Washington directing a number of colonels throughout the country engaged in river and harbor work. Men with the rank of colonel throughout the country engaged in these important works should have as their immediate chief and director in Washington a man certainly with the rank of brigadier general. Their duties are very onerous, involve great responsibility, and the supervision over a large number of officers. These duties exceed in magnitude and importance the duties of any ordinary brigade commander, either in peace or in war. Civilians occupying analogous positions in the industrial world now receive anywhere from $20,000 to $100,000 per annum.

As a matter of comparison it may be noted that the bill provides the Quartermaster Corps, which is a purely supply service, with one chief with the rank of major general and two assistants with the rank of brigadier general.

I hope Senators will pay attention to this branch of the bill and my comments thereon. The Quartermaster Corps, I repeat, has one major general and two assistants with the rank of brigadier general.

It provides for the Ordnance Service—another purely supply service, the duties of which, in my humble opinion, do not compare in importance with those of the Chief of Engineers—one chief with the rank of major general and two assistant chiefs with the rank of brigadier general. It provides for the Medical Service, which is a combined supply and operating staff service, one chief with the rank of major general and two assistant chiefs with the rank of brigadier general.

Mr. President, I have no criticism whatsoever to make of the wisdom of the committee in giving a major general and two assistants with the rank of brigadier to these three great branches of the service—the Quartermaster Corps, the Ordnace Service, and the Medical Corps—but I insist that the Engineer Corps of the Army, with its large number of civilian employees, 25,000 of them scattered throughout the land, is surely as important as any one of these three, and if they are to be given two brigadier generals, the Engineer Corps should be given two brigadier generals.

The duties of the Corps of Engineers, including its combatant functions, its supply functions, its fortification, mapping, and miscellaneous construction functions, and its river and harbor functions are certainly no less in importance and magnitude than the duties of the three staff bureaus above mentioned, and it should be provided with the officers necessary to discharge its responsibilities.

In view of the foregoing, which is believed to be a conservative statement of facts, it is submitted that the bill should provide at least two Assistant Chiefs of Engineers with the rank of brigadier general. The duties of these two assistant chiefs are indicated in the diagram hereto attached but may be verbally presented as follows: (a) First Assistant Chief of Engineers (brigadier general) in charge of river and harbor improvements and miscellaneous activities devolving upon the Corps of Engineers, including the enforcement of laws for the protection of navigation. (b) Second Assistant Chief of Engineers (brigadier general) in charge of duties connected with the development, procuring, storage, and issuing of technical supplies required for the Army, and in charge of the construction and maintenance of coast fortifications and frontier defenses, the supervision of military mapping, the construction and operation of military railways, and miscellaneous engineer staff duties.

Even with these two assistants, the Chief of Engineers himself will be fully occupied with the general supervision of the activities devolving upon the Corps of Enginers as a combatant service consisting of 16,000 troops in time of peace—over 300,000 during the World War—and with the discharge of duties of a special nature which are now devolved upon him in his own person by law, by regulations, or by orders of the Secretary of War, as well as the general supervision of the entire Corps of Engineers and the Engineer Department at large.

Aside from the important duties requiring these two Assistant Chiefs of Engineers, there enters the question of incentive and reward and its bearing on the contentment and morale of the officers commissioned in the Corps of Engineers. The bill provides for 900 officers of Engineers, with one general officer only at the head of the corps. The ratio between general officers and officers of less rank within the Corps of Engineers is thus 1 to 900.

I call the attention of Senators to this proposition; the ratio of general officers to the other officers in this corps is 1 to 900. This condition should be contrasted with that obtaining in the other staff services provided for in the bill, viz:

In the Quartermaster Service the ratio is 1 to 117, in the Ordnance Service it is also 1 to 117, and in the Chemical Warfare Service it is 1 to 125. In the Army as a whole it is about 1 to 217, and 1 to 900 in the Corps of Engineers. Why this discrimination, Mr. President? I can not understand it. Thus, with three general officers in the Corps of Engineers, which will be the result of the amendment I have proposed, the ratio for Engineer officers will be 1 to 300; that is to say, conditions will be even more disproportionate in the Corps of Engineers than in the other staff services even if my amendment be agreed to, and the grossest discrimination against the Engineer Corps will exist in the Army if my amendment be not agreed to.

From this point of view there is thus a penalty attached to service in the Corps of Engineers as compared with service in the other branches of the Army, and this notwithstanding that for the discharge of its duties the Corps of Engineers requires men of the very best intellectual capacity. For over 117 years, since the inception of the United States Military Academy, it has been the practice to take into the Corps of Engineers only those graduates of that institution who have stood at the top of their respective classes. The few additional officers who in recent years have been drawn from civil life are not only graduates of the very best technical schools of the country but have been obliged to pass severe examinations prior to receiving a commission in the Army. It is feared that if the discrimination against the Corps of Engineers which the bill now carries is not removed we shall not be able to attract to that corps the graduates of the Military Academy, nor graduates of other technical institutions of the quality necessary to maintain the high standards of the Engineer service, or, in fact, to carry on the duties of the Corps of Engineers in a satisfactory manner. It will not be to the personal interest of such a graduate to enter the Corps of Engineers nor to remain in the Corps for any great length of time, even if he should enter, for there is a premium attached to duty in other arms of the service, the average being, as I have said, one general officer to 215 officers throughout the Army as a whole, and in the Engineer Corps, as now proposed to be constituted by this bill, 1 to 900. What incentive will there be for men to enter the Engineer Corps? This incentive will operate as a strong inducement to officers of the Corps of Engineers to seek service by detail in such other arms and to neglect their own development as engineers.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take up more of the time of the Senate in discussing this measure. It seems to me that the amendment I have proposed is of the utmost importance, it is eminently fair to this great branch of the Army, and I sincerely hope that the chairman of the committee will not oppose it, but will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think a proper understanding of the status of the Engineer Corps, as provided in the bill, will do very much toward relieving the Senator of the impression that that corps is discriminated against by the failure of the committee to allow two brigadier generals as assistant chiefs.

Under the terms of the bill the Engineer Corps are made combat troops, placed upon the same basis as the Infantry, the Cavalry, the Field Artillery, the Coast Artillery, the Signal Corps, and the Air Corps. Being made combat troops, an officer of the Engineers is eligible for a brigadier generalship of the line, just as an Infantry officer, a cavalryman, a field artilleryman, or a coast artilleryman. There is no limit to the number of officers from the Engineer Corps who may be promoted to the grade of brigadier general of the line.

The incentive under the terms of the bill for officers to join the Engineer Corps and serve in it, in my humble judgment, is greater than at any former time; for, whether they could contend before that they were combat troops and their men eligible for brigadier generalships of the line and major generalships in the line, the matter was not entirely clear, and many members of the corps labored under the impression that when it came to the matter of promotion to the grade of brigadier general in the line, an Engineer officer was apt to be discriminated against. The bill places the Engineers upon exactly the same basis as the Infantry, Cavalry, and other combat branches. So the Engineers will have the same opportunity for promotion to the higher grades as every other combat branch.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator think it would be at all probable that an Engineer officer could be given an increased rank in any combat forces, except possibly in time of war, when their very great ability, as has been demonstrated in past wars, has brought about their promotion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes; in time of peace it is entirely possible. In fact, the President only the other day sent to the Senate the nomination of Col. Jervey to be brigadier general in the line. He is an Engineer officer.

Mr. RANSDELL. Can the Senator give any other illustration besides that one?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think Gen. W. B. Connor is an Engineer. I know there are others, but I can not recollect their names offhand. That is the new idea in the service, and the bill is intended to perpetuate it. They are combat troops.

May I call attention to the proportions which the Senator has mentioned as existing under the bill between general officers of the different services and the other services? In the first place, the Senator probably has forgotten that we have amended the bill so that the Engineer Corps now, instead of having 900 officers, has 600. So the ratio of one general officer to 900 officers is a little inaccurate. It ought to be one general officer to 600 officers.

We will turn to the Air Corps, which is also not only a combat service, but in part a supply service. It supervises the manufacture of aeroplanes and motors. In that corps we have one chief of corps, with the rank of major general, and 1,550 officers, a much higher proportion of officers below the grade of general. In that corps the proportion is 1 to 1,550. In the Cavalry it is 1 to 950. In the Coast Artillery it is 1 to 1,200. In the Field Artillery it is 1 to 1,900. In the Infantry it is 1 to 4,500. In the Engineers it is 1 to 600. The smallest proportion of all is in the Engineers.

The committee considered the matter of assistant chief of this service, especially in connection with our consideration of the Engineer Corps, with the greatest care, and we have done the very best we can to lay out a workable plan by which each and every service will be able to function efficiently. The House bill carries one brigadier general as assistant chief in the Corps of Engineers. This bill carries none.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] offers to amend the bill by adding two brigadier generals. My own impression is that the corps does not need two brigadier generals inside of its own organization, especially when we consider the fact that the incentive for promotion under the bill is as high as that in any other branch of the service. The committee gave this subject its special attention, and I think that the amendment should not be agreed to.

My secretary has just handed me a list of some Engineer officers who have been promoted and who have served as officers in the line.

Mr. RANSDELL. In time of peace?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; Gen. Biddle, Gen. Kuhn, Gen. Sibert, Gen. Hodges, and Gen. McArthur, now superintendent of the West Point Military Academy, confirmed by the Senate a little while ago, and who is an Engineer officer. So it is not unusual, and it is going to be very frequent in the future.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator kindly tell us what civil service Gen. Sibert and Gen. Hodges performed as generals except in connection with the Panama Canal? They were not generals when they went there. I remember their service very well. They were sent from the Engineer Corps of the Army because they were very fine engineers, to assist in building the Panama Canal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very true, but since that——

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator might have mentioned Gen. Goethals, who was there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But he is not in the same category. He has never been a major general of the line that I can recollect, though he may have been. Gen. Sibert is a major general of the line of the Army.

Mr. RANSDELL. He was appointed a general because of his eminent service upon the Panama Canal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Whatever the reason for his appointment, he was nominated and confirmed as a major general of the line and is serving as such now.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the Senator will find upon an investigation that Gen. Sibert was given that high rank, and I believe some others were also given it, because of eminent civilian service as engineers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; I do not deny that, but that is still possible.

Mr. RANSDELL. It was not a purely military service. The Senator is basing his argument, as I understand it, upon the fact that the other combat arms of the service have the same number of ranking officers as the Engineers. He treats this purely as a combat service, and my contention is that it is a very important civil service, that the civil service is just as important as the military service, and a very large number of men are engaged in the civil service. I showed in my remarks that we have fully 25,000 men in that service, and the very men to whom the Senator has alluded made a wonderful record as civilians on the Panama Canal work. I know particularly about Gen. Sibert and Gen. Hodges.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My recollection is not entirely clear. I think Gen. Goethals is a major general of the line. I am quite sure that he is. So the incentive is just as strong in the Engineer Corps as in any other branch of the Army. We have several instances of Engineer officers being promoted to the position of brigadier general or major general as a reward, of course, for distinguished service. That is why every officer gets promotion to that rank; it is for distinguished service in whatever branch he serves in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment on page 70 beginning at line 5 down to and including line 14 was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. After consultation with the Senator from South Carolina I will say that I have no objection to a reconsideration of the vote by which that amendment was agreed to, and then disagreeing to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment on page 70 beginning with line 5 of the bill was agreed to. Without objection the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I now ask that the amendment be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator from New York with reference to the provisions on page 66 about aliens entering into the training service. I spoke to him about it the other day. No action has been taken, and I think we should really strike out beginning with line 18.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That matter has been discussed since the bill was changed from one involving universal military training to that of voluntary training. I have discussed it with several Senators and there seems to be a disposition to agree that it should be taken out. I rather imagine that it would be taken out in conference, but I am perfectly willing to have it disposed of here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I move to amend by striking out the paragraph on page 66, beginning in line 18 with the words "any male alien" and extending down to and including line 15 on page 67.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 52, lines 2, 3, and 4, strike out the words "without changing the present position of any officer on the lineal list of his own branch, but otherwise as nearly as practicable"; on page 52, line 5, before the word "length," insert the word "total"; and on page 52, line 5, after the word "service," insert the words "in the United States service."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in the discussion of the single list this matter has already been pretty fully discussed. I believe the single list for promotion is undoubtedly the best method of promoting officers in the Army, and I think the provision for a single list is a proper one; but I believe it ought to be based entirely upon the length of commissioned service. If the words are stricken out that I have moved to strike out, it will make the single list based entirely upon the length of commissioned service.

It is claimed that this happened a long time ago, and the inequity that these Spanish War officers have suffered has been suffered so long that it ought not now to be corrected. It is one of the purposes of the bill to correct inequalities of promotion that have heretofore existed in the Army, and I believe that when you correct one you should correct all.

It has been stated here that no complaint has ever been made. I find that a bill was introduced as far back as 1903 to make this correction. The truth is that young men who graduated from the Military Academy were placed ahead of young men who had volunteered in the Spanish War and had fought for their country at that time. That discrimination ought not to have been made at the time, and now is the best time in the world to correct it.

As was developed in the argument over the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the bill undertakes to iron out the inequalities that have heretofore existed, and we ought to iron them all out and base the matter wholly upon the length of commissioned service. The lineal list, in order to be fair, must have a basis that is fixed and determined, and not leave it to some one to arrange. I hardly know who would have the right to arrange the list. The wording of the bill is as follows:

> shall be placed on the list without changing the present position of any officer on the lineal list of his own branch.

That gives to the War Department the right to continue this discrimination. I do not think it ought to be allowed. I am not going to discuss it further. I think all Senators know exactly what it is. It is a question of doing justice to these young men who fought for their country from 1898 to 1901. If we are going to do justice by the other Army officers and make the promotion equal and uniform throughout the Army, we ought to make it so for these officers who fought in that war.

Surely if there is any class of officers who are entitled to fair treatment in the method of promotion, it is the men who have actually fought during time of war. I submit that we should correct existing inequalities all at one time. The only way whereby we shall ever have an agreement that the adjustment is fair, is to make it absolutely fair from beginning to end, and to base rank entirely upon commissioned service. Then we shall have no more trouble about promotions, and no more special bills to promote men in the Army.

Mr. President, if there is nothing more to be said on the matter, I ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just a word on this matter, which was debated to some extent a day or so ago. It is a question to which the committee has given a good deal of attention in making up the initial single list for promotion. As I said the other day, this situation arose back in 1901. It seems that at that time the Congress authorized the admission into the Regular service as officers of a group of officers who had served as volunteer officers during the Spanish-American War. It is to be assumed that at that time the Congress took into consideration the places which those officers were to occupy in their several grades in relation to the Regular officers with whom they were merged. Congress in that day inserted a provision apparently that these volunteer officers should not be credited for their service as such volunteer officers, but should in effect go de novo into the Regular service.

Is it fair to assume that that was an expression on the part of Congress which was expected to stand? It was a legislative act; it was an act of discretion, and the officers took their places under that provision of law. Since then there has been no disturbance of that provision of which I am aware. Neither am I aware that there has been any concerted move to have that old law of 1901 changed. Since 1901 down to the present year, 1920—practically 19 years—these officers have gone along in their original status as provided by that act of Congress in 1901. They have had their promotions from time to time, and most of those who went in as second lieutenants or first lieutenants at that day are undoubtedly majors and lieutenant colonels to-day.

The matter has been long settled, and apparently, in view of the fact that there has been no concerted action in all this time to change that law of 1901, the situation has been accepted by the majority of them.

Now we come to write a promotion list, and it is proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, in effect, to repeal the act of 1901 and to put this little group of officers upon the promotion list in the places which they would occupy upon that list if Congress had not expressed its desire and its preference in the act of 1901. The impression of the committee is that that is going too far back; that the situation has been accepted for too long a time; and that were we to do what the Senator from Tennessee suggests we would disrupt a settled state of affairs. In fact, my own information is that some of these officers—perhaps not many of them—by reason of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee would be jumped 300 numbers over the heads of men under whom they have been rated for 19 years. I think the disruption would be too great to warrant attempting to repeal that old act.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will permit me to ask him a question, I desire to say that I did not catch the explanation as to the law of 1901, which provided for the status of the Regular officers who served as volunteer officers in the war with Spain.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The act of 1901 in providing for admission into the Regular Army of a certain number of volunteer officers who served in the Spanish-American War provided at the same time that in assigning those men to the Regular service in their respective grades no credit should be given for the length of time during which they had served as volunteer officers. They came into the service and took their places without that credit. Now it is proposed, 19 years later, to give them that credit in the arrangement of the single list, though the situation has been accepted for 19 years.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is proposed to give them all credit for the time that they served as volunteers in the Spanish-American War?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. They came into the Army knowing full well that they were not going to have that credit, because the Congress of that day said they should not have it. Now the Senator from Tennessee asks that they be given that credit.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But these officers having been incorporated into the Regular Army will get their promotion necessarily under this provision as their length of service justifies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes; except that their volunteer service in the Spanish-American War will not count.

Mr. McKELLAR. That part of their service during which they were fighting for their country in the Spanish-American War will be excepted; that will be entirely left out.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As I understand the Senator from New York, under the act of 1901, the officers referred to went into the Regular Army with a full understanding of the law and knowing that they would not get that credit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and they have ever since been complaining of the inequalities of the law. If we are to put all officers on the single list, why should we discriminate against these young men who started their careers by fighting for their country? Because Congress has discriminated against them heretofore is no reason why we should now discriminate against them. If we are going to put them all on the basis of length of commissioned service—and that is the only way it ought to be done—why not make the rule apply to all those who have been in the service of the United States as commissioned officers for the whole length of such service?

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the floor, but I will gladly yield.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I happen to recall the circumstances surrounding the admission of these volunteer officers into the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army. As the Senator from Tennessee will remember, the Spanish-American War was not an extended war, so a great many of the officers did not get into action and had next to no military training. The argument, which was irrefutable, then was that these officers should not be put in along with those who had spent years in acquiring a military education, for they would have to be educated along military lines after they came in, which was a fact. They were admitted, and then were sent to Army service schools for one, two, three, or four years, which, so far as their actual service was concerned, was lost time to the Government of the United States. They received the Regular Army pay and allowances while they were obtaining the training which was requisite to put them on an equal footing with other officers. For that reason the law to which the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], has referred was enacted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, assuming that the Senator from Wyoming is correct as to that, the same thing exactly is true of graduates from West Point. Their service is counted from the time they enter the academy and not when they leave it, and yet it is proposed to put them ahead of the young men who were commissioned following their service in the Spanish-American War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. West Point service is not credited on the single list.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been, as I understand, in the case of those who have heretofore graduated from West Point. Their service has been counted from the time they entered the academy, including their service at West Point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not under the single-list provision. We are now discussing the single-list provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will have that effect. Length of service has been computed from the time they entered the academy, and now it is proposed to give them the benefit of that and to exclude from consideration the service rendered by officers who were fighting for the country at the time of the Spanish-American War. The provision is not at all fair to those officers. All ought to be treated alike, and especially officers who served as volunteers in time of war ought to have as much credit for the service they actually rendered in war as other officers have for the time they spent in the academy.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, on which he asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. As I am unable to secure a transfer I will withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. I ask to be counted for a quorum.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence I am not at liberty to vote, and can not secure a transfer of the pair. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] on official business.

Mr. GLASS. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. KIRBY. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MOSES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The roll call resulted—yeas 20, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Ashurst	Gronna	Overman	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] the yeas are 20 and the nays are 27, Senators KENDRICK and THOMAS being present and not voting, thus constituting a quorum. The amendment is rejected. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if there is no other amendment pending I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. On last Monday, I believe, he offered an amendment, which was adopted without discussion, reducing the number of officers in the Corps of Engineers from 900 to 600. That was a much larger proportion of decrease than in the other branches of the service. I have some data here that show that they now need at least 623 officers in the Engineer Corps. Before the war, I believe, there were 502 officers in the Engineer branch of the service. Very frequently it has been the case—I know I have experienced it myself—that in doing river and harbor work the War Department was not able to make any new districts or even to place officers in the old districts because of the lack of officers in the Engineer branch. In view of all these circumstances, does not the Senator from New York think it would be better to amend his amendment by making the number, say, 700 instead of 600, so that there will be no question about it?

I understand that the General Staff or the President can either reduce or increase the various branches under the reorganization bill; but that procedure involves red tape, and it seems to me that in view of these circumstances we ought not to make such a great decrease in the Engineer branch.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the redistribution of personnel which was made necessary by the adoption of volunteer training as contrasted with universal military training was worked out as practically, and I may say as scientifically, as we could do it. It is a distribution which is not fixed, as the Senator has said. It is an allotment. The number of officers in any branch can be increased. Of course, it must be done, however, by taking that increase either from the detached officers' list or from some other branch of the service, whichever has the need for officers. We believed that the number of 600 was very close to what the Engineer Corps actually need. If they need 643 I think there will be no trouble about their getting them. All they have to do is to prove their case to the Secretary of War, who, of course, acts for the President. It does not really mean the President.

Mr. HARRISON. They would have to go through that formality, and the Secretary of War can say that the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate weighed this matter and gave great consideration to it and put the number in the Engineer Corps at 600, and that might have great weight with him. In view of the fact that the number of officers was decreased on the motion of the Senator from New York after the bill had been prepared and had been under discussion here for days, when the total number of officers was decreased from 18,000 to 17,000, I believe, in all of the branches, it seems to me that it is a little too much of a decrease to go from 900 to 600 in the Engineers alone.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is one other thought that I have in mind. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has reserved his amendment that has to do with the construction division. The Senator will renew his amendment as soon as the bill comes into the Senate. Should he be successful in his effort to strike out the separate construction division, he will then offer an amendment, as I understand it, to place the construction work, with the exception of the utilities, under the Engineer Corps. That, ordinarily, would require an addition to the Engineer officers. The number of officers that the Engineer Corps have said they would require if they were given the construction work is 130. I have discussed this matter with the Senator from Wisconsin in the hope that in the event his amendment should succeed—and I hope it will not—we would not have to indulge in redistribution and reallotment of the personnel under this bill, but would rather rely upon the elastic features and the detached officers' list.

We now have under this bill approximately 1,100 officers available on the detached list. The bill says that the maximum on the detached list shall be 1,500; but our allotments here, and the needs of the service as prescribed in the bill, actually reduce that number to 1,100 available officers. Now, we might from that number of 1,100 available officers use some of those detached officers to reinforce the Engineer Corps. It can be done by the War Department itself. I do not know what the intention of the Senator from Wisconsin is as to whether, in the event that he succeeds in striking out the separate construction division and putting the construction under the Engineers, he then intends to offer another amendment increasing the number of Engineer officers.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that I do intend to do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You see, then, that adds 130. I have grave doubt that we ought to go any further. That would make it 730.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but the chances are that the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin may not prevail, even though I hope it will prevail.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If it does not prevail, I for one have no objection to making it——

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest making it 650. They say they require 643.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Give them 650, then.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to see that particular branch suffer, because it is doing an important work. As I understand the Senator, then, if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin should be defeated, he will not oppose an amendment to the bill making it 650?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would accept that amendment under that set of circumstances.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, of course, if my amendment should be successful, it would require a larger number than that—650 plus 130.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is where I begin to have my doubts.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, if he is correct, they require 643 now, and if I shall be successful in my amendment they will require 130 more, because the separate construction division provides for 200.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One hundred and fifty.

Mr. LENROOT. One hundred and fifty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed——

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] reserved his amendment for a separate vote in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has given notice that he will reoffer it in the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. I now move to strike out section 37 of the bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Does that relate to the separate construction division?

Mr. LENROOT. It does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to strike out section 37 of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I shall say only a word regarding this amendment. It is the same proposition which was defeated in the Committee of the Whole by one vote. I propose to strike out the provision for a separate construction division, and if the amendment shall be successful I shall follow it up with an amendment placing all new construction the estimated cost of which exceeds $25,000 under the Engineer Corps, and another amendment placing the operation and maintenance of these utilities in the Quartermaster Corps. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before, I vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I have been given to understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote on this amendment. I vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absense I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. He is not present, and I am therefore not at liberty to vote.

The roll call having been concluded,

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, is absent. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I make the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 33, not voting 45, as follows:

YEAS—18.

So Mr. LENROOT's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] a few moments ago when the bill was in the Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the amendment on page 20, lines 5 and 6, by which the number of officers in the Engineer Corps was reduced from 900 to 600, be reconsidered, and that the bill be amended on page 20, line 6, by striking out before the word "officers" the words "nine hundred" and inserting the words "six hundred and fifty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the number of officers in the Engineer Corps was reduced shall be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 20, line 6, before the word "officers" strike out the words "nine hundred" and insert the words "six hundred and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as there seems to be no further amendment to be offered, I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 12775, which is the House Army reorganization bill, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend House bill 12775 by striking out everything after the enacting clause and substituting the perfected text of Senate bill 3792 as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. There was a little confusion in the Chamber, and I could not hear what the proposition was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has moved to strike out all after the enacting clause of H. R. 12775, now before the Senate for consideration, and insert in lieu thereof the perfected text of Senate bill 3792, the bill which has been under consideration by the Senate.

Mr. REED. Would that cut off all further amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not cut off any amendment by way of perfecting the text of either one of the bills, but if the Senate is going to vote upon the question now it will have to vote upon the bill as perfected in the Senate as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire very much to see the size of this Army of 300,000 reduced to not more than 200,000 troops. I had intended offering an amendment to that effect, but I never want to do anything that is utterly useless or attempt to do a thing utterly impossible of accomplishment. Taking into consideration the votes which have already been cast upon kindred propositions, and which unmistakably manifest the set purpose of the Senate, I am certain that an amendment such as I have authored would be overwhelmingly defeated. The spirit of militarism seems to possess the Senate. Accordingly all I can do is to register my protest against a bill which will burden the country unnecessarily, and this at a time when the country is carrying a load so enormous that the people are staggering beneath it.

I realize that it is useless to offer such an amendment, and I shall not offer it, but I am going to venture the prediction that it will not be very many months before it will be discovered that the sentiment of the country is against this step toward Prussianization.

A standing Army of 300,000 men in the United States, 250,000 men in the Navy, and a National Guard, which the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] insists can thrive and prosper under this bill, is a Military Establishment larger than we need and larger than can be justified by any kind of logic or by the citation of any reason. The Army is three times that of any Army we have ever had in a time of peace.

There never has been a period—in recent years, at least—when we were in so little need of a great Army as now. As the country has grown I am willing to see an increase proportionate to the growth of the country, but an Army in excess of 200,000 men at this time can not be justified.

I repeat what I have said before, Whom are we going to fight? If it is Mexico, we do not need a standing Army of 300,000 for that purpose. It certainly is not Germany or Austria; they are helpless. It is not our allies in the late war, I hope. But this Army is nevertheless to be fastened upon us. All I can do is to utter my protest. I shall utter it elsewhere. I think the whole of the country is returning to a normal condition. I think the country in that respect is far in advance of the Congress, particularly of the Senate. I believe an appeal to the people will demonstrate the accuracy of my expressed judgment.

Bear in mind that this Army is to cost, man for man, probably three times what any army has heretofore cost; that the pay has been increased; that the cost of subsistence has been increased; and that the burden will be grievously felt. The new Army—not including the Navy—will cost $600,000,000 per annum. That is a fixed charge, to go on year after year. It is three times the cost of the German army in time of peace. It is a tax of $6 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. It is a tax of $30 per year on the head of a family of five persons.

I warn the Senate that we will not always have "Flush times in Alabama," by which I, of course, mean flush times in the United States. There is every probability that there will be a default, temporary or permanent, in many of our foreign loans. Indeed, a temporary default is a certainty; it has already occurred. The taxpayers of America must go into their pockets and keep up the interest on our bonds, the proceeds of which we loaned to foreign countries, now in default. We have shoveled out American dollars to foreign countries since the armistice to the tune of nearly two thousand millions of dollars, and I believe the major part of it has gone to absolutely bankrupt countries. Pay day is coming, and the only way to get ready for pay day is to cut down our expenses and, if possible, keep up our income.

The idea that the United States can endure anything, any amount of bloodletting, is one of many errors into which our egotism too often has led us. A single poor crop in the United States and we will confront a condition that will be very hard to meet. This Government can not afford to default in the interest on our obligations, even though the proceeds thereof went to other countries that have defaulted to this Government. We must reduce expenses, and one of the safest places in the world to reduce is by a reasonable reduction in the size of our standing Army.

Why is it that we are even thinking about an army of 300,000 men? Let me answer my own question. It is because the military spirit seized the executive department of the Government, because they sent down a bill here demanding 576,000 Regular soldiers. I suppose that the Committee on Military Affairs thought they were doing very well when they pared that down to 300,000. But no such bill should have been sent here in the first place.

Of course, if you leave it to the officers of the Army they will say exactly what they have always said, that they want "a large and efficient Army." I do not blame the officer of the Army; he looks at it from his own peculiar standpoint. He was born somewhere on a farm or in some village or city, and at the age of 16 or 17 was sent down to West Point and put in a military strait-jacket and taught the art of fighting, and he has done mighty well at it. I am not here to reflect for a single instant upon him, but he lives that life and he looks at all conditions from the standpoint and through the atmosphere of the professional soldier. If you let him have his way we will have an Army of a million men. But the Congress ought to take a view that embraces the whole country and all of its interests.

I have never been a pacifist; I have never been in favor of national disarmament. I think disarmament as taught by some is the idlest dream that ever filled the brain of man. If you disarmed the white race to-morrow the yellow race would control the world the day after to-morrow. The thing that has made possible white civilization has been the ability of the white man to defend himself against all comers, and he could only do that because he had arms in his hands superior to those possessed by barbarians. I am perfectly willing to agree to a limitation of armament, but to talk about disarmament is an idle thing. I say that so that my other remarks will not be misunderstood.

Striking a balance between the foolishness of disarmament and the extreme view of a great army, I am unable to find any necessity or justification for 300,000 professional soldiers in a time of profound peace in this country. It would be a good deal better if the most of them were engaged in useful occupations, helping to produce and to fill the gap that is now existing between production and consumption. That gap is, after all, the chief reason for the high cost of living. If you make 10 per cent more shoes than the people of the country need to wear, the price of shoes will come down. If you have 10 per cent less shoes than the people need to wear, the price of shoes will go up. That is true of every other thing we use. The gap between production and consumption was caused by the withdrawal of a vast number of men from the avocations of peace and the productive occupations and putting them upon the field of battle where, of course, they had to go, and where they did magnificent work; but the loss of their labor and their products is nevertheless upon us.

I have asked the question, Why this Army? I have asked it a half dozen times on the floor of the Senate, and I have received nothing but the silence of a cynical smile from Senators who are proponents of the bill. I have inquired whether we are creating this Army because of imaginary internal troubles. One Senator made an argument of that kind, but I think he afterwards recanted it, or explained it away.

We have some strikes, and we will have some. We have some lockouts, and we will have some. There has not been a strike yet requiring any such body of troops as this, and I surely think some means can be devised by which the strike as a permanent institution in our country can be abolished and an equitable way provided for the settlement of disputes between labor and capital.

I am not in favor of creating this sort of an army because there may be some possible strikes. I am not in favor of doing so upon the theory that the American people are disloyal. They are not disloyal. Let any community in the United States be convinced that it has a really disloyal man in its midst and it will run him out or hang him before the posse comitatus can get there to protect him. Lurid headlines in the papers about some slight disturbance, picturing it as though it were a war, help to keep the public mind excited over dangers that are largely of the imagination. I ask Senators—I ask the people of the country—to examine the conditions of the communities where they live, where they know the people. Inquire whether they are law-abiding, loyal, or disloyal. Speaking of my own State, I could find a horse thief a good deal easier than I could an anarchist or a traitor, and we have not any superabundance of horse thieves; besides we have some associations that would attend to them if the officers were to prove inefficient.

We ought to get the blood out of our heads. We should know that the war is over and that America is out of it. Some of you ought to realize that you can not put her back into it. Try to pass a bill to raise an army to send over to Russia now! Try to pass a bill to raise an army to send over to Japan or China on account of Japan's seizure of Shantung; try to pass a bill to send our Army over to make war on Italy over Fiume or any other question; try to pass a bill to send another American soldier across the water; approach the question from that angle, and see how far you will get. If you vote for it, go back home and see what your people have to say about it. The American people will not tolerate it.

Another thing they will not tolerate is the use by armies of moneys appropriated to feed starving women and children.

Mr. President, I have entered my protest. I am powerless to change the existing situation. I say that an army of more than 200,000 men in this country at this time is a crime against the taxpayers; that it is unnecessary; and that it ought not to be imposed upon the American people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just a moment before the final vote is taken and the bill is passed. The highest amount, according to the records that I have been able to find, that was ever paid out by any nation in time of peace for its army was paid out by Germany in the year preceding the late World War, and the highest amount that Germany ever paid for its army up until 1913 was $200,000,000. The provisions of the pending bill can not be enforced at an expense of less than $600,000,000. Senators are going to make this bill the law, and they are going to tax the American people at least $600,000,000 for a peace-time military organization. The burden is going to be on those of you who vote for it. I do not propose to do so.

In addition to that, you are fixing the power and control of the Army in the hands of a military caste in this country, which, in my humble judgment, ought not to be done. We ought to have a democratic army in this country, and not a militaristic régime patterned after Germany. We have defeated the German army with the young men of this country; and yet after they won the war we are by this bill deliberately turning our backs on our own military traditions and institutions of the past and accepting the German military system that has brought nothing but ruin to Germany, and which came very near bringing ruin to the world.

Remember, Senators, that when you pass this bill you are voting for an army three times as expensive as any nation ever had in time of peace. I protest against its passage. I believe the bill is un-American; I believe it is unfair to the American people at this time to tax them in any such way. I do not think the bill ought to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Missouri desire the yeas and nays on the substitution or on the final passage of the bill?

Mr. REED. I desire the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The pending question is on the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. REED. I withdraw the request for the yeas and nays on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 42 of the bill by striking out the last two words on line 8 and all of lines 9 to 11, inclusive, and all of line 12, page 50, to and including the word "major," and by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That from among such persons there shall be appointed not less than 12 colonels, 150 lieutenant colonels, and 750 majors, such appointments to be made upon the recommendation of the chief of the arm, branch, service, bureau, or department in which the officer has served or is serving, and the concurrence of the board of general officers herein provided. No such person below the age of 48 years shall be appointed to the grade of colonel or below the age of 42 years to the grade of lieutenant colonel, or below the age of 32 years to the grade of major.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the chairman of the committee will be willing to accept the amendment and let the matter go to conference. I had not anticipated discussing the question at any length, but I will say that the main purpose of the amendment is to allow the appointment of emergency officers, those outside of the Regular Army, to the grades of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major, and to give emergency officers, or those on the list of emergency officers, fair representation in these appointments. That is the main purpose of the amendment. It has one further object, and that is to reduce slightly the age so that persons of 32 years of age may hold the position of major. I had occasion to comment on that aspect of the matter a few days ago, and referred to the fact that great wrong would be done certain majors, especially in the Judge Advocate General's Department, by fixing the age at 34 years, as proposed by the bill. This amendment fixes definitely the number of these officers as determined by Congress, and it is not left absolutely to the determination or recommendation of officers of the Regular Army and as they may be influenced by personal relationship or feeling.

I think it a most meritorious amendment. It simply gives to those outside of the Regular Army, and who have ably served their country, the recognition to which they are justly entitled. I trust at least that the amendment may be accepted by the chairman of the committee and may go to conference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I ask the question for information, because I do not apprehend quite clearly the purpose or the effect of the Senator's amendment. As I understand, the Senator suggests that this amendment is to take care of an emergency and to permit, automatically, the transfer to the Regular Army, or, at least, to invest with the powers of Army officers a large number of persons who are now upon the reserve list.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I so understand. They are upon the reserve list and not a part of the Regular Establishment.

Mr. KING. The emergency which the Senator has in mind obviously must be a war or the enlargement of the Army.

Mr. STERLING. No; the Senator is under a misapprehension. These are termed "emergency men or emergency officers." That, I think, is a general term given those who do not belong to the Regular Army or the Regular Establishment, who served in the war, who enlisted voluntarily, or who were conscripted and brought into the service in that way, and the idea is that they may have recognition and a fair chance for promotion with the men of the Regular force.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just a word upon this amendment. I shall not delay the Senate.

Let me say for the information of the Senator from Utah that the bill provides that half of all the vacancies created in the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army by the terms of this bill must be filled by the appointment of men who have been officers in the recent war—that is, emergency or citizen officers in the recent war—and a certain series of age limitations is placed upon those men in the several grades. Under the terms of the bill no man who is below the age of 34 can be appointed a major in the Regular Army from civil life or from among these emergency officers. While we provide that half of all the officers that are to be appointed in the Regular Army must be these veteran citizen officers, we do not attempt to say how many of them shall be colonels, or how many lieutenant colonels, or how many majors. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota makes it mandatory upon the President to appoint at least 12 of them as colonels, 150 of them as lieutenant colonels, and 750 of them as majors, whether they are fit for it or not.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It says "not less."

Mr. STERLING. I do not think any question can arise as to the fitness of the men that may be selected and that will be recommended for appointment to these various places, nor do I think the Senator from New York believes that any question will arise as to their fitness. They will be recommended, of course, by the chief of their particular branch of the service, which recommendation must be concurred in by a board of competent general officers, as provided by the amendment itself, Mr. President.

I think in all fairness that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the amendment reads that not less than this number must be appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. REED and Mr. McKELLAR called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before, I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but I am informed that he would vote with the committee on this bill, so I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Not knowing how he would vote on this bill, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. If present, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. NORRIS's name was called). The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is unavoidably absent from the city. If he were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer the general pair I have with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Ashurst	Henderson	McNary	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Spencer

So the bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, to establish military justice, and for other purposes."

Mr. FRANCE subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to make an announcement. I was delayed in reaching the Senate from my office in time to vote upon the passage of the Army reorganization bill. If I had been able to reach here in time, I would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. NEW, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. THOMAS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 12775, as reported from the committee to-day, be printed, showing the bill as amended and passed by the Senate. My information from the printing clerk of the Senate is that such a procedure will save one print of the bill, which is important in view of the scarcity of paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that Senate bill 3792 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that immediately after the river and harbor appropriation bill has been disposed of I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Fuller pension bill. In case the river and harbor bill should not be disposed of to-day I shall ask the Senate to-morrow, after the close of the routine morning business, to take up the Fuller pension bill for consideration.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 11892, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, the Senate has passed through the bill and the procedure now will be to begin at the first amendment passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over will be found on page 1, line 3, where the Senate committee proposes to strike out "$12,000,000" as the sum appropriated and to insert in lieu thereof "$20,000,000."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, would the Senator object if we should take up another amendment or two at this time? I think the amendment just stated by the Secretary will bring about quite a good deal of discussion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to passing over that amendment temporarily, with the idea that when we dispose of the other amendments we will take it up again.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment as a new section. I think it will be section 6.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that under the unanimous-consent agreement with which we began the consideration of the bill the Senator can not offer that amendment until all the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. HARRISON. That was the idea I had in suggesting that the first committee amendment be laid aside temporarily—that these individual amendments might be passed on and then we might return to that one.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the committee amendments are to be disposed of first.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to taking up the first committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] offered an amendment to raise the amount proposed by the committee. Is that amendment pending, or does the Senator desire to present it?

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to say something about that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the Senator offer his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; I offer the amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 1, line 3, strike out "$20,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$24,000,000."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, $24,000,000 is the amount recommended by the Board of Engineers as necessary to do the river and harbor work for the coming year. The first estimate submitted by the Board of Engineers was, I think, approximately $43,000,000, but after consultation with the House committee, and I think with the Senate Committee on Commerce, at their request to cut down their estimates to the lowest point to which they could be cut and yet provide enough for the prosecution of work on the rivers and harbors during the coming year, they brought in the last estimate for $24,000,000. I notice in the report filed by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], it is stated:

> Your committee hoped that it might feel justified in approving the amount as it came from the House.

In the House the amount of $12,000,000 was carried for this work for the coming year. The report proceeds:

> We are in hearty accord with the desire to meet the need for economy. The Engineers were told to go over the revised list of projects very carefully with a view to giving us the very lowest sum that they could get along with without detriment to existing commercial needs. They went over the projects carefully and insisted that $24,000,000 ($5,000,000 for maintenance and $19,000,000 for improvement) was the lowest sum they felt they could get along with.

Notwithstanding that last report, with all the economy that it was possible to conceive of upon the part of the Board of Engineers to carry on the work for the coming year, namely, $24,000,000, the Senate Commerce Committee cut it still further to $20,000,000. Necessarily, in view of the suggestion of the Board of Army Engineers, each project will be hampered to a more or less extent by an inadequate appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] does not desire to have this amendment voted on until he is here, and he expects to be here to-morrow. Therefore, since I suppose the Senator would prefer to have the discussion of the amendment at the time it is to be acted upon, I suggest that we take up the other committee amendments which have been passed over, and then I will ask unanimous consent to vacate our former order, so that the Senator from Mississippi will have an opportunity then to offer the amendment he desires to offer, and any other Senator can offer any amendment he wishes.

Mr. HARRISON. That is thoroughly agreeable to me, and I shall say nothing further on this particular amendment until it comes up to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought the Senator would prefer to make his argument on the same day the amendment is acted upon. I ask that the first amendment of the committee may be passed over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also ask that the amendment on page 2 may be passed over, because that is to be considered in connection with the one just passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will also be passed over. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 7, where the committee proposes to insert the following item relative to the Mississippi River, La., in the following words:

Mississippi River, La., with a view to securing an outlet to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico by the most practicable route for a permanent channel of a depth not exceeding 35 feet, and in investigating this matter consideration shall be given to the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal, New Orleans.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] proposes to amend the amendment beginning on line 21, after the words "35 feet," by striking out the comma and the words "and in investigating this matter consideration shall be given to the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal, New Orleans."

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator from Utah wish to say anything on that now, or will he permit me to make a statement first, as I was not present when the matter came up before?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may proceed now.

Mr. RANSDELL. This amendment, Mr. President and Senators, was inserted by the committee at my request, and it provides for a most important service. I doubt if Senators realize how important the measure is which is provided for by the amendment.

I was talking the other day with Gen. Beach, Chief of Engineers, and he told me that he did not believe there was any engineering project on earth comparable in importance with the plans for deep water at the mouth of the Mississippi River. That mighty stream drains nearly two-thirds of this Republic. All the water falling between the Alleghenies and the Rockies must pass to the Gulf through the Mississippi River, which is well called the Nation's sewer. It is thought by geologists that in comparatively recent times the delta lands of the Mississippi River were formed by the gradual filling in of sediment on both banks and that a great gulf extended up the valley above the present site of the city of Cairo, Ill. Beyond question the Mississippi River in its onward march to the sea carries in solution a very large quantity of earth and sand. It is constantly making additions to our continent, constantly extending the land into the Gulf of Mexico. I have not a map before me, but anyone who will look at a map of the United States will find a narrow strip or neck of land on both banks of the lower Mississippi River extending far out into the Gulf. That is caused by the deposit of sediment when the onrushing waters of the river, going down with considerable flow, strike the placid, quiet waters of the Gulf. As soon as the current ceases to move the sand and sediment settle to the bottom. Vast quantities of it are deposited, especially during times of high water, such as there is in the river now.

The papers in the last two days have published accounts of two breaks in the Mississippi River levees—one near Fort Jackson, only a few miles above its mouth, and the other at the little city of Bayou Sara, in the upper part of my State. Neither one is very disastrous, but they indicate that the great stream is not in peaceful mood; that it is rushing down rapidly with its colossal volume of water, accumulated from 31 States, carrying a giant load to the ocean. It is making land at this moment and making it rapidly.

Many years ago the engineers attempted to secure a proper channel from the city of New Orleans to the Gulf. New Orleans is to-day easily the second city on the continent in foreign trade, and its commercial importance is of the highest rank. In the volume and value of its imports and exports it is exceeded only by the city of New York. There is a rapidly growing commerce from New Orleans to the whole world. As our relation with the West Indies and Central and South America grow more and more intimate, and trade with the Orient through the Panama Canal assumes great proportions, the importance of New Orleans is much enhanced. A number of shipping lines have recently been established from the city to various lands.

The great engineer, James B. Eads, about 40 years ago suggested a plan to give a depth of 30 feet of water across the shallow bar at the mouth of the Mississippi River by contracting the channel between artificial dikes made of willow mats and stone, reducing it to a width of about 600 feet on the surface and 300 feet on the bottom. He was allowed to experiment only with the South Pass of the river, which carried about one-tenth of the volume of the water. His efforts were successful, and in pursuance of his plans a channel depth of 30 feet has since been maintained.

But there has been a constant expense, and fear that this narrow channel might some day be blocked by a ship sinking in the midst of it. It is only 600 feet wide at the surface, Senators; it is only 300 feet wide on the bottom. It is about 30 feet deep. One ship, and not a big one at that, sinking in South Pass, would completely block the commerce of the second port in America.

With that possible calamity constantly before us, the foresighted people of the Mississippi Valley some 20 years ago appealed to Congress to give them another channel to the sea, and a project was adopted providing for 35 feet through Southwest Pass, which carried, if I recollect correctly, about seven-tenths of the volume of the river. The engineers have been working faithfully on this Southwest Pass Channel for 15 or 16 years and have never yet gotten it anything like the depth of South Pass. They hope to get it that depth and deeper. They expect by drawing the banks closer together along the same general plans pursued by Eads to secure a depth of 35 feet. In the meantime the land is constantly building out on both sides into the Gulf, and no one can predict with reasonable certainty what the result will be.

In view of that fact, in view, too, of the further fact that the Atchafalaya River practically takes its source in the Mississippi 250 miles above its mouth and seeks an outlet in the Gulf for the waters of Red River and a large portion of the Mississippi by a route 150 miles nearer to tide level than by going down the Mississippi, the problem is uncertain and serious. The Mississippi may seek a new channel to the sea through the Atchafalaya, leaving New Orleans an interior town, as the Yellow River of China did several centuries ago when during a great flood it made an outlet to the sea 500 miles from its former mouth. There was and perhaps still is real danger of the Mississippi doing likewise. It was checked years ago by placing in the river several sills, composed of willow mattresses, stretching across the Atchafalaya at its head, thereby checking the flow of water from the Mississippi and preventing a great volume from going out.

It is a wonderful engineering problem, worrying us all the time. We never know what is going to happen to the river.

So that with all these things in view, Mr. President and Senators, the people of the valley, again looking to the future, decided to ask Congress to have the engineers make comprehensive surveys for another outlet, if one be possible, from the vicinity of the city of New Orleans to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico.

That is what is contemplated by my amendment. I have not the slightest objection to the change which the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] seeks to make in it. As a matter of fact, it would be more comprehensive with his amendment. What the people of the valley wish is to arm the engineers with the authority to make a comprehensive investigation on both sides of the river in the vicinity of New Orleans, so that if it be feasible to start out on the west bank and go to the Gulf via Barataria Bayou or from the Lake Pontchartrain end of the Industrial Canal, as indicated in my amendment, they can do so. All facts can be secured and reported to Congress.

The Senator from Utah is mistaken, however, in suggesting that it ever entered my mind or the minds of the people of New Orleans to have Congress purchase or pay for the Industrial Canal. We are spending $20,000,000 of our own money to improve the interior harbor of the city of New Orleans and make of the canal a splendid basin where ships can anchor alongside great manufactories and commercial houses—something that will furnish us vast additional harbor facilities—purely a local commercial proposition but one of the greatest magnitude and importance. The only reason for referring to the canal in my amendment was to let the engineers know that, if it be feasible, Congress would like for them to see if an outlet to deep water in the Gulf may not be secured from the Lake Ponchartrain end of the canal; and of course I expected every other practical outlet to be examined and reported upon.

I make this explanation simply that the Senate may understand what the Commerce Committee had in mind in adopting my amendment. I wish it distinctly understood that I am not opposing the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah; I consent to it, but want the Senate to know that if it should remain as it was reported the people of that section have no idea, certainly not at this time—I do not know what they may wish to do in the future, but certainly no idea at this time—of asking any appropriation for the purchase of the canal.

They would be very happy if the engineers could find an additional outlet to the sea from the great seaport of New Orleans. It would please them immensely if an outlet to the sea could be found where there is not a constant volume of sand pouring in and filling up again and again any channel that is dug, and that is what happens to-day. We want a sure and safe outlet, if possible, for our marvelous commerce, but we have not the faintest idea of abandoning the present project. The business of New Orleans is too important to the Republic and the world to be jeopardized by any contingency, and we must be foresighted enough to guard against all possibilities.

Since we started work on the southwest pass of the Mississippi River the 35-foot project for Boston Harbor was adopted and carried to completion, and the 35-foot project for Baltimore was adopted and completed. I am not complaining that Congress has not made liberal appropriations for the mouth of the Mississippi, but merely state a fact in saying that the money which has been appropriated has not yet secured the desired results, and we do not know that those results can be secured by present methods. I say it is wise to have another outlet if it be possible to secure one within reasonable cost, and that is all my amendment provides.

I am entirely willing to agree to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Before my colleague proceeds, I would like to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be glad if I can answer the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. I am not familiar with the subject which has been discussed, neither do I understand the relation of the Industrial Canal of New Orleans, which is referred to in the amendment, to the contemplated plan of improvement or development suggested by the Senator. I would like to ask the Senator what is the relation of the Industrial Canal to his proposed permanent channel of a depth not exceeding 35 feet, and further, if there is a possibility of the utilization of the Industrial Canal, why has not the State utilized and improved it so as to afford another outlet, instead of limiting the outlet for commercial purposes to one channel, which I understand the Senator to say now exists?

Mr. RANSDELL. In answer to the Senator I should like to point to him on the map which he has here the site of the Industrial Canal. It begins on the Mississippi River in the limits of the city of New Orleans and runs about 6 miles across the city and through its outskirts to Lake Pontchartrain. It is a big canal, constructed by the city under the engineering auspices of Gen. George W. Goethals, who is, I believe, considered the best canal expert on earth. Connecting it with the river is a very large lock and dam, so that boats and ships coming out of the river cross from the river into the canal and then into the waters of Lake Pontchartrain. So much for that part of the answer.

The proposition now is to secure, if possible, an outlet to the Gulf from the vicinity of New Orleans, either through that canal, which, if the Senator will follow the pencil, he will see would lead through Lake Pontchartrain and possibly down through Lake Borgne, or what we know as the Rigolets, over to Mississippi Sound, and then into the Gulf of Mexico, and on to the east by a very much shorter route than to follow down the Mississippi River to its mouth. It would be a very great saving in distance. The waters through Lake Pontchartrain, Lake Borgne, and the upper part of Mississippi Sound are very shallow. I am not at all sure that we can get a feasible 35-foot channel through there.

The Senator will notice that my amendment provides for securing the most practicable route for a permanent channel of a depth not exceeding 35 feet from the Mississippi River, La., out to the Gulf of Mexico. I do not say where it shall start. I simply say:

And in investigating this matter, consideration shall be given to the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal.

If the engineers should find that the Industrial Canal is the best and most feasible route from the Mississippi to the Gulf, there surely could be no objection to its being used. I will show the Senator where it is possible that another canal might be constructed. It is on the west bank of the river down from Lake Salvador and Barrataria Bayou and Barrataria Bay past Grand Isle at a point designated on the map here [indicating]. That would be a very much shorter distance from the Gulf than by way of the Mississippi proper; but when you reached the Gulf you would be considerably west of the mouth of the Mississippi. You would then be obliged to go south for some distance and go around the neck of land formed by this constant building of a new continent, which I have described, and then on to the eastward. It is one or the other of these routes which we contemplate.

Now, in further answer to the Senator's question I will say that the State of Louisiana, as one of our American Commonwealths, surely is not especially concerned with this outlet to the sea for the entire Mississippi Valley. It is concerned with its own industrial enterprises. It has built this canal at a cost of between $18,000,000 and $20,000,000 in order to increase its harbor facilities, but it is not asking one cent from the Federal Government. If a better route can be found to the Gulf, it wants the better route. I think I have answered the question.

Mr. KING. Fully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Louisiana is willing to accept the amendment which I have offered, perhaps it would be useless to take any time in discussing the question further, but I shall do so just for a moment or two by way of explanation.

I have failed to learn of a single canal in the United States a survey of which has been ordered by Congress for which in the end an appropriation for its purchase was not made. I have a number of times noticed in connection with items directing that a survey should be made of a canal owned by individuals or by corporations that at the time the survey was authorized those who were instrumental in having the provision for the survey inserted in the river and harbor bill have assured us beyond the shadow of a doubt that it carried no appropriation nor none would be asked, unless it should prove to be of great importance to the commerce of the United States, and yet there have been a number of unprofitable propositions put over on the Government as the result of such legislation. So I am always suspicious when an item for the survey of a particular canal is asked for.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I was merely going to ask the Senator from Utah if he would mind naming some of those canals?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait until I reach that point I shall do so.

Mr. RANSDELL. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I have thought that if we were going to have a survey "with a view to securing an outlet into deep water in the Gulf of Mexico by the most practicable route for a permanent channel of a depth not exceeding 35 feet"—and that is as far as the provision ought to go—then the engineers would make a survey of the whole situation.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will assure the Senator from Utah that was the intention I had.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think very much of an engineer who would make a survey and not consider the Industrial Canal at New Orleans. It may be that that would be the cheapest route; it may be it is the only feasible route; or the engineers may be able to find a half dozen better routes; but why by legislation direct the engineers to consider the question of utilizing the Industrial Canal at New Orleans?

I take it, Mr. President, the effect of such a provision would be that the engineer assigned to make the survey would take it for granted that Congress was interested in his making a favorable report upon that canal because it is specifically mentioned. I take it for granted that what the Senator from Louisiana says is true, that the people of New Orleans will be perfectly satisfied with a survey; and if there were commerce enough to justify a 35-foot canal between the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico, for one I would support not only the survey but an appropriation for its purchase. I am in favor not only of developing and maintaining harbors, but also the carrying out of projects upon rivers wherever the commerce to be benefited will justify the outlay.

So far as the Mississippi River is concerned, I think that unless some plan of improvement can be devised by engineers other than those known to-day it would be cheaper for the United States to build a double-track railroad on both sides of the Mississippi River, from St. Louis to New Orleans, maintain such roads, and haul the freight for a tenth of what it costs to-day than for the Government to put that river into condition whereby a profitable commerce can be developed upon it. From the standpoint of an investment, if it is finally decided that the Government of the United States is to improve the Mississippi River to that end, and maintain it, as no doubt it will do if the project is undertaken, I think the best thing in the world for us to consider now is which is the cheaper thing to do—build railroads, maintain them, and carry the freight at a nominal figure, or go to the extent of spending the millions and tens of millions and, no doubt, the hundreds of millions of dollars which will be necessary in order to put the Mississippi River in condition whereby the great vessels of the country can go up and down it and carry the commerce of the country as I should like to see it carried.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. Suppose the suggestion of the Senator were adopted and we were to build a great double-track railway on each bank of the Mississippi River, making, I presume, four tracks in all, from the northern portion of the United States to the southern portion. Where would the Senator have the southern terminus of those railroads? How would he get the commerce from the southern terminus into ships?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that that can be done very easily. I think there is plenty of room for the building of any kind of terminals that are necessary for the transfer of commerce.

Mr. RANSDELL. Would New Orleans suit the Senator as the southern terminus?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care where it would be located; I would want it located at the best possible place for the commerce of the South.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that there are six or eight railroads already running into New Orleans as their southern terminus, and they carry an immense commerce down there. We are not now considering any question except how to get that commerce from the terminus to the ocean. That is the point, and that is the only purpose of the proposed survey, namely, to get to deep water.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that; I understand the effect of the proposition now pending before the Senate; but I was speaking upon the broader question of river and harbor improvements.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will meet the Senator on that point when we come to it; but I was trying to confine myself to the particular question under consideration at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I am sorry that I have intruded upon the time of the Senate or of the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator has not intruded.

Mr. SMOOT. If that was all I had in view, I would have accepted the Senator's proposition and simply allowed the amendment to have been agreed to and let it pass. I expect to speak upon the bill at some length before it is finally passed, and I was just thinking aloud, as it were——

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not want to interrupt the Senator at all.

Mr. SMOOT. As to what it would cost the Government of the United States if the Government should undertake to do what the Senator would like it to do.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not asking that it do anything now except to give us this survey.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not now. I am aware of that; but there is not a Senator here and there is no one else in the United States who does not know that the Senator from Louisiana would not destroy quite the credit of the United States; but I want to say that he would go a long way to stretch the credit of the United States by appropriations to be spent upon the Mississippi River. Of course, the Senator is interested in that subject, greatly so, and perhaps rightly so, but it becomes the duty of every Senator, in my opinion, first to consider the amount of the appropriation to be made and then what is to come by way of return from the expenditure of the money. I am not now going into that question any further. As I have said to the Senator, I was merely thinking aloud.

I have traveled on the Mississippi River and I have watched the development of that river and tried to arrive at some conclusion in my own mind as to what the duty of the Government of the United States was toward making that mighty highway a great avenue of commerce. I am rather in sympathy with the expenditure of money if such a result can be accomplished, but so far I have not seen any result from the improvements made upon the Mississippi notwithstanding the amount of money we have spent. If the Senator from Louisiana or any engineer in the United States can arrive at some solution of that great problem and can demonstrate beyond a question of doubt that the ultimate result will be success I shall be for that proposition; but in our river and harbor bills, Mr. President, we appropriate a little money this year, a little money next year, and we pull out a few snags in this creek and a few roots and trees in another one, and by the time the subsequent river and harbor appropriation bill is under consideration it becomes necessary to make the same appropriations over again, and no practical result comes from the expenditure of the money.

I am going to undertake at this time to say that this whole policy is going to be changed at some time or other. So far as I am concerned, whenever there is a project undertaken by the Government of the United States and it can be shown that it will develop the commerce of the country and be of advantage to the people, I want then the appropriations made for it and to have it completed as quickly as possible.

The everlasting dragging out of appropriations upon projects which the Government has made up its mind to complete is a wicked waste of public money, and I say that no business man on earth would follow the example set by the Government in this regard.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question on that point?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. RANSDELL. I agree with the Senator that we have pursued a very wickedly wasteful policy in regard to improving a great many of our rivers. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we started to improve the Ohio River in 1876, so as to get 6 feet of water, and in 1910 we changed the project so as to get 9 feet. We have carried it along in the most unbusinesslike way; but whose fault is it? It is the fault of men who, like the Senator from Utah, oppose every river and harbor bill; oppose it so strenuously that it is absolutely impossible to secure proper appropriations.

Now, I wish to ask the Senator this question: Will he join the Commerce Committee and Senators who favor the businesslike improvement in putting the Ohio River—I am referring now to one concrete proposition, to one great river, where there is an immense commerce—under a continuing contract, so that it can be finished within the next five years?

I wish to say to the Senator that if the project is carried forward, as it has been carried forward in the past and as it is being carried forward now, it will not be finished within the next 10 or 15 years. Now, will the Senator join us in putting it on a continuing contract basis and finishing it just as we completed the Panama Canal?

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator I wish to say I do not want to appropriate another dollar of money for any kind of a project that will cost for the carrying of commerce over it an amount per ton or per hundred pounds that never can be justified. The Senator speaks of the Ohio River. I called the attention of the Senate once before to the estimated cost to the Government for furnishing waterways to float the actual commerce on a few of the projects mentioned in the bill which was pending at the time I made these remarks. Among them is the Ohio River, on which the cost is a little over $5 a ton, excluding soft coal, when you take into consideration the interest upon the money and the amount of money expended.

On the upper Mississippi River the cost was $12 a ton.
On the lower Mississippi, $35 a ton.
On the Arkansas, $20 a ton.
On the Hennepin, $36.75 a ton.
On the Missouri, a little over $40 a ton.
Muscle Shoals, $41 a ton.
Aransas Pass Canal, $80 a ton.
The Brazos, $80 a ton.
The Red River, $100 a ton.
The proposed Muscle Shoals project, $100 a ton.
The Big Sandy, Ky., $350 a ton.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how many of those rivers were finished, how many of them were in condition to carry commerce? The Ohio every summer, as the Senator knows, shallows down to not over 2 or 3 feet. You can wade it at the city of Cincinnati. We ought to have finished it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the wicked thing about the whole proposition. You can wade these streams a part of the year, and part of the year they are dry, and we are trying to make rivers of creeks and call them navigable streams.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator would not call the Ohio River a creek, I hope.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say that the Ohio is of that description. We all know that it is not, but I am calling attention to the facts as they exist to-day; and I will say further to the Senate of the United States that if that can be avoided by making appropriations to complete the river, and if it can be demonstrated that it will be to the interest of the commerce of the United States I would want to appropriate money for it, and do it as quickly as possible.

Mr. RANSDELL. A great engineering commission, composed of five of the ablest men in this country, investigated the Ohio River project, looked into the question of its cost, and said that it could be improved at a cost of about $63,000,000, and that when improved it would carry an immense commerce at a rate a very little higher than that at which the commerce on the Great Lakes is carried, which is about one-tenth the average railroad freight rate. It could be carried on the Ohio River in just the same way.

The Ohio River is in the center of the greatest commerce-producing section in this country. There is nothing comparable to the Pittsburgh section and the section 50 miles around there, and much of that commerce would go to the sea in boats if we had a completed channel. Of course, it can not go in boats now any more than a railroad with a gap of 50 or 100 miles could carry commerce.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am perfectly aware that this Ohio River project is not a success to-day. There are few projects that the Government of the United States has started of late years that will be.

I do not know that I ought to take any more of the time of the Senate to-night. If my amendment is agreed to, as I think it will be, I have no objection to the amended amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say that I have accepted the Senator's amendment, as far as that goes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think myself that the authorization for this survey has more merit in it than a good many other surveys in this bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am glad the Senator feels that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Does the chairman of the committee propose to go on with this bill this evening?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are just one or two other amendments of the committee which I think will only take a minute or two, and there are one or two Senators who have amendments that they would like to offer that I think will take but very little time. I should like to dispose of those to-night. I will say to the Senator that I do not expect to have the amendment relating to the amount passed on to-night.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am unwilling that this bill shall be considered in the absence of the Senate. We have had two very interesting speeches here this afternoon—very illuminating to those who heard the speeches. They were not illuminating to the rest of the Senate, of course; and there are now by actual count in the Senate Chamber 9 Senators, or, counting the Presiding Officer, 10.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I made the inquiry because I do not want anything further done to-night unless we have a quorum.

I thank the Senator from Georgia for yielding to me.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator will not object to the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to get through with the committee amendments first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the committee amendments are to be first considered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the next committee amendment is known as section 6, on page 16, and I am going to withdraw that amendment for the reason that I think the proposition is fully covered by existing law. It is the purpose of that amendment to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe areas within which oil, acid, and so forth, can not be deposited. Section 13 of the river and harbor act of 1899 reads as follows:

> That it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited, either from or out of any ship, barge, or other floating craft of any kind, or from the shore, wharf, manufacturing establishment, or mill of any kind, any refuse matter of any kind or description whatever other than that flowing from streets and sewers and passing therefrom in a liquid state into any navigable water of the United States or into any tributary of any navigable water from which the same shall float or be washed into such navigable water.

It seems to me that that language is just about as broad as language can be toward preventing the deposit of refuse matter, oil, and so forth, from ships in navigable waters; and I think that enables them, so far as it can be enforced, to protect the waters of a harbor against the deposit of oils, and so forth, from ships.

That is all of that provision of the section. There is a semicolon there, and then it begins as follows:

> And it shall not be lawful to deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be deposited, material of any kind in any place on the bank of any navigable water or on the bank of any tributary of any navigable water where the same shall be liable to be washed into such navigable water either by ordinary or high tides or by storms or floods or otherwise whereby navigation shall or may be impeded or obstructed.

The department informs me that their officers construe the last clause there——

> Whereby navigation shall or may be impeded or obstructed—

To affect both parts of that act. I do not think there is any justification at all for any such construction as that. The language of the act to the first semicolon is clear and definite and certain, and beginning after the semicolon it is an entirely new prohibition, and I think the last clause refers only to the last part of the section.

For that reason, therefore—namely, that I think the subject matter is fully covered, even much more broadly covered than by the language of the section that is proposed by the department—I ask that that amendment may be rejected. I will say that they advise me that no court has passed upon the proposition or construed it, but it is simply construed by some of the officers of the department, so I ask that that amendment may be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, Mr. President, in regard to section 10 of the bill, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to make a point of order, I shall ask that that may go over and be disposed of to-morrow with the other amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I shall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That leaves three committee amendments undisposed of. There are two or three Senators here who have some amendments they would like to propose, and on which I think there will be no discussion. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the rule that we adopted requiring committee amendments to be disposed of first be vacated just for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right, Mr. President; but before granting consent I want to ask the Senator if he has examined the amendments that are going to be presented, and if he is willing to accept them?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is an amendment that was adopted once before in the Senate. I can not say that I am willing to accept it. I am willing to have the Senate pass upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not want the Senate to pass upon it with the number of Senators that are here to-night, and I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not seen the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. I do not know what it is.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator has forgotten it. I submitted it to the Senator from Utah. I should like to have it read, and I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Probably, when I hear it read, I will remember it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

> Brunswick Harbor, Ga.: The Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to the next session of Congress whether or not the project adopted by the act of March 2, 1919, provides sufficient depths to enable the deepest-draft ships of all regular lines using this port to reach their docks or the sea, when fully laden, without being delayed by the necessity of awaiting high water or using two tides to enter or leave the harbor; and, if adequate depths are not provided by the existing project, whether sufficient depths would be provided by the larger of the two projects reported by the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 393, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I will state that additional steamship lines have been established at Brunswick in the past few years, and this is simply to have the engineers ascertain which of the two projects reported on by the Army Engineers is necessary to enable the vessels, when heavily laden, to reach the docks.

Brunswick Harbor is conceded by all familiar with it to be one of the best on the Atlantic coast. Brunswick has more than doubled in its inhabitants in the past four years, and is one of the thriving cities of Georgia, with a brilliant future.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment does not commit Congress to any proposition, but simply furnishes us information?

Mr. HARRIS. That is all there is to it.

Mr. SMOOT. With a view of committing Congress later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 21, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 20, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father Soul, life giving, life sustaining Potentate, direct our thoughts, control our ways, that we may be willing instruments in Thy hands for the furtherance of good.

We thank Thee that out of the terrible war through which we have just passed Thou hast inspired us to greater life and nobler activities, especially in economy and brotherly love.

Through common sense and reason we are defeating greed and profiteering by living the simple life, and we pray that out of the unrest and unreasonable demands a wholesome lesson may come to all. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RAILROAD DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I desire to see if we can agree on a time for general debate and a division of that time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose, because of the amount carried in the bill and the questions that may come up in explanation of the bill, it will take a half or three-quarters of an hour, and I have requests for an equal amount of time. It seems to me that we would require an hour and a half on this side.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We can get along on this side with less time if the gentleman cares to do so. Any time less than that will be agreeable to us.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman agree to an hour and a half on this side and one hour on that side?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; if the gentleman is going to take an hour and a half, we will take an hour and a half on this side, but we are willing to take one hour on each side. If the gentleman can not do that, we will agree to an hour and a half on a side.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the other half by myself.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is it the intention of the chairman to pass this bill to-day?

Mr. GOOD. I would like to pass it to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman propose to confine the general debate to the bill?

Mr. GOOD. No; I think the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] wants to make a speech on some historical matter. But as I understand there is to be no political discussion on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The doorkeepers will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 293, nays 4, answered "present" 1, not voting 129, as follows:

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. RODENBERG. Then I withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. RODENBERG was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13677, the railroad deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. I desire to speak briefly but frankly upon the subject of paying a cash bonus to the soldiers of the late war. An erroneous impression prevails throughout the country, and even upon the floor of this House, with regard to the appropriations that have been made during this Congress for the soldiers of that war.

One frequently hears that we are doing little or nothing for the soldiers of this war. Nothing could be further from the actual facts. What I shall say upon this subject should not be construed as a lack of appreciation upon my part of the splendid and heroic service performed by the more than 2,000,000 American soldiers whom we sent to the other side to fight our battles; nor do I want anything that I shall say construed as a lack of appreciation of the heroic sacrifice made by all of the 4,800,000 men who were enlisted in the Army and Navy during that war. America can never pay its debt of gratitude to the brave boys who performed that heroic service. [Applause.] Their place in history is secure. We can not add to or detract from the glory of their achievements. What I desire to call to the attention of the House to-day is the fact that at present we are confronted with a condition and not a theory. On the 30th day of last June there was a deficit in the Treasury of the United States of about $3,634,000,000. That deficit was evidenced by short-time United States Treasury certificates. Economical as we have tried to be, without appropriations for bonuses to the soldiers, there will be a deficit in the Treasury on the 30th of June next of approximately $4,000,000,000. I am not unmindful of the demand for bonus legislation for our soldiers. America has always been mindful of the splendid service of her soldiers. She has taken better care of her soldiers than any other country in all the world. She has paid them as high, if not higher, pay when they were in the service than any of the countries of Europe, and with one exception, that of Australia, higher pay than any other country in all the world has paid its soldiers, and I am glad to have played a part in securing the increase in their pay.

During the Civil War there were engaged on the Union side a total of 2,800,000 men.

The second year after the close of that war, a period corresponding to the time we now occupy with regard to the close of this war, we paid out for all purposes in pensions and hospital treatment and in administration $21,000,000 for the soldiers of that war. In the twenty-fourth year after that war was over we paid out $92,000,000 during the year in pensions, hospital treatment, and the administration of soldier legislation. Last year, the first time we had reached the mark of more than $200,000,000, our total appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1919, for the soldiers and sailors exclusive of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, including administration, was $223,000,000. That is the history of the magnificent way in which America has taken care of her soldiers and sailors. With the same sympathies and generous treatment will she care for the soldiers of the war with Germany.

What have we done with respect to the soldiers of the late war?

Is it true that we are unmindful of the sacrifices of the brave men who fought the war in 1917? Is it true that we have done nothing for them? No; very far from it. We carry in this bill $7,666,000 for hospital treatment for these soldiers for the remaining three months of this year. We will have paid out by the 30th of June, 1920, for the soldiers of this war, for the 12 months' period, $263,968,963. That excludes all payments for the soldiers of the Spanish-American War, all payments for soldiers of the Civil War, and is confined to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1917 alone. That is $40,000,000 more than the high-water mark reached more than 50 years after the close of the Civil War in the payment of pensions and hospital treatment of the soldiers and sailors of that war. But that is not all. We have placed on the statute books of the United States laws that will call for more money as the years go by. What are the estimates of the various departments for the relief of the soldiers of the war of 1917 for the next year? I shall put into the RECORD the details of the expenditures so that he who runs may read the magnificent treatment provided in legislation already enacted for the soldiers of this war.

The Government will expend for the year ending June 30, 1920, on account of the soldiers and sailors of the recent war for compensation for death and disability, hospital treatment, appliances, care of the insane, and miscellaneous items, $135,000,000; for the allowances to the families of men in the military and naval services, $48,000,000; for administrative expenses of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, $15,852,806; for vocational training and rehabilitation of soldiers and sailors by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, $38,000,000; for the construction of hospital buildings for the Public Health Service, $9,950,000; and for the care of patients in hospitals, $17,166,187, making a total of all items of $263,968,993. The estimated or requested expenditures for the next fiscal year, which will end June 30, 1921, are as follows: For compensation for death and disability, hospital treatment, appliances, care of the insane, and miscellaneous items, $197,865,600; for administrative expenses of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, $10,324,400; for regional offices and for expenses of advertising for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance under legislation pending in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, $1,250,000; for vocational training and rehabilitation of soldiers and sailors by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, $125,000,000; for the care and maintenance of patients in hospitals of the Public Health Service, $40,000,000; and for the construction of additional hospitals and hospital facilities under a request for legislation pending in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, $84,000,000, making a total of all items for the next year of $458,440,000.

The details of the payments for this fiscal year and the estimates of expenditures for the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1917 next year are as follows:

	Fiscal year 1920. Appropriations in all acts and pending deficiencies.	Fiscal year 1921. Appropriations in pending bills or estimates of appropriations or authorizations for appropriations.
Bureau of War Risk Insurance:
Compensation for death and disability, hospital care, appliances, etc.	$135,000,000	$197,865,600
Military and naval family allowances	48,000,000
Regional offices, advertising (Wason bill)		[1] 1,250,000
Administrative expenses of the bureau	15,852,806	10,324,400
Federal Board for Vocational Education, vocational training	38,000,000	125,000,000
Public Health Service:
Hospital construction	9,950,000	[1] 84,000,000
Care and maintenance of patients in hospitals	17,166,187	40,000,000
Total	263,968,993	458,440,000

[1] Requests for legislation pending, respectively, in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

My friends, these figures speak for themselves. Is it a record for which we need to apologize? You and I are receiving letters from the people we represent on the subject of granting a bonus. Personally I have received one or two letters only in favor of a bonus, but many against it. Most of the demands I receive are for relief from other burdens. Men and women everywhere are asking that the taxes be reduced. They are asking that the appropriations be reduced. They recognize that a reduction in appropriations must precede a reduction in taxation, that a reduction in taxation must precede a reduction in the cost of living. The Committee on Appropriations during the past week has been working night, day, and Sundays trying to pare down a bill so that it will meet with the sentiment of the people you represent. The estimate for sundry civil expenses, aggregating over a billion and thirty-six million dollars, is being pared so that it will hurt, and that committee hopes to report that bill cutting out between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000 of estimates of appropriations. [Applause.] You applauded; but, gentlemen, I want to say it is folly to pare appropriations to the bone because we do not have the money and then turn around and make appropriations of $1,000,000,000 or $2,000,000,000 not estimated for. I fail to see constructive economy in such a course.

I have a few letters here from ex-service men with regard to what the bonus legislation will mean. These boys are splendid fellows, for no country had a better soldiery than the United States in the war. In fact, we think no country had soldiers that compared with the soldiers of the United States in that war. [Applause.] Now, what is the argument in favor of the bonus? We say that during the war men remained at home and received good salaries while these boys went to war and made great sacrifices. That is true. Some of those who remained behind were made millionaires; others have the stamp upon them of profiteers; and now, to equalize that condition, it is proposed that we should take out of an empty Treasury money to pay a bonus to those who went to war. My friends, the greatest badge that the American soldier will ever wear will be the badge of sacrifice, and not the badge of a bonus. [Applause.] I am not sure but we do him an injustice even if we had the money to place him along with the men who received unjust and unfair profits out of war contracts, so far as financial consideration is concerned. I would send the profiteer to jail; I would place the other on a pinnacle of glory because of his wonderful sacrifice and service from which no Congress now or in the future could ever remove him. [Applause.]

About 500,000 colored men entered the war, and they made good soldiers. And you gentlemen representing the Southern States, from which they largely went, are complaining and your constituents are complaining now because of a lack of men in your cotton fields and your factories. You are complaining now because of a lack of employment. You are complaining now because men are not taking up the regular avocations of life and there is an underproduction. I ask you in all seriousness what effect the payment of such a bonus will have on your cotton and other production? What will you say when you turn over the $500 to every one of these soldiers who served in that war and witness the withdrawal of this class of labor, so sorely needed, from active participation in the productive walks of life? Are we to act blindly now and after the damage is done consider the results of ill-advised legislation? Let us seriously consider first and act afterwards. We must consider that a great many of the boys who engaged in that war were mere boys from the fields and factories, from the schools and the colleges. They had not yet formed habits of thrift and industry. They had not yet learned in the stern school of experience that work is the only true manhood, the only true nobility. Turn over to young boys who have not yet established these well-grounded principles of life and its activities the sum of $500 and a great many of them will not work until that money is expended. Would their parents turn over such a sum to them? Should we take from the pockets of an overtaxed people one or two billion dollars and distribute it in many cases among young, inexperienced boys whose parents would not sanction such an act? Our factories demand more men every day. Will the bonus aid in stimulating production? No. We will have a lot of boys who will not work until the bonus is gone, not because they are bad boys but because their habits of life have not yet been fixed and firmly established. And when the bonus is spent some of these boys will be worse off than before. Here is a letter that I received from the county chairman of the American Legion in a county in my district. He says:

> The bulk of a cash bonus would immediately go back into circulation by its investment in automobiles, clothes, jewelry, and other luxuries, and a portion of this bulk not thus invested would very soon find its way back into circulation due to the principal being used as funds to provide a long vacation.
> When the scarcity of labor is so acute and that of competent and efficient help is more so, it seems that we should not encourage further the utter lack of initiative and desire to better conditions for themselves that is so prevalent to-day by paying this class a compensation which will only make them the more independent.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. In referring to the 500,000 colored troops the gentleman meant that that number went from both the northern and southern sections of the country——

Mr. GOOD. I meant all told.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. And not from the South alone, but the whole country.

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is that the total of the colored troops was 500,000.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I know we did not send that many from the South.

Mr. GOOD. Now, the gentleman has brought up another question. A few months ago we had trouble in America by race riots. I want to ask the gentleman, and I will ask him to answer it in his own time——

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman is mistaken, I did not intend——

Mr. GOOD. I want to say we have in cities like Washington, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, and these large centers a mixed population. Are you not afraid when you do what is contemplated that you will simply add to the problem of race disturbances and riots in these large centers? [Applause.] We must talk frankly upon this question, because what is under consideration is fraught with such terrible consequences that we must realize now what the probable result of our act may be. The things I am saying now are things I do not like to say, but they are things that you and I have got to think about and talk about if we would act as we should act. We have got to stand up and be counted now when there is so much unrest and when America is looking to the Congress of the United States to steady the ship. We must be sure that our action is wise and constructive and not destructive. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I want to say that I am in hearty accord with what the gentleman is saying, and I did not rise a moment ago to criticize at all.

Mr. GOOD. I am sure the gentleman is. Now, I have another letter from the adjutant of the American Legion in another county in my district, in which he states:

> Some time ago the local legion post, of which I am at present adjutant, took up the question of a bonus, or rather adjusted compensation, and it was decided at that time that it was not practicable for the Federal Government to attempt to pass a bonus bill and that whatever adjusted compensation might be asked should come from the State rather than the Federal Government.
> In the past few days I have taken the matter up with a number of the members of the local legion and others who were in the World War, and you will undoubtedly hear from them in the near future.
> There is no question in my mind but what it would be a foolish move to make such a drain on the Treasury as would be necessary to successfully carry out the bonus bill.

I am not permitted to give the names of the writers of these letters, but if any Member wishes to see these letters they are open to him. They are from splendid, patriotic boys, who might not object to the publicity, and these letters indicate how some of the ex-service men are thinking.

Now, another thing. Prices are high, they are burdensome; people are complaining because of high prices. The Committee on Appropriations, when estimates were presented to them for an investigation that would bring down prices, while believing that little could be done in that direction by investigation, in practically all cases, where any plan was offered that even intimated that a decrease in the price of necessaries might result, reported out the appropriations. Especially is this so with regard to the office of the Attorney General. The committee wanted to uphold his hands in trying to bring down the high prices of the necessaries of life, and especially when those prices had been increased by profiteers.

There is going over the country now a propaganda for people to quit buying, except the things that are actually necessary. I believe that policy ought to be followed and practiced by everybody. It appeals to our good judgment. [Applause.] We ought to economize. We ought not to buy a thing that is not absolutely necessary at these high prices. We ought to try to bring about a condition so that the 105,000,000 of men, women, and children who did not go to the World War, as well as the 4,800,000 who were called, can live under a more normal condition and enjoy some of the benefits of life. If you appropriate $1,000,000,000 or $2,000,000,000, how are you going to raise it? Some one says by consumption tax, but there is objection to that on the part of some one, and that person says, "Oh, no; let us not lay the tax on the poor; let us put a tax on corporations and on the rich." Unless I have misjudged the temper and have misunderstood the statements of the men who came before the Committee on Appropriations asking for appropriations to reduce the high cost of living, their contention without exception was that the taxes levied to carry on the war and pay the obligations of the war, taxes that were laid largely on the corporations and men of large incomes, are, in the main, passed on to the ultimate consumer. That is the claim of the Federal Trade Commission and other executive departments. You say that you do not want to put a tax on consumption, because that will be paid by all, but the departments that have investigated it say that it does not make any difference where you put it, in the main it is paid by the man who eats food and wears clothes. [Applause.] Do you really want to bring down the high cost of living? If we do, we will say to the ex-service men, who have performed a wonderful service, that their bravery and devotion and self-sacrifice will ever be held in grateful remembrance by all our people, that that service is above price, and that to commercialize it will degrade. To raise such huge sums now will cause hardship out of all proportion to the benefits that will be derived, and will do more to decrease production than any legislation we can possibly pass. By the same determination and sacrifice by which the American soldier was a contributing factor in the winning of the war can he now assist in placing the standard of the American soldier a little higher than it was ever placed before. [Applause.]

The danger from foes from without has passed. Is the danger from the spirit of unrest from within behind us? We are passing through a time when every man and every woman and child in America must sacrifice. We are face to face with an abnormal condition. If you and I vote one billion or two billion dollars, I do not care how you raise it, that money is going to be spent in the markets of the United States. By that expenditure and in that amount you are going to increase the cost of living to every man, woman, and child in the United States. [Applause.] And those of you who think you are catering to a demand of 4,800,000 men will, before you know it, face the wrath of 100,000,000 Americans who are compelled to pay higher prices because of your act. Because America will not stand for this. One thing that is creating unrest in America to-day, the one thing that is causing the spread of bolshevism and all sorts of kindred "isms," is the fact that the cost of living is too high. I want to see it reduced, and I seriously question the wisdom of the proposed action, for it can only result in decreasing production and increasing prices of the necessities of life.

I am going to do all that I can to try to bring down the cost of living, and I am going to say to the American soldier who was in this war, "I am willing by my vote to appropriate every dollar necessary to heal the sick, to give him the best hospital treatment available in the world, to take those who are wounded or who suffer from disease and bring healing to them, and place them in the vocational schools and make them useful citizens of the Republic. I am willing to appropriate the $20,000,000 or more asked for to bring back the bodies of those 80,000 of our brave boys who died and are buried on the other side, but let us leave to the action of the several States the question of providing a bonus for their soldiers. The States have sources of taxation we do not have. All the States would not act at once, and hence the evil resulting would not be so critical." [Applause.]

This has been in my mind for some time. I have felt I should say it. It seems to me that we must meet this proposition in a brave and fearless way, not in a partisan way, and I think when you meet it that way and by your determination shall have brought down the cost of living to 110,000,000 of Americans, you will find more contentment, you will find property more secure, and find human life better protected than will be possible by this large appropriation which is proposed.

As was said by Horace Greeley in his great work, "The American Conflict," of the soldiers of the Civil War, so let us all say of the soldiers of this war:

> Thus rapidly, as well as peacefully and joyously, were the mightiest hosts ever called to the field by a republic restored to the tranquil paths of industry and thrift, melting back by regiments into quiet citizenship, with nothing to distinguish them from others but the proud consciousness of having served and saved their country.

[Applause.]

I shall put in the RECORD a statement showing that this year we are appropriating $263,000,000 for these soldiers, and that next year, including $84,000,000 for building new hospitals, there is an estimate of $458,000,000 for the soldiers of this war without putting another line upon the statute books of our country.

Mr. Chairman, the bill also carries an appropriation of $300,000,000 for the railroads, to pay the balance of the losses due to the Federal control and operation of them. On the 1st day of January, 1918, by an act of Congress the systems of transportation were turned over to the President to operate during the war as a war emergency. In pursuance of that act the President took control and operated something like 300 railroads, having an aggregate mileage of 250,000 miles, with a property value ranging somewhere between $15,000,000,000 and $20,000,000,000, and employing in the aggregate almost 2,000,000 men. The President, under the Director General of the Railroads, continued to operate them for a period of 26 months. By virtue of the transportation act these roads were turned back to their owners on the 1st day of March. A great deal of inquiry has been made as to the net results of Federal control and operation of the railroads. The Director General states that at the present time there is a deficit or a loss due to the Federal control and operation of these roads of $900,000,000 and that it will be necessary to pay out during the year about $4,000,000 in administrative expenses in winding up the affairs, making the net loss as estimated by the Director General of Railroads $904,000,000 for 26 months of operation. Of course, that is not all the loss that the Government will sustain by reason of the operation of the railroads. When the railroads were taken over 26 months ago, we appropriated $500,000,000 as a revolving fund, and we have been paying interest on that amount ever since. Last June we appropriated $750,000,000 for railroad operations, and we have been paying interest on that ever since. And then the transportation act carried $200,000,000 to pay on this loss, and an additional sum of $300,000,000 that would be used in making loans to the railroads in the future when certified by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

That $300,000,000 also includes, according to the terms of the transportation act, a provision which requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury all final judgments growing out of Federal control and operation of the railroads. Mr. Sherley and Mr. Hines roughly estimated that those judgments would probably amount to $30,000,000 or $40,000,000.

It is also to be remembered that with this appropriation the Government of the United States will hold a great many railroad securities. It will hold about $15,000,000, or a little less, of investment in inland waterways, and it will hold approximately $950,000,000 of an investment in railroad securities alone. Some of these securities—many of them—could not be sold now. To throw on the market railroad securities totaling over $900,000,000 would cause such a panic in the United States that stocks would hardly be worth anything. But if the sales thereof were spread over a year I venture to say that from these investments in railroads, if sold and converted into cash before the end of the year, the loss to the Government on such sales and conversion would not fall below $250,000,000. Of course, it is fortunate that we are not compelled to bring about such a disaster even to the security holdings of the United States or to the Government itself. It is proposed that some of these securities will be carried for a long period of time. For example, when the Director General took over the railroads he let contracts for a thousand freight cars, for a large number of locomotives, and other equipment, totaling around $400,000,000, and Congress has appropriated and is carrying in this bill the remainder to pay for that equipment.

That equipment was allocated to the several railroads of the United States, and the railroads have now accepted their allocation, but they have not the money with which to pay for this equipment. A railroad company as a usual thing never has the money to finance its growth in equipment, but usually issues securities known as equipment trusts. In this case the Director General of Railroads sold this equipment to the railroad companies and took their notes and a mortgage on the equipment, the notes falling due in 15 annual payments with interest at 6 per cent.

If you will turn to page 83 of the hearings you will find the basis upon which Mr. Sherley, as director of finance of the railroads, expects to make settlements. It is estimated that the railroads owe the Government of the United States, outside of these equipment securities, $765,000,000; that the Government owes the railroads on compensation approximately $490,000,000, which the Director General and the director of finance feel that they can apply as an offset to this large debt that the railroads owe to the United States, so that after applying the offset there will still be due to the Government of the United States from the various railroads in the United States in the aggregate approximately $270,000,000. That is in addition to the allocated equipment.

Now, during the war there were certain roads that were very weak. The New England roads especially were not strong financially. For a number of years prior to the outbreak of the war some of those roads had engaged in all kinds of financing. They had been engaged not only in railroading but in running electric light plants and gas plants and street cars, and everything of that kind. The result was that it was necessary to make large loans to roads like the New York, New Haven & Hartford and the Boston & Maine to prevent those roads from going into the hands of receivers.

I do not believe that anyone who has studied the situation carefully will ever criticize or be successful in maintaining a constructive criticism against the Railroad Administration in stabilizing the transportation system by keeping the railroads out of the hands of receivers. It is estimated by those who have made these large loans that eventually this money will come back in the main. They do say, however, that there will be losses on some of those investments; there will be losses on some of the equipment. What those losses will actually amount to no one will know for years and years to come. My own estimate is that if we were to settle with the railroads at the end of this fiscal year, giving them a whole year in which to pay their debts and obligations to the Government, the total loss to the Government would not fall far short of $1,400,000,000.

In saying that I am not criticizing in the least the taking over of the railroads; I am not criticizing in the main the management of the roads. I think the Government was fortunate in having had at the head of the Railroad Administration Mr. Walker D. Hines and, during the past nine months, our former colleague, Mr. Sherley, as head of the finance division. [Applause.] They and those who have been with them have had but one purpose, and that was to give the Government of the United States an efficient transportation service, and it was realized that some of this loss—a great deal of it, perhaps—is chargeable to the war.

There is one thing, however, in respect to which I have never quite brought myself in agreement with the Railroad Administration, and that is not only because of the condition we were in during the war but also because of the condition in which we found ourselves when we turned the roads back to their original owners. The revenue act levied a tax of 3 per cent upon freight bills, 5 per cent upon express bills, and 8 per cent upon passenger traffic.

The total tax was estimated during the present year at $234,000,000, which was intended to pay the ordinary expenses of the war.

Now, I have said that there were about 2,000,000 men engaged in operating the railroads. It is the statement of Mr. Hines that during the 26 months of Federal control there was an increase in wages—a great deal of it I think was necessary; some of it was unnecessary—an increase in wages since 1916 of 106 per cent. There was an increase in freight and passenger traffic of a little over 25 per cent. Now, it must have been evident to any man that to increase the wages of 2,000,000 men 106 per cent it would have been necessary, if this service was to pay for itself, to increase the freight and passenger traffic throughout the United States. It is the statement of Mr. Hines that if the rate of freight had been fixed in July, 1918, when the first general increase in wages was agreed to, it would take something over 14 per cent additional on all the freight in the United States. Now, my contention is—and I know that in arriving at his conclusion Mr. Hines was actuated by the same motive that I am actuated by—my contention is that the Director General, when he raised the wages, should have raised the price of the service which the railroads were performing, so that when the roads should be turned back into the hands of their original owners they would not be confronted with the condition that now confronts them, of high wages that they can not get away from and of a freight rate that they can not raise. The business thing to have done would have been to have left the bill as it passed the House, and Congress covering into the Treasury $254,000,000 a year to carry on the Government and the war, and then an increase of freight rates so that the freight and passenger rates and express rates would bring in enough money to pay all the transportation charges, including the amount paid to the carriers.

Now, take Federal control, and this touches briefly upon the question of Government ownership of railroads. There was a great deal of contention out in my part of the country by the small roads that were not taken over, because of the big increase in wages on the roads that were taken over as to just what effect it had upon the industry. What is the argument? Because the Shipping Board increased the wages of mechanics in the shipyards, because munition plants increased the wages of mechanics all over the country, that it was necessary to increase the wages in these large centers of men engaged in transportation. A blanket order was issued to satisfy those men, and I think that was necessary, perhaps, in a way. When you raise the pay of conductors or engineers in one locality you practically have to do the same in other localities. I wanted to find out, and I took four roads in my own State, two of them under Federal control and two under private control during the war. I want to put in the RECORD a statement as to the results of the increase of wages. For example, the small station attendant of a road in private ownership got $90 per month. On the roads under Federal control they were paid $120 a month. The motorman under private control got 50 cents an hour; under Government control they got 75 cents an hour. The superintendent of substations under private control got $165 a month, and under public control $530 a month.

It was increases in some localities like these, roads running right along together, where the superintendent of substations on one road under private control got $165 a month and lived next door to a man performing a like service on a road under Government control receiving $530 per month. If we are going to have in America in the future a system by which all of the transportation systems are to be owned and controlled by the Government, the thing that we are doing to-day—appropriating $300,000,000 more to cover the loss of 26 months of Federal control and Government operation—will be the thing that we will have to repeat year after year, and out of the taxes of the American people there will have to be paid yearly millions of dollars to pay such discriminatory wages as I have called attention to and other matters of that kind due to Government control and operation.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield at this point for an inquiry?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman be good enough to inform us from what sources the Railroad Administration secured the bonds of the United States, of the Liberty and Victory loans referred to in the second paragraph on page 2, and to what extent they hold those bonds?

Mr. GOOD. There is a table in the hearing showing the exact amount that the Railroad Administration holds of each issue. These bonds were acquired in this way: When the Liberty loans were floated, the director general, Mr. McAdoo, arranged with the railroad employees to purchase for them the full amount of the bonds which they would subscribe for, and to carry them. Unfortunately there was some agreement with regard to the Railroad Administration taking back such bonds as the employee was not able to pay for. Unfortunately also there were more bonds subscribed for by the Railroad Administration than the railroad employees purchased. Under the Victory loan, Mr. Sherley directed all of the regional directors to cut the subscription 10 per cent, believing that subscriptions would fall that amount. Now, his estimate as to the amount that would be taken was too large, and we have a large number of them. There are, I believe, something like $88,000,000 of Liberty bonds and Victory bonds that are owned by the Railroad Administration that were acquired in this way. The gentleman can well understand that in some cases it happened that where a person had purchased a bond with an agreement that if he could not pay for it he could turn it back to the Railroad Adminstration and get the par value for it, some men would throw their bonds back onto the Railroad Administration because of that understanding.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that at this time an employee of the Railroad Administration may turn back his bonds under that understanding and receive par?

Mr. GOOD. I think, if I remember the hearings correctly, that where a railroad employee had purchased his bond and paid for it and accepted delivery there is no agreement whereby he can turn it back; but if he has not paid for his bond and still owes the Railroad Administration for it, then he can turn it back if he can not pay for it, and get the money that he has already paid.

Now, the bill carries $120,000,000 less than the estimate, and that is made up in this way: We have directed that about $90,000,000 of these bonds held by the Railroad Administration shall be transferred to the War Finance Corporation, which is purely a governmental agency that has about $600,000,000 of assets, including in its assets about $130,000,000 of short-time Treasury certificates, and I think something over $70,000,000 of loans to the railroad companies. Now, it was the opinion of the committee that these Liberty and Victory bonds held by the Railroad Administration should be turned over to the War Finance Corporation, and that the War Finance Corporation should take them over at par, so as to permit the Railroad Administration to discharge its obligations.

Then the transportation act, as I have before stated, carries a provision that all final judgments and claims that are reduced to judgment against the Railroad Administration shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the $300,000,000 appropriation in that act for making loans, and it is estimated that at least $30,000,000 of that appropriation will be used for that purpose.

Therefore, inasmuch as the Director General had included in his item of $120,000,000 for lap-over expenses a sum to pay these claims, the committee felt that it would not be wise to appropriate for it in the transportation act and then appropriate for it in this act. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interrupt the course of the discussion, but I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it is now more than a year since by the fortune of politics the responsibility for legislation in this House and the organization of the House shifted to the Republican side. Without reflecting in any way upon the attainments of any member of the majority, I think the House will agree with me that during the past year no man on that side of the House has developed more than has the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. [Applause.] When responsibility came to him he showed that he had a clear conception of the duties of the chairman of that great committee, and he has won the respect of every Member of this House by his courageous and fearless efforts to protect the Treasury of the United States, regardless of the effect upon his own political fortunes.

In the presentation of this bill he demonstrated again his wonderful energy. I know that he participated in the consideration of the fortifications bill, the most technical of all bills submitted to the House, and at the same time he has been conducting hearings on the sundry civil bill, covering all activities of the Government from Alaska to Panama. While contributing daily to the framing of these two important bills, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has conducted hearings upon this deficiency bill, and that he has mastered the intricate details of this great railroad problem is conclusively demonstrated by his clear presentation of the reasons why it is now necessary for us to make the appropriation carried in the pending bill. [Applause.]

I differ with him only as to one paragraph of his report and as to some of his comments to-day upon the administration of the railroads during the period of Government control. In the report accompanying this bill the gentleman from Iowa states that the loss to the Government by Federal control will total $1,375,000,000. In arriving at this conclusion he states that if all securities of the railroads now held by the Government were thrown upon the market the Government would suffer a loss of $250,000,000. Of course, this is mere speculation. It is undoubtedly true that if the Government was so lacking in business judgment that it should now throw upon the market the securities of the railroads, amounting to $862,000,000, we would incur a loss of a considerable amount, and the Government that so recklessly threw upon the financial market this amount of railroad securities would not only cause a loss to that Government but it would seriously affect the financial market and cause serious loss to its citizens. No one has suggested, nor will any man suggest such action by the Government. The securities of the railroads now held by the Government will not be thrown upon the market at this time. Wisely, they will be held, and as conditions improve they will be realized upon, and while it is mere speculation, those most familiar with the character of the securities held by the Government see no reason why there should be any loss at all, and are confident in their belief that the loss to the Government, if any, will be negligible.

The report of the committee also charges against Government control of the railroads $25,000,000, which it is estimated it will take to carry out the provisions of the recent transportation act, providing for the payment to the short-line railroads of the country of such amounts as they claim they are entitled to because of Federal control, even though their lines were not operated by the Government. I do not believe that it is fair to charge up against the Government operation of railroads this amount which it is alleged was lost by railroads that were never under the control of the Government. That was a gratuity on the part of the Congress and can never justifiably be charged up as a loss incident to the Government's operation of the railroads.

The fact is that the chairman of the committee does only that which many who oppose Government operation of railroads do—that is, seek to make Government operation more unpopular by exaggerating the loss during Federal control. I am fundamentally opposed to the Government's operation of the railroads, but in order to justify my position I do not find it necessary to exaggerate the loss during Federal control or criticize the administration of the railroads while they were under the control of the Government.

Every Member of Congress was responsible for the taking over of the railroads. The Congress gave to the President the power to take over the railroads, and lest we forget, let me recall the conditions existing in December, 1917. The railroad employees were notoriously underpaid. They were demanding increased wages. A nation-wide strike was threatened, to take effect as of January 1. We had floated one bond issue, and the railroads of the country found themselves unable to borrow money to finance their operations. With the continued bond issues of the Government it was clear to every business man in this country that bankruptcy faced them, when the bankruptcy of the railroads meant that we could no longer successfully prosecute the war. The people of this country from one end to the other approved the action of the President in taking over the roads as of January 1, 1918.

Now, what has taken place since then? There are but two questions: First, has the Government economically and wisely administered the railroads, and, second, should the Government have increased the rates as contended by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]?

As to the management of the railroads it became popular to criticize the efficiency of the railroads during the first year of the operation by the Government. The fact is that in 1918 the railroads of the country faced conditions never before faced by the transportation systems in this country. The war made a draft on every industry taking their skilled employees, and they took them also from the railroads of the country. The munition plants under the cost plus system offered greater compensation to labor, and the railroads' skilled employees left day after day in order to better their condition in life. In 1918 the worst winter in the memory of man came to us. With efficient, skilled, and experienced employees in control of the railroads the railroads would have experienced great difficulties in operation, but with inefficient employees, with efficient men leaving every day, and with the drafting of men by the shipbuilding industry and munition plants, the conditions became chaotic in the extreme during the winter months of 1918. And yet, notwithstanding that, they transported successfully the unusually heavy increase of freight and transported more passengers than had ever been transported in a single year in the history of this country.

When we come to consider whether or not the railroads were economically managed we hear reference to the increased compensation to employees under Federal control and we never stop to think that there was not an industry in this country that was not at the same time increasing wages for employees by leaps and bounds.

What are the facts? Take the steel industry, a basic industry, the one industry in any way comparable to the transportation system of this country. You will find that while the wages of the employees of the railroads under Government administration increased about 104 to 106 per cent in 1919 over 1914, yet during the same period there was an increase of 144 per cent in the wages paid the employees of the steel industry in this country.

Take any other industry in any way fairly comparable with the transportation business of this country and you will find that there was a greater increase in wages paid to its employees than was paid to the railroad employees of the country. What could our people expect? Could we expect that the railroad employees, confronted as they daily were with offers of increased compensation in every other line of industry, would continue to work for the United States Government for less than they could earn in other industries? Manifestly it was impossible, and the best proof of it is that to-day, as the railroads are returned to private ownership, the railroads under private ownership are preparing to again increase the compensation of the railroad employees of this country. They have to do it, because, to start with, the railroad employees prior to the war were notoriously an underpaid class of employees. The original increase granted them was as a result of a commission appointed in 1918, and the increased compensation was made to date back to January 1, 1918. Since that time, from month to month, there have been adjustments of compensation which have increased the total compensation paid to the railroad employees.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman does not mean to state that the increase in wages to railroad employees since the Government took the roads over amounted to 104 to 106 per cent on the whole?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. The statement made by the director, which has been quoted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and which I have again quoted, is that the increased compensation of employees in 1919, as compared with 1914, represented between 104 and 106 per cent.

Mr. BARKLEY. The increases made by the Railroad Administration amount to less than 50 per cent, as compared with the wages when the roads were taken over by the Government.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In considering the question of the management by the Railway Administration, in addition to the increased compensation paid to labor, which every man must admit was essential, the Railroad Administration had to pay an increased amount for supplies and material, for just because the railroads happened to be under the control of the Government, the industries of this country were not going to sell their supplies and materials for less than they could sell them in the open market. When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] interrupted me, however, I was going to call attention to this fact, that to-day, as the roads return to private control, they realize that they will have to pay additional compensation to their employees, and certainly that can not be charged to any action of the Railroad Administration. I call the attention of the House to it right now. According to the press the railroads of this country will ask for a 25 per cent increase in rates. The freight revenues this past year amounted to $4,000,000,000. That means that the railroads are asking for $1,000,000,000 additional, to be paid by the shippers and finally by the consumers of this country. How do they figure it? They say in the first place that the Government has not been paying the railroads a sufficient rental. This Congress has in the transportation act authorized a policy of 6 per cent upon invested capital. The value of the roads will necessarily be taken from the valution upon their books. That 6 per cent means that they will receive as rental $1,100,000,000. The Government while in control has paid to them as rental only about $900,000,000. So that to-day the railroads of the country claim that they have not been paid all that they ought to have been paid by the Government for rental, and want $200,000,000 more. Yet some who say they are entitled to this at the same time charge the Railway Administration with extravagance. They claim that they need a 25 per cent increase. That will give them $1,000,000,000 extra revenue, and when they take $200,000,000 more for rental, which they say they are entitled to, that leaves them $800,000,000 to cover increased operating expenses under private control. Last year under Government control the deficit was less than $400,000,000, and if they are granted a 25 per cent increase, we are going to give them $800,000,000 additional revenue to operate the roads when $400,000,000 was sufficient under Government control and also give them $200,000,000 additional rental. That is clearly the result and shows that while some railroad officials have criticized the Railroad Administration, and many people in this country have criticized it, for extravagant administration, the fact is that the railroads under private control are preparing to expend $400,000,000 for operating expenses more than was spent by the Government last year, and claim they are entitled to $200,000,000 additional for themselves in place of what we have paid them as rental.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman know why it is that they do not propose any increase on passenger rates but want to confine it all to freight?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not.

Mr. SIMS. I think I can give the gentleman the information. The passengers vote and have political influence, and they attend conventions. Freight rates are absorbed by the consumer, just like tariff rates, and they do not know anything about it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That brings me to the discussion of rates, because I do not intend to talk for any great length of time. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] says that the rates should have been increased by the director general. As I said originally, there are two questions—whether or not the business of the railroads was extravagantly conducted and whether or not the director general should have increased the rates. I think anyone can read the testimony before this committee of the director general, and he will become convinced that, so far as the increased operating expenses due to labor and material are concerned, it would have been absolutely impossible for the roads under private ownership to have been conducted for one cent less, and the fact that now, when they are returned to private ownership, they propose to increase the cost of their operating expenses indicates that they could not have conducted them as cheaply as did the Railroad Administration.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to give the impression that I thought the roads, on the whole or in any particular, were extravagantly operated. I think, as a general rule, they were very efficiently operated and economically operated. I wanted to commend the men who were in charge of the roads in that respect.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did not quote the gentleman from Iowa as saying that. I quoted him only as to the rate question. I recall even now when we last had a deficiency appropriation in the House there was much criticism from some gentlemen on the Republican side of the House about another thing, and that is the increased number of employees. Of course we have an increased number of employees. This Congress was responsible for that. When the Congress enacted the Adamson law to establish the eight-hour day in this country, it was manifest that we had to increase the number of employees, and to-day we have 200,000 more employees than we had back in 1916. But there is an interesting thing in connection with that increased number of employees.

While we have 200,000 more employees the average number of hours of work of the railroad employees per month in 1916 was 263 hours, while in 1919 it is only 226 hours. The railroad compensation is based on so much per hour. There were 5,126,000,000 hours of work by railroad employees in 1919, as against 5,189,000,000 in 1916. So notwithstanding the increase of 200,000 employees, the number of hours that the railroad employees actually worked in 1919 was less than in 1916, the difference being due to the change from a 10-hour day to an 8-hour day. The Director General made this statement when he was last before the committee, that he had not arrived at a definite conclusion as to the effect of this 8-hour day upon the total production of railroad employees, but now he says in 1919 it is shown that while the total number of employees worked for a less number of hours than in 1916, that they handled a greater amount of traffic than they did in 1916, when the number of hours worked was in excess of that which it was in 1919. The amount of freight handled was about the same, but the passenger traffic was 33 per cent greater, so that the total was in excess of 1916.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman from Iowa a little while ago referred to a certain increase in the pay of supervisors or superintendents, giving the increase as $530 compared to $165 under private operation. Is the gentleman able to give the committee any information as to the number of these isolated instances that are cited usually as generalities?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; the Director General, in response to a question of the gentleman from Iowa, said this: That he had no knowledge of the particular case. He said that, of course, there were isolated instances that could always be cited, and he afterwards put into the record the following statement:

Note by Mr. Hines: While an investigation is being conducted into the details of the salaries and wages mentioned, a report received by the Director General, Mr. Hines, from Mr. C. D. Cass, general manager of the Waterloo, Cedar Falls & Northern Railroad, the property mentioned as having been under Federal control, is to the effect that during 1919 there was no superintendent of substation on the property drawing $530 per month, and, in fact, that there was no official or employee on the property drawing that amount, the highest salary of any officer or employee having been paid to Mr. Cass as general manager, and that salary being $6,000 per annum. Prior to Federal control Mr. Cass received $12,000 per annum. If possible a communication will be sent by the Director General to the chairman later concerning the details of the other wages given in the table presented by the chairman.

In referring to the standardization of wages the director general stated it was undoubtedly true in some sections of the country, where the prevailing wage scale was lower than the average, that the establishment of a standard wage for the entire country had worked a hardship, but that the result, looking at it from a broad viewpoint, had not been injurious to the country. He stated that the Railway Administration through its wage boards were able to say to the representatives of the employees, "You want a standard wage. That standard wage can not be the wage which exists in close proximity to a shipbuilding industry. Nor should it be the wage that prevails in the agricultural section of the South, where the wage is low. It should be an average wage. It resulted in securing an average which, while higher than the prevailing wage in some sections and lower in others, still makes it possible for us to show without fear of successful contradiction that the increase was not greater than the increase in wages of employees of other industries." I again refer to the steel industry. While we increased only 102 per cent over 1914, the steel industry, in order to retain its employees, had to increase 144 per cent over 1914. Reduced to units, in 1919 the cost of the Steel Corporation was 81.5 per cent more per ton than in 1914, while in 1919 the increased cost to the railroads was only 61.2 per cent more per unit of service rendered than in 1914.

But to go back to the subject of rates. It was on that subject that I referred to the speech of the gentleman from Iowa. I recognize there is much to be said upon the question. In 1918 we made retroactive the increase of wages to the employees, making it date back to January 1. We established an increased rate for freight and passengers, which did not take effect until June 21, so that for six months the railroad paid the increased wage to the employees and received no increased revenues from passenger or freight traffic. The result was that we incurred a great deficit. But the director general states that if the increased rate could have been made retroactive, as the increased wage was, and had dated back to January 1, then for 22 out of the 26 months of Federal control the revenues would have paid the operating expenses of the railroads of this country. We would have incurred no deficit until November, 1919, when the coal strike came and caused us to lose in November and December $114,000,000. This was a loss no one could have anticipated and would have wrecked the railroads under private control.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I say this to the gentleman?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It would have been simply impossible to have made the freight rate retroactive.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course it would. Neither freight nor passenger rates could be made retroactive.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Another thing. When the gentleman suggests the expediency of freight rates having been made sufficiently high to take care of all liabilities outstanding, everyone will recall the difficulty that was had in reconciling the shipping interests of the country with the advance of 25 per cent in freight rates and a corresponding advance in passenger fares.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course, the gentleman is correct. When the increased wage was granted they undertook to establish an increased rate to meet these increased expenses. But this was not done until the Railway Administration had called into consultation all the traffic experts of this country; all the talent that would be available to the railroads under private control. They labored for a long time in order to establish an increased rate which would be equitably distributed over the entire country and work no hardship to any section or any industry, and yet even after the traffic experts of the railroads of the country had been called in and had assisted in framing the increased freight schedules, so many appeals were made that they have had about 35 traffic committees at work over the country removing inequalities in the rates, and they are still working at it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will yield.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I rose for the purpose of making the same point the gentleman has touched upon in response to the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia.

The objection throughout the country was not so much that the rates had been increased, because everyone realized that rates must be increased, but the objection that arose throughout the country was in reference to the inequality and inequities of the increase that was made throughout the country.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course, that was inevitable.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me one word in response to that observation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I was in position to know that the objections were not only of the character he indicates but of the other character, and they were expressed with a great deal of vehemence and persistence.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is no doubt about the difficulties incident to the revision of freight rates. A man not acquainted with the complexity of the problem may think that with the stroke of a pen a freight-rate increase can be established that would do justice to all sections and all industries of this country, but as far back as October last the Director General of Railroads suggested to the executives of the railroads the necessity for preparing a schedule of rate increases for the consideration of the Interstate Commerce Commission when the roads were returned to private control, and from October, 1919, to this day the railroads, with all their experts, have been unable to frame a plan of rate increases to suggest to the Interstate Commerce Commission to govern their operation under private ownership. Gentlemen who carelessly state that with the increase in wages to employees on a given day the director general should have announced an increase in freight rates that would have made the revenues commensurate with the expenditures, either have not investigated the subject, or wish to deceive the public into believing that the Railroad Administration has been derelict in the performance of a plain duty.

Let us see the absurdity of the argument. What conditions existed in 1918? The wages of the employees had been increased as of January 1, 1918. In the fall of that year the employees, complaining of the ever-increasing cost of living, demanded a further increase, and we had to adjust the wage of certain classes from time to time. We saw that there should be some increase in revenue. What should we have done after November 11, when the armistice came?

There was great unrest in the country, uncertainty as to the future of business and hesitancy everywhere. Traffic upon the railways slumped until they had the worst three months in the history of railroading. Should we have ordered an increase in the freight rates, based upon the lean months of January, February, and March, 1919? If we had we would have fixed the rate so high that every man in this country would to-day be complaining of the abuse of power by the Director General of Railroads. The Director General knew that it was an abnormal condition prevailing. He predicted better times for the railroads. Those better times came, and during May, June, July, August, September, and October, the business of the railroads picked up, and if an increase had been granted based upon the business of the railroads during June, July, August, September, and October of the same year, an increased freight rate of only 2 per cent would have been sufficient to take care of it, whereas, if you had gone to work and granted an increase in the early part of the year, the Lord only knows how much would have been necessary. It only goes to show that during such abnormal times it would have been exceedingly difficult to intelligently frame an increased freight schedule.

Then, the Director General had an additional reason. There is not a man who does not believe that it would have affected wage conditions. The men demanded a further increase in wages. The railroads refused to pay the further increase. They went to the President. The President urged them to wait. He said that there was an extraordinary condition prevailing; that there would likely be a reduction in the cost of living, and as it was reduced the men would be relieved.

The men waived their demands and agreed that they would not call a nation-wide strike.

We can recall the condition prevailing at that time. If in the face of telling the employees of the railroads that the high cost of living was going to be reduced and we could not increase wages because it would increase the high cost of living, we had gone ahead and increased the revenues by increasing the freight rates, that would have taken away every argument the Government ever had for trying to keep stationary the compensation of the employees. They would have said, "If you have increased the rates 20 or 30 per cent, you have got the money, and we want the increase." And there is another reason. An increase in freight rates would have been reflected not only in wage conditions but it would have been reflected in the increased cost of living, because the increase of freight rates would have offered a reason or a pretext to manufacturers of the country to increase the price of their products, and in the end the amount paid by the people of America would have been greatly in excess of anything ever paid out of the Treasury to make up these deficits.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman has not forgotten, however, that the President recommended that a commission be appointed to determine the wages, and that that determination of the commission should be certified as a basis for increase of rates?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I remember the appointment of the commission, and the railway employees then, notwithstanding their wages had not been increased over the year before, went back to work. But I will give the gentleman a conclusive reason why the director general should not have done what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] contends.

In 1919 hostilities had ceased. The President had power under the law to increase the freight rates, but hostilities had ceased. And the position of the Congress was that this power should not be exercised by the President. When we passed a deficiency bill here in the closing days of the last Congress appropriating money for the Railway Administration and sent it over to the Senate, the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate told the Director General of Railroads that any exercise of power by the President increasing the freight rates would be an arbitrary and autocratic exercise of that power, and that that deficiency appropriation would never go through the Senate unless there was tacked upon it the provision that the Interstate Commerce Commission would have the power to suspend any increase of rates that was announced by the President of the United States or by his agent, the Director General of Railroads. So the Director General of Railroads knew that the congressional policy was opposed to doing that which some gentlemen now claim he ought to have done.

And not only did the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee do that, but the Senate passed a bill placing this restriction upon the exercise of such power by the President. It came over here, and this House, in September of that year, knowing that we had had a deficit for the first four or five months of the year, proceeded to pass the bill, which provided that not only could the Interstate Commerce Commission suspend any rate that was announced by the President or by the Director General, but, so far as intrastate rates were concerned, the State commission of every State must consent before they could become effective in that State. So that if he had wanted to increase the freight rates, under the act of Congress the director general could not have done so except by what amounted to unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. And the bill passed and was vetoed.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; it was vetoed. But Congress had spoken, and I pay tribute to the director general for obeying the policy of Congress, as expressed by both House and Senate, and declining to exercise a power which, had he exercised it, some Members of this House would to-day declare to have been a most autocratic abuse of power.

Mr. SIMS. But we did not have the nerve to pass it over his veto.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. As I understand it, the gentleman makes the point that if the Director General had increased the rate as indicated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] beyond the amount he did, while there might not have been a deficit, the people of the United States, in increased cost of living and in the increased cost of freight, would have had to pay many times the amount of that deficit?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Undoubtedly. And it was a loss due primarily to war conditions. In the one case by a freight rate the loss would have been directly shifted to the shipper; in the other, it is borne by all of the people. As has been referred to heretofore, the rate structure of the country is most complex, and when any man attempts at a stroke of a pen to increase the freight rates he threatens disaster to the industries of this country. If in 1919 the Director General had started an investigation as to a possible increase, with the business of the country at that time unsettled, it would have been further affected by the uncertainty of the result of the investigation—the effect would have been disastrous to the business interests of the country.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. With reference to the suggestion that the gentleman made as to the purpose of the bill that was passed giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to suspend rates, if the gentleman will permit, I do not believe that his statement is accurate. The purpose of that bill—and I want to make just a short statement about it—the purpose of that bill was to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to suspend rates, to suspend the rates in the event that they were inequitable; and the Director General stated that he had no difficulty with the Interstate Commerce Commission, that they were working together in these matters, and the interstate rates are 85 per cent of our rates. It was my understanding that the President vetoed the bill in order that he might have the unhampered power to control the situation of the rates since he was responsible absolutely for the revenues and the expenses.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have now forgotten what the language of the President was in his veto message, but I do not think he declared or intimated any purpose to increase the rates. Congress did not attempt to pass the bill over his veto. What I contend is this, that the Director General of Railroads did absolutely right in complying with the expressed policy of the Congress, and if he had not done it Members of the House on that side of the aisle would have visited upon him the severest criticism.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not justified in interpreting that legislation for this side of the House. He may interpret it for his side of the House if he so desires, but there was, so far as the support of that legislation on this side of the House was concerned, nobody who ever dreamed that it was intended to prevent the increase of rates, and I have never heard that suggested anywhere until this moment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would like to know what the purpose was in giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission, then, the power to suspend any increased rate that was announced by the President of the United States or the Director General of Railroads.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield, I will tell him.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. All right.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In a short sentence I may say the purpose was not to prevent increase of rates at all, but the purpose was to prevent the great inequities that have arisen from the fact that the Director General had not had the long experience that the Interstate Commerce Commission has had with respect to these rates and that when he established an increase of rates an outcry from the country was inevitably forthcoming.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As I said before, the only increase of rates that was granted was granted only after the traffic experts of the railroads of the country themselves had considered it, and it was on their advice that that increase was granted; and the inequities that the gentleman speaks of are inseparable, as he knows, from any revision of freight rates. And because that is true the railroads of the country to-day, though they have been considering the matter since last October, are unable to frame a plan for an increase of rates to take care of the situation as it now stands. There never was any reason for the passage of the bill in question except that this Congress wanted to prevent any increase of rates by the Director General. I care not what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says. I do not seek to interpret that legislation for him. I am satisfied he knew nothing about it and accepted the interpretation of the gentleman who was in charge of the bill. But the debate will show that the purpose of that restriction upon the action of the Director General was to prevent any increase of rate by the Director General at the time. What else could have been its purpose? Does not the gentleman know that any change necessarily must have been an increase? Does he not believe that every increase granted would have been questioned by some shipper as being inequitable and unfair to him, and the result would have been that you could not have made the increase?

The man engaged in any industry who saw another industry asking for a suspension of rates because of an inequity and would not ask to have his rate suspended would be showing lack of business judgment. That would necessarily have been the result. It was contended in the House and Senate that the hostilities having ceased, the country having returned to peace conditions, the President should not exercise this arbitrary power. Nobody wants to pay increased freight or passenger rates any more than anybody wants to pay increased taxes. We hate to pay them. That is the reason why some people have criticized the Railroad Administration, forgetting all the time that they pay three or four times more for shoes and every other commodity than they did seven years ago. Yet they seemingly thought the railroad men should not receive an increase of wages, and that the railroads should not increase freight or passenger rates.

An additional reason why the rates should not have been increased during the latter part of 1919 is the fact that all men knew the roads were about to be returned to private ownership. The President announced that they were to be turned back January 1. Afterwards a 60-day extension of time was granted, but we knew the railroads were going to be returned to private control. And if in the face of that announcement the President of the United States or the Director General had gone ahead and issued an arbitrary increase of rates, despite the fact that in all justice it ought to be left until the roads were returned to private control, when a fair and adequate increase of compensation could be granted after a full investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, they would have been properly subjected to criticism, and I would have criticized them as much as any other man in this House. Having some regard for the best interest of the people of America they refrained from doing it.

Mr. Chairman, I think when the history of the war is written and partisanship has disappeared the fair man of another day will say that in the history of this country there is nothing of which we can be more justly proud than the handling of our transportation system during the war, and the thanks of America must ever be due to William G. McAdoo, Walker Hines, and their associates who labored so zealously and intelligently in administering the gigantic business of the railroads of the Nation and made possible their wonderful contribution to the successful prosecution of the war. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, to-day is the second anniversary of the Battle of Seicheprey. It was not a large battle as measured by the numbers engaged or the ground gained and lost. It had, however, an importance at the time and a historical significance to which I shall allude later. For me there is a special interest connected with the personnel of the troops engaged on the American side. They belonged to the Twenty-sixth, or Yankee, Division and to the One hundred and second Infantry Regiment of that division, which was made up by combining the First and Second Regiments of Connecticut, the latter of which was my old National Guard regiment. I was a member of this organization as enlisted man and officer for nearly 20 years. The two companies principally engaged in this fight were Companies C and D. When I was a captain, I commanded Company D, and when I was a major Company C belonged to my battalion. Another Member of this House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN], commanded Company C when he resided in my city. Many of the young men who were members of these two companies were and are personal friends of mine. In many instances I knew their fathers and mothers.

The Twenty-sixth Division, known as the Yankee Division, was the first of the National Guard divisions to go to France. Some of its elements were delayed in getting over, so that the entire division with all its units complete did not arrive in France until very late in the year 1917.

In order to help make clear what I have to say, I have here three maps, one a 1 over 200,000 map, showing the entire western front from the North Sea to Switzerland, another the battle map of the Battle of Seicheprey, showing the entire division sector, which on the larger map is at the point which I indicate, and the third is a greatly enlarged copy of the small rectangular area near the center of the battle map [indicating].

Early in February, 1918, the Yankee Division went into the line northeast of Soissons and began its preliminary training by battalions and companies with the French troops.

On March 19 this division had finished their training with the French, and went by rail to Bar-sur-Aube. From this point they were to march overland by a divisional march and execute maneuvers which would bring them finally to their billets northeast of Chaumont. After they had arrived at their billets they were to consume the entire month of April in further perfecting themselves in the lessons they had learned with the French, so that it was probably calculated that by the 1st of May they would be sufficiently trained to go into the line.

On March 21 occurred the great German drive into Picardy, and this changed all plans. It now became necessary, in order to save a desperate situation, that all American troops available, whether well trained or not, should go into the line. Therefore it was decided to move the First Division of Regulars, which was the first one over to France, from their position at Seicheprey, in the Toul sector, and send them into the Montdidier sector, near the extreme west, in order to help stem the German flood there. On April 1 the Yankee Division, without rest and without any training whatever by division, were sent into this sector to relieve the First Division.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman please state the relative time when the One hundred and second Regiment, or the Yankee Division, arrived in France, as compared to the arrival of some of the other emergency divisions? I mean by that as against the Regular divisions.

Mr. TILSON. I do not remember the order in which they arrived, but the First Division went over first of all. I do not know whether or not there were any other Regular divisions complete before the Yankee Division began to arrive overseas. On account of a breakdown of one of the boats some elements of the division were delayed and did not arrive promptly, possibly not before the Second Regulars or the Rainbow Division arrived completely. As I now recall, the latter arrived about as soon as the last elements of the Twenty-sixth Division arrived.

The sector as held by the First Division at Seicheprey was a 12-kilometer sector, but in order to hold the line by as few troops as possible the sector was extended when the Twenty-sixth Division took it over, so that they took the entire sector of the First Division and part of the sector of the French division on their right. Therefore the Twenty-sixth Division held a 17½-kilometer sector, including the portion of the line where the First Division had held only a 12-kilometer front.

The Twenty-sixth Division had been reduced considerably and had not received replacements, so that the 12 rifle companies of the One hundred and second Regiment had on the average only 186 men to a company, instead of the 250 men allowed by the organization tables. The result was that at the time of the Battle of Seicheprey the front was being held by 35 rifles to the 100 yards, instead of 60 rifles to the 100 yards, which had been regarded as about the right number on a "quiet" front. The French required 50 rifles to the 100 yards, while with the English troops sometimes as high as 160 rifles were used to the 100 yards. Therefore in considering the events of April 20 it is important to bear in mind that the One hundred and second Infantry, in doing its part to meet the crisis brought about by the great German attack of March 21, was called upon to defend a front only one-half of which would, under normal circumstances, have been placed upon a single regiment.

On the night of April 19–20 the First Battalion, One hundred and second Infantry, relieved the Third Battalion in what was known as "Center F." As shown by the map, "Center F" included the towns of Seicheprey and Beaumont, and its area—rectangular in shape—was about 2 kilometers by 3 kilometers. The plan of defense divided this area into two positions—one in advance of and including Seicheprey, known as position 1, and the other along and to the north of the Beaumont-Metz highway, known as position 1–bis. It was not considered possible to hold position 1 in the face of a determined attack.

Upon completion of the relief Company C and Company D, less one platoon, were in position 1, while Companies A and B, plus one platoon of Company D, were in position 1–bis. Battalion headquarters were in the southern portion of the town of Seicheprey. To the west of the First Battalion was the Second Battalion with Company E in the front line, or outpost position.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. What is the distance between the blue line and the red line?

Mr. TILSON. The blue line represents the German front wire, while the red line represents the American front wire. The distance between them varies very widely. The gentleman will see that these large squares, which are a foot or more, represent a kilometer. The entire map is only about 4½ kilometers in height. Gentlemen will notice that the front-line trench here is the Sibille trench, which lies almost parallel with the front wire in front of the village of Seicheprey.

The First Battalion had hardly completed taking over its positions, as indicated above, when, at about 3 o'clock on the morning of April 20, the enemy put down an exceedingly heavy artillery fire on the entire zone of the One hundred and second Infantry. Within a few minutes all telephone communication had been cut, and such communication as could be had with the smaller units was by runner. At 5 o'clock, under cover of a dense fog and protected by the heaviest kind of an artillery barrage, the enemy attacked the entire front held by the First Battalion of the One hundred and second Infantry, that part of the front immediately west of Seicheprey held by Company E of the Second Battalion, and with artillery the remainder of the front held by the One hundred and second Infantry.

The number of German infantry in the attack has been estimated at 1,800 picked troops, while the minimum estimate is that the German attackers numbered about 1,200 men. This strength and the determination shown by the enemy would indicate that the attack was more than an ordinary raid for the purpose of securing information. The exact purpose of the attack is not definitely known. One impression, shared by the French as well as our own officers, was that the Germans intended to seize and hold the Beaumont-Metz highway in the vicinity of Beaumont. Another view is that the enemy's intention was to seize and hold all ground gained in the vicinity of Seicheprey, and especially the Sibille trench, just to the north of Seicheprey.

Whatever the enemy's intention, his terrific artillery fire, and the picked men, enormously outnumbering our weak elements in position 1, with which he followed his artillery barrage, soon overcame our small outposts in the front-line positions and the enemy succeeded in penetrating the northern outskirts of Seicheprey; but Maj. Rau and a few remaining men of Companies C and D held on to the southern edge of Seicheprey and were never driven therefrom. Reenforcements from Companies A and B in position 1–bis were brought up and the Germans were soon driven out of Seicheprey and back to the Sibille trench. Later on in the day and during the night the Germans were driven from the Sibille trench, and on the morning of the 21st the Americans were again in full position of the ground which the Germans had been enabled to occupy for only a few hours as a result of their overwhelming attack of the day before.

More than 40 Germans were buried by the Americans, and doubtless many were carried away by their comrades. The quantity and character of the matériel left in the Sibille trench indicated that the enemy had made a hasty retreat. The saddest and most unfortunate part of the affair was that there were 58 Americans killed, 145 wounded, and 226 missing. Most of the missing were captured and carried away to German prisons, where most of them lived through the war and have since returned to their homes.

I said in the beginning that this was not a great battle. It has been called a raid in force, although I think it was too large for that. While not rising to the dignity of an offensive, perhaps it might properly be called a small local offensive. Nevertheless the Battle of Seicheprey was historically important. It was the first powerful attack by the Germans directed against an all-American sector. In the next place, it was the first try out of National Guard troops. It has been thought by some that the Germans upon learning that a National Guard division had come into the line seized this opportunity to demonstrate that they were not dependable. If this were the purpose, it proved a failure from the German point of view. So far as the number of casualties inflicted was concerned, it was a German success, for the American losses were heavy in proportion to the number of troops engaged. The weakened elements in the front line were simply overwhelmed. The attack utterly failed to hold any ground gained, and it never reached the line of resistance even of the first battalion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, could I have just about a minute more?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, so far as the Americans were concerned, there were doubtless many lessons to be learned from the attack at Seicheprey. These lessons, however, concerned the combined operations of large bodies of troops, and no criticism can be made of the conduct of the small units of the One hundred and second Infantry, which bore the brunt of the attack. The consensus of all reports concerning the action of individuals and small units is that their conduct was admirable in every respect. The commanding officer of the One hundred and second Infantry, Col. John H. Parker, characterized the conduct of individuals and units of his regiment as being "beyond praise, heroic, and sublime." Brig. Gen. Fox Conner, chief of operations on Gen. Pershing's staff, in commenting upon the affair at Seicheprey, says: "Notwithstanding the heavy losses of the First Battalion, One hundred and second Infantry, its morale was not only unbroken but it remained ready and willing to undergo any sacrifices which it might be called upon to make. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MACCRATE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4163) to incorporate the Roosevelt Memorial Association, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following House concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 54.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to number the sections consecutively.

The message also announced that Mr. POINDEXTER was excused, at his own request, from further service as a conferee on the bill (H. R. 11927) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation, and Mr. KEYES was appointed in his place.

RAILROAD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I well remember when the bill was pending in the House to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to suspend rates made by the President. I opposed it. I insisted then that it was an absurdity to require the President, who is not an expert on rates, to initiate rates for an expert body to immediately suspend. I offered an amendment on the floor of the House authorizing the carriers to file rate increases subject to suspension by the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of the President, because the carriers knew better what rates they wanted, they knew better what rates they needed. My amendment was voted down with a dull, sickening thud. The reason for it was that if the carriers suggested increases of rates, and they were suspended by the commission, it did not deprive the State commissions of the power to pass upon State-made rates, and the covert and camouflaged purpose of having the President initiate rates was that the Interstate Commerce Commission might suspend them so far as they applied to interstate rates, but that the State commissions would have no power in so far as intrastate rates were concerned. Those are the facts, and when the President vetoed the bill, I saw in a newspaper—I do not know whether it was true or not—that the leader on that side, Mr. MONDELL, said that the President did right, and that the bill ought never to have been passed. As I recall, Mr. MONDELL advocated the passage of the bill.

I want to refer to another matter. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] says it is proposed now by the railroads to increase the rates on freight over and above the Government war-made rates 25 per cent. The Director General increased passenger fares at the same time, relatively in proportion to the increase of freight rates. Why do not the carriers now ask to increase the passenger rates 25 per cent? I can tell you why, and you know it without being told. I am not blaming the railroads. It is because the passengers vote and run for offices and hold offices and can talk, abuse, and denounce the railroads, and if they increase passenger rates the railroads know that there would be a howl go up from every man who bought a ticket.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Was that the reason that Mr. McAdoo as the Director General took off the extra fares that he had put on for the privilege of riding in a Pullman or chair car?

Mr. SIMS. I was going to refer to that; I thought the gentleman himself would, but he did not. Why do they not ask for an increase in passenger rates? I have given you the reason, and it is a good one. They want to put it on freight, so that it is charged up to the ultimate consumer, with profits added every time it takes a turnover, and in that way they get their money without the man who pays it knowing how much he pays. I do not blame the railroads; they know how selfish human beings are, and when a man can see in advance the rate he has to pay he will howl, but when the poor and also the rich have to pay an increased price for meat, for bread, for flour, for coal, for sugar, for lumber, they do not see just how much of it is caused by the increase in freight. That is the reason for it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] refers to the fact that the director general, Mr. McAdoo, in making the passenger rates, had added one-half a cent a car-mile for the privilege of traveling upon a Pullman car instead of in a day coach. The Director General never did a more righteous or just thing when he did that very thing, but a howl went up in protest by the well-to-do who could travel in Pullmans, and it was charged that the poor widow, or the soldier's wife or mother, would have to sit up all night in a day coach in order to save that half cent a mile extra fare, and Mr. McAdoo—it was he and not Mr. Hines who was then Director General—and he, being tender-hearted like Members of Congress, took off the half cent on all Pullman passengers rather than force the wives and mothers of soldiers who were not able to pay the extra fare to sit up all night in day coaches.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman says that Mr. McAdoo had a tender heart. Was that a tender heart on his part or a sensitive ear?

Mr. SIMS. It was a tender heart. He had been traveling through the South at that time advocating the purchase of Liberty bonds, as I am told—I did not talk to him about it—and saw the poor widows and the wives and mothers of the soldiers were the sufferers, which broke down his adamantine intention to continue the extra charge. Why do not the railroads ask for it now? It is nothing but just and right. The war is over and no soldiers' wives and mothers are forced to pay it while husbands and sons were dying in battle. A Pullman car weighs nearly twice as much as a day coach, and costs much more money to build. It takes more motive power to haul it. Why should not a gentleman who is able to travel in a Pullman car pay an increased fare? Why not increase his fare over the fare of those who are not able to travel in Pullman cars, who have to sit up all night, and why not reduce the fare of such people by half a cent or even a quarter of a cent per mile? But I predict that you will see nothing of that sort done. Private ownership means operation for profit. That being its object and purpose, it will never do anything that does not promise the greatest amount of profit. That is all that people invest in it for, and that is the only reason that you and I would invest in it—nothing else on earth but profit on investment. Without such a motive not another private dollar will ever be invested in a share of railroad stock.

What else do carriers do? Their roads have always carried, and to-day are carrying more than they ever did before, a large volume of traffic free of charge. That is the free transportation of baggage. Now, trunks do not vote, but the men and women who own them, and to which personal service is more expensive to the railroads to render than to the passengers, do vote, and therefore their trunks get free passes. Why not let you and I who carry a trunk pay a just and reasonable charge for the carrying of them? Mr. Cass, from the State of Iowa, told me, when I inquired of him in a hearing, that the baggage carried free was equal to at least 15 per cent of the whole cost of passenger traffic. Now, why do it? I traveled with a gentleman who is the business partner of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS]. I was going from here to San Francisco and he was going from here to Ogden. I had a trunk that weighed about 125 pounds, and my trunk was carried to San Francisco for nothing. It had to be changed from car to car—personal attention, personal service.

The partner of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] had no trunk, but he had to pay just as much as I did from here to Ogden and received less service and cost the railroad less to carry him without baggage than it did to carry me. Why do not the rail carriers put on a reasonable charge for carrying baggage, a rate that would at least pay the carrier out of pocket cost? Why should not the railroads in the name of common honesty and common sense get the actual cost of the service to them? I offered such an amendment in the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and they voted it down. I then offered it in the full committee—I am giving away no committee secrets, because I am not going to tell who voted for it and who voted against it—but it failed to pass, and it will not do so here; you will not vote for it. Now, you know there are thousands of commercial travelers who are traveling as a matter of business and profit to their employers. They carry baggage containing samples for business purposes. They are carried free up to 150 pounds per passenger all over this country. These sample trunks are not used to carry the personal wearing apparel of the drummers, but are used exclusively for business purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. If I can get more time I will be glad to answer questions.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from South Carolina was called away from the Chamber and asked me to control the time, there being no member of the Committee on Appropriations present, and I yield three minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I yield.

Mr. FIELDS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the baggage of commercial travelers, the entire baggage, is carried free?

Mr. SIMS. Only up to 150 pounds, like anybody else's.

Mr. FIELDS. One might infer from the gentleman's remarks that all baggage was carried free.

Mr. SIMS. It is the same as anybody else's.

Mr. FIELDS. That is, he is entitled to 150 pounds free?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and they are traveling every day as a matter of business.

Mr. FIELDS. I have been a commercial traveler and carried four, five, and seven trunks, and I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that they ought to pay for the baggage that they carry.

Mr. SIMS. Pay all alike; but the railroads will not make the charge. Trunks do not vote, but their owners do, and this whole scheme of private ownership for profit involves such uneconomical practices, which the railroad can not well prevent. Now, what should the railroads do? They might put on a reasonable graduated charge for baggage of all kinds, increasing it when it goes up, charging less for the first 150 pounds. And now we have a United States Express Co. that operates all over the United States, everywhere that a rail line is operated. It will send to your house wherever you live and take your trunk and deliver it at your hotel or wherever you are going at the end of your journey for a reasonable charge. Now, why should we want an increased freight paid on wheat, corn, cotton, cattle, eggs, and butter and at the same time have our trunks that carry our wearing apparel carried free? I think that, as the railroads now are trying to increase freight rates from 25 to 30 per cent, they should at least charge for carrying baggage a sufficient amount to pay them all actual expenses which they incur by reason of such baggage transportation service.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the railroads were under Government ownership, would not there be the same inducement to let the trunk owners carry their trunks free by those who control it, just the same as under private ownership?

Mr. SIMS. I rather think if the Government was carrying baggage free to the passenger, but at a public expense, that the gentleman would hardly vote against a reasonable charge upon his trunk for the service rendered by the carrier. I hardly think he would want the Government to incur a deficit and take it out of the taxpayers on account of this free service thus given.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am not saying that would not be true, but I am asking the gentleman if the same inducement would not exist?

Mr. SIMS. The same temptation always exists not to pay what a service is worth, if we can get it for less or for nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, while the House of Representatives was considering an item in the District of Columbia appropriation bill a few days ago I indicated that a certain teacher in the Central High School of this city had been teaching that which in my opinion would tend to undermine the Government.

The principal of that school, Prof. Maurer, was quoted by the daily press as stating that the charge was "not serious."

In a report to Supt. Thurston, dated April 1, Prof. Maurer finds in favor of the teacher but says, in part, in regard to this case:

> Almost all of her pupils express themselves as never having left her classes with a feeling that any reflections had been cast upon our country or its Government in comparison with any other nation or upon its public men.

You will note he says "almost all" of her pupils, and so forth. My contention is that this teacher nor any other teacher has the right to send any pupil from her classes "with a feeling that any reflections had been cast upon our country or its Government in comparison with any other nation."

Mr. Chairman, teachers should Americanize foreigners, not foreignize Americans.

The report states further:

> I find that those pupils who do recall criticism recollect a very few at most of such occasions—

Which again indicates such criticisms were made and on several occasions.

The report further states:

> It is, of course, true that the courses Miss ——— is now teaching are yet incomplete and not fully developed. The true index of her teaching is in the influence left by her finished work with the class, and the fact should be stated that our students of history do not get the full understanding or appreciation of the American Constitution until their senior year, following the study of the European countries.

From this I conclude a freshman, sophomore, or junior may gain wrong impressions, but that these will all be corrected in their senior year. This is dangerous business, Mr. Chairman.

This report was based largely, so I am informed, on anonymous answers to questions furnished the pupils. While I have been three times refused an examination of these answers, the principal stated to me over the phone that a number of the answers bore testimony to the facts substantially as I stated to the House on a previous occasion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have neither time nor disposition to enter the secret service, and neither am I going to embarrass any child nor any parent, but a little information from parents throws interesting sidelight on this whole question.

One parent says:

> As a parent whose son has been compelled to listen to her vicious teachings for almost a year, I am bitterly opposed to seeing her get off without being taught a severe lesson.
>
> Myself and other parents have been greatly incensed during the entire year to think that she has been allowed to pursue the tactics she has employed. Please continue your good work.

And so forth.

Another parent, a cool, calm, sensible business man, tells me he has been incensed at the reports brought to him by his daughter on numerous occasions.

He has repeatedly found it advisable to go over the points at issue with his daughter—who declares she likes this teacher—and thus modify or change her viewpoint.

He tells me he finally concluded the teacher was a citizen of another country and was prejudiced in her teaching in favor of that country.

Another parent, a highly intellectual gentleman, who has resided in this city for many years, states that he removed his daughter from another school in this city some time ago because of the bolshevistic, socialistic, and other teachings she was receiving.

He states that one socialist teacher, who is not now in the schools, used to invite the children to see her after school if they wanted further information along the same line.

I am informed there is a socialist organization, with a high-sounding, beguiling title, with headquarters in New York, whose whole object is to openly or secretly teach socialism and Bolshevism in our schools and colleges.

I am informed that a group of students in one of our great universities is doing personal work among other students and signing them up as members and supporters of the New York organization. It is presumed the same slimy work is being done in other colleges and universities.

Under recent date a patriotic young friend of mine writes me as follows:

> I have made a casual investigation of the magazine put into the hands of college students by the Intercollegiate Socialist Society of New York, and find it impregnated with articles by such dubious characters as Berger. There are also lavish eulogiums on Debs. I have not had the time to read searchingly into the contents of the articles and can not accordingly adduce positive incriminating evidence, unless the panegyrics on Debs and the contributions of Berger be considered illicit.
>
> An examination on your part will bring the truth of the situation. My knowledge of Berger leads me to form the opinion that if he was not worthy enough to be a Member of Congress, he is not sufficiently estimable to be allowed to exert this influence on the minds of college students. The absorption of these ideas must necessarily find expression for the worst in manhood. It is for you to judge whether his teachings are destructive or stimulating. Certainly a man who has been condemned by the courts of the country is not a model for emulation or an incentive for popular applause.
> In college I have already formed the belief that if while here one does not absorb a profound veneration for his country, then the educational system of the country will only be placing power in the hands of those who would jeopardize our national existence. Americanization is too slow in operation. I see no efforts about me. There are no monthly talks on this subject, not even yearly, unless I have been sound asleep. Progressive ideas should be encouraged, but there should be a differentiation between those that have the interest of the country in mind and those that would encourage fanaticism for mistaken martyrdom, oblivious to its unsoundness and only animated by a feverish desire to renovate.
> Recently there was issued to college boys who are members of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society invitations to attend a "civic club meeting" on April 15 in New York City. Following this was a brazen line beginning, "A round up of the free for the benefit of the bound," and even worse, by Red Doran. You will recall that this person has connections with the I. W. W.'s and has been indicted about three times, being now on bail. To continue: Under this was a line to the effect that Red Doran would conduct a Dutch auction. This is enigmatical, but it was not meant in levity. It closed with an appeal to those who were coming to bring money, the proceeds of which would be split up between the Centralia and the Intercollegiate Society. The Centralia is an effort to free indicted I. W. W.'s. I do not know how many have contemplated accepting the invitation, but this, I think, may be implicitly assumed that all college members of this society received a request to attend. * * *
> This is but a compendium but I think the danger is plain. Of course I may be mislead as to the real significance of this and I advise you to look the ground over for yourself. It is the deep conviction that this is but an example of the protean anarchy that is rife in the country that induces me to protest against this organization. A suppression of baleful propaganda is not a suppression of public opinion because this is not public opinion. The great conservative masses do not sanction it, but a few ingenuous and determined bellowers can often overcome a tremendous majority.
> An attack on the college that I am attending with evidence furnished by me would be matricidal on my part and with my respect for the greatness and traditions of the college would be a severe blow to me.
>
> This is not only here, it is prevalent. I write to you as a man very interested in Americanization and hope that this letter may be of service to you in the great work of safeguarding the future by indoctrinating the youth with sound principles.
>
> Very sincerely,
> ——— ———

For the protection of this student I can not reveal his name nor the name of the college, which he attends, but it is one of the largest and best known educational institutions in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this interests every educator in America. The letter from this young man, in my judgment, should be read to the general assembly of every high school and every college in the country with appropriate comments by the president or principal. To be forewarned is to be forearmed against this treacherous organization.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if the seeds of disrespect and disloyalty are sown, whether maliciously or thoughtlessly, in our free public schools, and are further cultivated in our colleges and universities, I declare we are sowing the wind and shall reap the whirlwind.

No Member has a higher regard for teachers and for the teaching profession than I. In the main they are well equipped for their duties by years of hard study at great expense, but are shamefully underpaid.

I am in favor of raising the salaries of all competent, loyal teachers and of dropping the others. The child's mind is entitled to the very best. Poor teachers are too dear and too dangerous at any price. But so long as they do teach, I insist that they teach good, old-fashioned Americanism, and if they do not, then cancel their certificates and create an everlasting vacancy so far as that teacher is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, while I am making an honest effort to have the American's creed drilled into the minds and into the hearts of every school boy and girl in my State of Washington, I am unwilling that any teacher in the National Capital shall be planting the seeds of national destruction under the very shadow of this dome.

Through the public schools of America lies the path to national preservation, and there is no other.

The quality of patriotism that springs from our schools must grade 100 per cent, and nothing less will meet the demands of the hour. A faith in our country and its institutions that is broad and deep must be instilled into the heart of every boy and girl.

I am not concerned with any passing criticism of Congress. The Constitutional Convention, composed of the intellectual giants of the centuries, and every deliberative and legislative body that ever met before or since, has been criticized, but I do object to any teacher, in her capacity as a teacher, criticizing one of the organic branches of this Government.

But perhaps my notions of patriotism are old-fashioned and out of date. I believe in the United States of America. I know it is the best Government on earth, and I can not and I will not sit idly by when any school or teacher repeatedly derides before her pupils the lawmaking body of this Government, nor when she leaves a lingering thought in any pupil's mind that some other Government is superior to his own.

Mr. Chairman, I am interested in schools and school-teachers, but over and above all I am interested in the children.

While the Senate committee investigates the school situation I trust they will inspect the answers to the questionnaires as made by all the children, to the end that all the facts may be known and full justice may be done the teacher and this question.

The schools of Washington, D. C., should lead the Nation, and if the school turmoil that has been aired by the city press three times daily for months can be settled in no other way, then I hope the Senate committee may recommend that we wipe out the contentious factions and disturbing factors and give to the children of this city the wholesome, patriotic instruction to which they are entitled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman, I am sure, will agree that it would be unfair to all the teachers of this District not to give the name of this particular teacher. It casts an aspersion upon the character of every teacher in the section, and I think the gentleman ought to name the teacher.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that even the school children at the Central High School, after the remarks I made here some two or three weeks ago, said that they thought that is Miss So-and-so, and I hesitate to give the name. I think this will all be brought out, probably, in the Senate committee hearings within the next two or three days.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman answer this question: Is it or is it not Miss Ditto?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Well, I called no names, if the gentleman will pardon me, in connection with this.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will say it is not, I do not care to ask him.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will say this, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that I have answered the question for the principal of that school and for the superintendent of the city schools, and it is up to them to make the investigation. There is no secret about that. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is no man in the United States who hates disloyalty more than I do. There is no man in the United States who would do more to free not only our schools but our whole Government of all socialism, of Bolshevism, and of anarchy than I would. I have taught my children to hate it and have taught them to love their flag, their Government, and its principles. I would not be doing my duty to my children or to myself or to my country, however, did I not rise at this time in defense of the absent teacher whose reputation has been attacked here by my esteemed friend the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS]. I asked him to give the name of this teacher, and he refused. He thus leaves every teacher in Washington under this cloud. When he made his former remarks some time ago on the floor concerning this particular teacher I made inquiry and found that his charges were directed against Miss Ditto, who teaches history in the Central High School. I happen to know well the superintendent of the public schools of this District, Mr. Thurston. He is an excellent gentleman and an able executive. It was my pleasure and privilege to have a conference with him at a time during the war when he was arranging intensive courses for the boys in the high schools in this District in order that they might graduate before time, in order to enter the service of their country. I am also acquainted with the principal of the Central High School, Mr. Maurer, and other teachers there—Mr. Jones and Mr. Burroughs and others—who are men of high standing and high intelligence and high patriotism. I happen to have three children who have been in attendance at this Central High School, and most, if not all, have been in the classes of this particular Miss Ditto. It is my good fortunate to be intimately acquainted with a big bunch of the splendid young men up there in the Central High School, of the two thousand five hundred and odd pupils who attend there daily. So interested was I to know if my children were attending the class of a teacher who was teaching anything but true Americanism in this District that I went to boy after boy who has been in her class, and every single one of them told me that there is no finer teacher in Washington than this particular Miss Ditto. I asked my own boys, who hate Bolshevism like I hate a rattlesnake, if there was anything wrong with this particular Miss Ditto, and they said they had never been under a teacher in their whole life whom they liked better and who taught them better the principles of this Government and loyalty to their country and their flag. My little daughter tells me the same thing. Why, I learned upon investigation that this Miss Ditto has spent the very best part of her life here in the District of Columbia teaching the young men and the young women of Washington.

Is her reputation, with so little investigation as this, to be wiped away on the floor of the House in a moment by such indirect accusations? Why, my distinguished friend from Washington tells us in the same breath in which he makes his charges that the principal of this school gave this matter investigation and exonerated the teacher. If he did that, why can not my friend from Washington be fair enough to this poor woman, who works hard day after day on a small salary, teaching the youth of this land, to drop his charges, unless he can bring more foundation and more basis here, and give names when he is asked for names? I say it is unfair to her and it is unfair to the teachers of this District. I want to say that I do not believe there is a man who will claim that I will mince or whitewash matters when it comes to Bolshevism. I have said on this floor—and I have been one of the few men who have said on this floor—that that teacher who was caught and adjudged guilty of teaching Bolshevism and who was suspended for one week—Miss Woods—should have been dismissed immediately from the schools and not allowed to come back. That is what I have said; and any other teacher not absolutely loyal should be dismissed. There is not a man here who believes I will wink at anything of the kind. I am perfectly willing for my children to be taught by Miss Ditto, for I sincerely believe her to be an able, efficient, loyal, deserving, patriotic teacher.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. May I repeat the few words from the report as given by the principals to the city superintendent?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman has had 17 minutes and I have only 10, and I asked him to give the name of this teacher and not leave all the teachers of the District under a cloud. I asked him to give us a little better idea of the charges. He leaves the matter up in innuendo. I would yield to him if he would put in names and facts, but I have only 10 minutes. I want to say I think the gentleman ought to be fair and withdraw these charges. I do not think he ought to be so unkind to this poor woman, who is absent and has no defense here. She can not come here and defend herself. She has been exonerated after proper investigation by the principal of the school, after the attention of the principal was directed to my friend's charges on the floor of the House some time ago. I think he ought to withdraw them, because I do not think it is fair to a teacher who has spent the best part of her life training the young men and young women of this Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be considerable of a swapping of time around here. Where is the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if I may, I yield a minute of my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the report to which I referred a bit ago, and from which I quoted, is a report made by the principal of the Central High School to the superintendent of schools in this city. The report is based on answers to questions submitted to the pupils. From that report I quote this language:

That "almost all of her pupils expressed themselves as never having left her classes with a feeling that any reflections had been cast upon our country or its Government, in comparison with any other nation, or upon its public men."

And my contention is that no child should leave her classes with the feeling that reflections have been cast upon his country, and that he should not have that sort of teaching. And the principal himself, basing his report on the answers made by the children, does not claim that it was unanimous in favor of the teacher.

He admits that there were observations of this kind and reports of this kind made by some of the children. I have no interest in the matter in any way, shape, or form other than as it concerns the welfare of this country and the children of the schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for 18 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us carries an appropriation of $300,000,000 to pay a portion of the loss incurred through the operation of the railways by the Federal Government, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD], in presenting the report, figures the total loss to the Treasury as the result of the Federal operation of the railways at $1,375,000,000. I think the gentleman from Iowa would say, if interrogated on the subject, that that was a conservative estimate. Whatever may be our opinion of the necessity of the Federal control of the railways during the war, we should not forget that it cost the American people $1,375,000,000, and that during that period the service was of a character that would not have been tolerated by the people if the railroads had been under private control and management. As it was, the people put up with all sorts and kinds of curtailments of service, all sorts and kinds of inconvenience, all sorts and kinds of disarrangement of their affairs, in the patriotic belief that it was necessary for them to do that as good citizens. The roads had been taken over by the Government and were being operated by the Government, and as good citizens they felt they must bear with the poor service and pay the high rates of Government operation.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. In what respect would that condition have been improved had the railroads remained under private control during the war?

Mr. MONDELL. It has always been my opinion that the condition would have been better in the long run if the roads had been left in private control. I think that, with legislation granting certain additional authority and removing certain restrictions, the roads would have been more cheaply and more satisfactorily operated if they had remained in private control. But I realize that is all a matter of opinion.

Mr. OLIVER. Did the gentleman make any suggestions looking to that end at the time the railroads were taken over?

Mr. MONDELL. I expressed the opinion that it was of doubtful wisdom and propriety at the time, and I have only made the statement that I have made now in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman because I admit, as we all must, that it is a matter of judgment and opinion, and I have no doubt but that those who believed in taking over the railroads and were instrumental in taking over the railroads were of the opinion that that was essential.

I still, however, adhere to my view that with certain modifications of law the roads would have been more satisfactorily handled under private control, and I think it is well that we should consider those matters and have an opinion upon them, because they have a bearing on the very large question involved as to whether or not the Government can advantageously, economically, and satisfactorily operate the railroads of the country. I do not believe that it can be done under our form of government, and it is perhaps worth while to have had this experience, as burdensome as it has been, as costly as it has been, as illustrating the difficulty of operating railroads through public agencies.

Gentlemen talk about running the Government on business principles. There never was a government run wholly and entirely on business principles, in my opinion. There may have been somewhere, sometime, an absolute autocracy which, under a very wise autocrat, was run on business principles for a very limited length of time. But under no other form can a government be run on what we are pleased to call business principles. I think everybody who has had anything to do with governmental affairs realizes that, and in some respects and in some regards it is more difficult to operate government affairs on purely business principles under a republic, under a republican form of government, than under an autocracy. That, however, is not an argument against a republican form of government. It is one of those things that go with and are attached to and belong to a government of the people, for the people, and by the people.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman has the time, will he elaborate that idea? I am really interested to know why an autocracy could make cheaper purchases and sell to greater advantage than a democracy.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, an autocrat, if he was all-wise and all-powerful, could rule without regard to this or that or the other local, temporary, or political influence which sometimes has an ill effect upon management; and if autocracy were all-wise, then autocracy could manage things in the most businesslike way. As, however, there is no such thing as an all-wise or wholly benevolent autocracy we need not give that phase of the matter consideration.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I wish the gentleman would go into that a little further.

Mr. MONDELL. I could not go into a discussion of that question now. If I had many times 18 minutes I would be glad to talk about it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If the great Creator and Preserver of the Universe, with all power and wisdom, would come down and take charge, He would make a success, would He not?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. That is the kind of an autocracy that would be a success. But we, unfortunately, do not have the benefit of the directing hand of the Infinite and All-Wise in our affairs. It is ordained that we must work out our own salvation, and we can work it out best under a government of the people, for the people, and by the people. And yet under that form, by reason of the limitations of the conditions established by that form, we can not do business, ordinary business, in what is generally known as a thorough business way, and for that reason we can not run railway systems, we can not carry on great business affairs of any sort in a satisfactory way, and the less of it we have the better for all concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so much for that. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] a little while ago referred to the demands that have been made for soldiers' bonus legislation. He expressed himself as having very serious doubt of the wisdom and propriety of that sort of legislation. My opinion and my view with regard to those matters have been well known for a long time. And yet, notwithstanding what I or the gentleman from Iowa may think in regard to the matter, I think it is quite likely that we shall have legislation before this Congress adjourns probably along the lines of the suggestions made by the American Legion; possibly with some considerable modifications. If we are to have such legislation—and I am inclined to think that a majority of the Members of this House expect it to occur and desire it to occur—let us hope that at least we shall be conservative, even as the men and the committees of the legion have been conservative compared with some plans that have been proposed. Let us hope that at least we shall not embark upon wild enterprises involving many, many millions of dollars that the men of the legion have not asked us to embark upon.

And let us also remember in that connection that if we are to legislate, even though our legislation may not involve an ultimate expenditure of more than $1,000,000,000 or a billion and a half, which, while it is an enormous sum, is very small compared with the sums involved in some of the plans that have been suggested; if we are to legislate even along the most moderate lines we can not pick the money off of the bushes. It may be there are gentlemen—no one in this presence, I hope—who would be delighted to slap the soldier boys on the back, declare that they have been instrumental in contributing a considerable sum to the income of every one of them, and not have taxed anybody to secure the money. One suggestion of gentlemen who prefer to escape responsibility for taxation, while willing to take the responsibility of voting for a bonus, is that we shall find somewhere malefactors of great wealth or those who have made large sums out of huge war profits, and take the money away from them, and thus meet this obligation. That would all be very lovely if one could invent some machinery whereby you might pick out the real profiteer, the men who have accumulated vast sums improperly, and tax their wealth and at the same time avoid confiscating the legitimate earnings of a very great many good people. I recollect when I was a boy a certain not very successful hunter, who had been unfortunate enough, through mistake, to shoot some of his neighbor's live stock, who is reported to have said he would give anything for a gun that was warranted to kill if it was a deer and miss if it was a calf. [Laughter.] Now, any gentleman who can invent that kind of a tax-raising gun would be warranted in going after alleged profits in raising the sums to pay the soldiers' bonuses; but there is not a man under the flag who has studied the subject who does not know that we have already gone to the limit and beyond in our so-called excess-profits taxes, and who does not know that now, in spite of the best efforts of those charged with the collection of these taxes to deal equitably, we are levying upon the capital of many of our citizens under the guise of profits taxes; that we are preventing the development of enterprise; that we are tying up, all over the country, legitimate development and putting a handicap on helpful enterprise by these high taxes which for the present we are not able to repeal because up to date we have not been able to bring our expenditures to a point where they can be repealed and still leave us an income sufficient to meet our outlay.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does not the gentleman think he would better have deferred that speech until after the meeting of the Republican caucus on Thursday night?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman having asked that bright question, I will yield to him time enough to answer it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Of course, the gentleman failing to answer it himself would naturally like to put it back to me, but after the meeting of the Republican caucus does not the gentleman think his speech would have been more timely and probably more appropriate and more in accord with the decision of the gentleman's party on that question?

Mr. MONDELL. Of course I must be the judge of the propriety and the timeliness of my remarks.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And therefore the gentleman has handed back to me the question that I propounded to him.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman wants something to think about let him chew this cud: It has been currently reported—I hope without sufficient ground—that gentlemen on the Democratic side are awaiting an opportunity to raise the bonus bill to the sky limit and beyond, not because they desire to aid the soldiers in that way, but because they think that would be good politics; and, having done that, then to work out some weird, fantastic form of revenue raising that might appeal to the unthinking and uninformed. I hope that is not true, but that is the current rumor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the American Legion has asked certain things. It has not demanded them, but has asked them of Congress. Personally, and as a Member from Wyoming, I have not believed in a cash bonus. But I have other responsibilities here than that of the Member from Wyoming, and one of them is to attempt to carry out the will and wish of the majority as I understand it, and I am inclined to think that there will be legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have two minutes more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope whatever legislation is enacted will be conservative. I certainly hope we shall not do more for the ex-service men than they themselves have asked. We can hardly be expected to do more than they ask. We can not honestly do more in this House than they ask. Having drawn a conservative bill, if certain gentlemen of the minority can not join with us in passing it I hope at least they will not try to ditch the thing by making it grotesque in its extravagances.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield. I have only two minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Can the majority leader give us any information as to when the bonus bill will be presented to the House?

Mr. MONDELL. No, I can not, because it is a matter that requires a considerable amount of careful study in its details, but I am sure it will be presented within a reasonable time. And having presented a reasonable proposition, I hope that we shall also provide a reasonable method of raising the revenue; that we shall not attempt to camouflage, or interpose smoke screens, or propose legislation which, while it may appeal to people who have not taken the trouble to consider the situation, will not commend itself to the sound judgment of the American people.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has referred to the program outlined by the American Legion. Does the gentleman propose to follow that program?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman now speaking has nothing whatever to do with the program, but I express the hope we shall follow the legion program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If I have any time left, I yield it to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for seven additional minutes.

Mr. GARNER. I think that will be sufficient time to answer my question. [Laughter.] The gentleman has said that he hopes the minority will not undertake to make a grotesque proposition out of the desire to comply with the request of the American Legion for legislation on this subject. I want to ask the gentleman if he is willing to take the program outlined by the American Legion?

Mr. MONDELL. I am willing to take the program as outlined by the legion as it may be presented after careful consideration by the membership of the committee to which the House has referred the subject.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, if I understand the gentleman, he is going to support whatever proposition the Ways and Means Committee bring out on this subject. That is very nice. Now, may I ask the gentleman another question? Will he give the minority an opportunity to offer a system of taxation in lieu of what he proposes to offer in his bill? He spoke of our undertaking to collect the revenue in a very uneconomical method. I want to know if the gentleman and his side of the House will give this side of the House an opportunity to offer to the country a scheme by which we can collect this money?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming will not have the decision in that matter. Speaking for himself as one Member of Congress, he says frankly that so far as he is concerned he would want to be better assured of the absolute good faith of the minority before he gave the minority any too great an opportunity to "spill the beans" or "gum the cards." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is the reason I asked the gentleman to postpone his remarks until after the Republican caucus. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming yields back four minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion to the majority. I do not think probably it is necessary to make it to the minority. The gentleman from Wyoming has suggested to you gentlemen that, in anticipation of your conference, you had better not give us the opportunity to perfect your bill, for if you do give us the opportunity to perfect this piece of legislation you will be able to collect the money from a different source than he would have you collect it from. He would put it on the backs and bellies of the American people, and we would put it on the pockets of those best able to pay. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Furthermore, he proposes to do an injustice to some soldiers, and we propose to treat them all alike. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the difference between the gentleman from Wyoming and the minority. He went on to warn you that if you trusted the minority with the opportunity to perfect this bill, there were enough honest men on your side, legislatively honest men on your side of the House, to join with the minority and put on the statute books a piece of legislation that will be a credit to the country and a service to the American soldiers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman, without knowing what the views are of the gentleman from Wyoming, except that he said he was in favor of a proposition submitted by the legion, now says that I am in favor of an unfair proposition. Does the gentleman intend to say that the legislation presented by the legion is unfair?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no; the gentleman from Wyoming does not commit himself to the program of the legion; he modifies it.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Wyoming, if he will permit me to refer to current rumor, is well aware that the bill that he has prepared, or the bill that the Republican Ways and Means Committee has prepared under his direction, takes out of the bill some 1,200,000 soldiers when there was no testimony before the Ways and Means Committee that did not say that you should treat them all alike. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I ask the gentleman if he will in his conference, when he has it with his brethren on Thursday, submit a proposition to give the House an opportunity to vote upon the proposition to include all service men in this bill, an opportunity to substitute for your proposition of a consumption tax one to take it out of those who made money out of the war while the war was on? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Iowa has two minutes remaining.

Mr. GOOD. We have nothing more, Mr. Chairman; and I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

The War Finance Corporation, as rapidly as funds become available, shall take over from the United States Railroad Administration, at par value and accrued interest, such of the bonds of the United States of the various Liberty loan issues and the Victory loan issue as are held by the said administration at the time of the approval of this act and which it does not desire to retain.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any information as to how long the Railroad Administration expects to continue functioning?

Mr. GOOD. It was the estimate of the Director General and also of the director of finance that the greater part of these settlements would be adjusted during the year, or, at any rate, settled by the 1st of next March. There is a good deal of question as to just how long it will take to settle the claims of the various carriers. There are a great many pending adjustments. There are claims made by the carriers for undermaintenance and claims made by the Railroad Administration for overmaintenance. The Director General is quite positive that these claims, as far as the Government is concerned, will balance and that they will not be called on to pay any additional sum. It is the intention of the director of finance to settle the claims as promptly as he can with the railroad companies. When it comes to the question of maintenance, the gentleman can well understand that that may involve a good many investigations. Settlements may be based on the amount expended during the Federal control as compared with the amount expended for the test period, or on some other basis.

The question is so big and involves so many roads, so much property, that personally I have no opinion in regard to it. I do think, however, that it is going to take longer than is estimated, much longer. But here are claims that must be paid; here are obligations of the Government that must be discharged. The Railroad Administration owes a great many bills. Some of the railroads are owing the Government. The only way these settlements can be made is for the Railroad Administration to have the money and be prepared to make settlements.

Mr. WALSH. From what source is the War Finance Corporation deriving its funds at present?

Mr. GOOD. The War Finance Corporation had at the last statement I have seen something over $600,000,000 of assets. The capital stock to start with was $500,000,000, all of which was appropriated out of the United States Treasury, and then the corporation was authorized to issue its notes. It has done that. I think it has retired some of its obligations. It has a large variety of investments. The hearings disclose the nature of those investments.

Incidentally, I may say to the gentleman they include $132,000,000 of time certificates issued by the Treasury Department which are drawing around 5 per cent. I assume they are investing in those because the interest on them will pay the interest on the 5 per cent notes that they have issued. More than that, they have loaned the railroads at one time something like $200,000,000. Those loans have been paid down to something between sixty and seventy million dollars. Out of this appropriation some of those roads will pay the War Finance Corporation. The gentleman is driving at the Liberty bond provision, I take it. The committee was up against the proposition of reporting out either this proposition or appropriating $90,000,000 more out of the Treasury and leaving the War Finance Corporation with its $600,000,000, $132,000,000 practically of cash, or an equivalent that it could invest in any way it saw fit under the law.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the War Finance Corporation a creature of Congress in one of the war acts which contained provisions as to its being terminated? This provision in this bill will continue that corporation as long as the Railroad Administration may think it necessary to continue its activities.

Mr. GOOD. No; the terms of the law creating the War Finance Corporation provide that it shall terminate one year after the President shall have issued a proclamation of peace.

Mr. WALSH. If the peace resolution which passed the House passes the Senate and receives the Executive signature—if one may indulge in such a violent presumption—it would terminate the War Finance Corporation one year after it was signed?

Mr. GOOD. One year after the proclamation of peace.

Mr. WALSH. That would undoubtedly be before the Railroad Administration was ready to terminate its activities.

Mr. GOOD. This provision only authorizes the War Finance Corporation as it gets the funds to purchase these bonds. These certificates are Treasury certificates, amounting in the aggregate to over $132,000,000, owned by the War Finance Corporation, are maturing every few days, and they will all mature long before a year has passed. Therefore it will be the duty of the War Finance Corporation, just as rapidly as it has the money from that source and other sources, to take up these Liberty and Victory bonds.

Mr. WALSH. Of course that eventually will revert to the Treasury and be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury, I assume. Why would it not be better and less complex to substitute for the War Finance Corporation the Secretary of the Treasury and let these bonds be taken over by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time?

Mr. GOOD. That would require an appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. It may require an appropriation, but if we made available the funds of the War Finance Corporation for that purpose it would not.

Mr. GOOD. The War Finance Corporation in this respect is practically the agent of the Secretary of the Treasury. That was the purpose of the law.

Mr. WALSH. It is a pretty free agent.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman. I think it is a dangerous thing to leave any agency of the Government handling Government funds, practically unlimited in amount, with power to invest in bonds, stocks, loans, and other enterprises. I would not object if by some means the War Finance Corporation was compelled right away to use all of its capital and purchase Liberty bonds. This is a step in that direction as far as we can go, and I think the gentleman will find that it is along the line of conserving our resources.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman any information as to the amount which would be immediately available for the purchase of these bonds?

Mr. GOOD. I have not. The gentleman means so far as cash in the hands of the War Finance Corporation is concerned?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The War Finance Corporation, if I understand the situation correctly, within the last week received something like $10,000,000 from the Illinois Central Railroad Co. It is receiving money in such large sums every day that a statement made to-day would not reveal what the condition was a few days ago.

Mr. WALSH. But this language would seek to encourage the War Finance Corporation to continue its activities and engage in enterprises or transactions which might be used as a basis for continuing this corporation long after it expires by the present legislation.

Mr. GOOD. The language was drawn in this way simply to get around any claim that might be made on the floor of the House or elsewhere that if we required them to purchase these bonds at once it might be urged that that would necessitate their throwing on the market some other securities. We did not want to do that, because we knew that within the next six months the War Finance Corporation would have much more money coming in by these certificates of indebtedness of the Treasury Department that are maturing, so that they could take them over in cash without selling a single security.

Mr. WALSH. But it says as rapidly as funds become available. They might go into all sorts of activities which would require the continuation of the War Finance Corporation for a number of years in order that funds might become available for this purpose.

Mr. GOOD. We have put in the provision here that as rapidly as funds become available, just as fast as the money comes into the War Finance Corporation, it shall be used to purchase these Liberty and Victory bonds, and hence such funds could not be used for other purposes. As I have explained to the gentleman, the $132,000,000 of short-time Treasury certificates in the vaults of the War Finance Corporation will soon mature, and within a short time it will have more money than will be necessary in cash to take over these bonds. It is likely to make collection on loans made to the railroads.

Mr. WALSH. That is true; but we are enlarging the jurisdiction or broadening the scope of the authority of the War Finance Corporation by this very paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. WALSH. Then what is the necessity for it?

Mr. GOOD. Simply to compel it to use its funds to take over these bonds, to take this investment. They already have $372,000,000 of Victory and Liberty bonds.

Mr. WALSH. The War Finance Corporation?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; purchased under the original act, and they have the right to go out and lend money to banks and purchase securities. There are a whole lot of propositions now pending before Congress which if passed would encroach upon the funds of the War Finance Corporation. It was the thought of the Committee on Appropriations that by requiring them to use their money for the purchase of Victory and Liberty bonds now owned by the Railroad Administration, which have been purchased by the taxpayers' money, it was simply to transfer to one arm of the Government that needed money from another arm of the Government that had appropriations for investment.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am impressed by the explanation of the gentleman from Iowa. I fear, however, that this paragraph is likely to be cited as the reason for continuing the War Finance Corporation beyond what was originally intended. If the gentleman thinks it is not going to interfere with the winding up of that corporation, which was provided for by the Congress as a war authority to be exercised directly in connection with the financing of the war and stabilizing matters, that the adoption of this provision will not prevent its being wound up, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. On the contrary, the gentleman from Iowa would not be in favor of it, would not have been in favor of reporting it, if he thought it would continue or extend the life of the War Finance Corporation. On the contrary, I believe it is going to shorten the life of the war-time finance corporation, and it will limit their activities, and I think, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has so well expressed it, this war agency ought to be terminated just as soon as possible to terminate it.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order for the purpose of asking a question, or rather I reserve the point of order. This War Finance Board is purely a war measure?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the distinguished chairman, should the so-called peace resolution upon which the House spent some two days' time a short time ago, if the Senate should ever take that up—by the way, could the chairman tell us whether or not the Senate has taken that up yet?

Mr. GOOD. No; I know nothing about it.

Mr. BLANTON. The purpose of our time here then has been met by passing it by the House. Is that the case?

Mr. GOOD. I know nothing about it.

Mr. BLANTON. Should the Senate some time in the future, this year or next year, decide to take that up and should pass it and it should become a law, would that do away with this Finance Corporation?

Mr. GOOD. The law creating the War Finance Corporation provides in specific terms that it shall continue until one year after the President shall have proclaimed that a state of peace exists, no matter whether that proclamation is arrived at by reason of the treaty or the resolution referred to by the gentleman. So the War Finance Corporation will continue, unless the Congress shall take some action, for a period of one year after that time.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the passing over of the point of order now would not prevent this provision, if it should be renewed on the appropriation bill later on, from being subject to the point of order later on?

Mr. GOOD. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The mere fact that we passed it by here now would not prevent the point of order being good against such a provision in another bill of this kind?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; not at all, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman if any of the appropriation carried in this bill is to be used for the six months' guaranty under the transportation act; and if so, how much?

Mr. GOOD. No; there is an indefinite appropriation carried in the transportation act covering that very item. That act was approved February 28, and we have not carried anything in the bill for the railroads under private operation, not a dollar. The whole appropriation refers to Government control and operation during the 26 months that they were under Federal control.

Mr. McKEOWN. Now, is there any statement before the committee of the gentleman relative to what action the short-line companies were taking which were not under Federal control during the 26 months to recover against the Government? Was that matter before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. GOOD. There was some discussion of that matter by Mr. Sherley. We are carrying in the bill a provision authorizing the amounts they owe the Government to be deducted from this payment to them. The gentleman remembers that section 204 of the transportation act carried an indefinite appropriation, whereby the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay these losses of the short lines, or these roads called short lines, that suffered certain losses under Federal control or because of Federal operation. Now, those losses are to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the commerce act, and certified by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Secretary of the Treasury, and on such certificate the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay them.

Mr. McKEOWN. The Congress has no further control of the appropriations in settlement of those claims for the short lines?

Mr. GOOD. Nothing except an item carried in this bill, which permits a set-off.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman that I have heard that some 200 of these companies now are coming up and filing suits against the United States for losses, although they were not under Federal control.

Mr. GOOD. Well, the transportation act makes some provision for the payment of those losses, and my recollection is that Mr. Sherley stated that those losses might aggregate as much as $25,000,000. There is an indefinite appropriation to pay them.

Mr. McKEOWN. The thing that struck me as rather strange was that we would permit those companies to come in without any restriction except passing on their claims and receiving a settlement; in other words, have the administration settle with these railroads without supervision of Congress. All other claimants against the Government are required to present their claims through the Court of Claims and have their claims satisfactorily established, and the mere fact that these railroads may have suffered some loss puts them in no worse condition than thousands of private citizens throughout the United States who have also suffered by reason of the war.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations did not go into that matter at all. It is a matter that Congress has just acted upon. There was no evidence before us, and we as a committee were only attempting to deal with the fiscal problems growing out of Federal control and problems growing out of——

Mr. McKEOWN. Was there any reason given why 15 years' payments were granted for allocation of rolling stock and equipment of railroads—why that length of time was given and why it was necessary?

Mr. GOOD. The committee went into that matter, and made inquiry as to why some cash payment was not made. Mr. Sherley has been working on the question of allocated equipment for several months. He had at one time thought that some arrangement had been about perfected whereby an equipment trust would be provided for and all of these bonds made to some equipment corporation and the bonds sold to the public. That fell through. Then the question came up as to how the railroads were going to pay for this equipment, amounting to almost $400,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. The opinion he finally arrived at was that it would be foolish to exact a cash payment and then turn around and loan the money to the railroad company that made the cash payment, taking, perhaps, some inferior security for an equipment lien, and that the better plan would be to sell the equipment to the railroads and take the equipment trust, payable in 15 payments, and that seemed to be, as he felt, the most reasonable and about the best terms he could settle this whole equipment matter upon.

Mr. McKEOWN. Who will make these settlements now between the Government and these railroads as to what they are entitled to? Shall this Railroad Administration continue to have that power?

Mr. GOOD. They have that power.

Mr. McKEOWN. And these men who are in charge have formerly been in the employment of railroads?

Mr. GOOD. The whole power is still in the hands of the President. The President has full power to settle with all these railroads. Now, the President, under the practice, has delegated that power, first to Mr. McAdoo as Director General, and then to Mr. Hines and his associates.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has Congress any control over that settlement?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. McKEOWN. The power was left to the President in the transportation act?

Mr. GOOD. No. That was the power that was given the President when the roads were turned over to the President.

Mr. McKEOWN. To make the final settlement?

Mr. GOOD. To make the final settlement.

Mr. McKEOWN. I thought that provision to make final settlement was carried in the transportation act that was recently passed and that he did not have the power in the other act to make final settlement with the railroads.

Mr. GOOD. The President has that power, and this money is under his control and the administration agents, and settlements are to be made by them.

Mr. McKEOWN. And to be made out of the appropriation in this bill?

Mr. GOOD. This bill, and an appropriation of $500,000,000 that was made when the railroads were taken over and $750,000,000 made last year and $200,000,000 more carried in the transportation act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, simply to direct the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, to what seems to be the practical effect of this language, namely, that it requires them to take over the bonds as rapidly as funds become available, but there is nothing there which would require the War Finance Corporation to make these funds available. They can decline to dispose of securities or other bonds or paper which they may have, and in that way entirely nullify the intent of this provision. Now, how, if the War Finance Corporation should not wish to do this thing, or if they felt that perhaps it would not be better to hold on to some securities they have, is this going to be of real effect?

Mr. GOOD. How can they refuse to accept money from the Secretary of the Treasury when the certificates of indebtedness which the War Finance Corporation holds mature?

Mr. WALSH. These certificates of indebtedness will be issued in the future, too.

Mr. GOOD. They will not have any power to take new certificates.

Mr. WALSH. Why not?

Mr. GOOD. Until they have taken these bonds. We worked over that with some care and with the thought in mind. The gentleman will read:

> The War Finance Corporation, as rapidly as funds become available, shall take over from the United States Railroad Administration, at par value and accrued interest, these bonds.

Now, when they get $10,000,000 of funds they can take over $10,000,000 of these bonds. They have no right to use this money that is coming in on these short-time certificates in the way of making new investments until every one of these bonds is taken over.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps so, but suppose we get the $10,000,000 for the certificates, and the Railroad Administration says, "Why, yes; we have got $6,000,000 of Victory bonds, but we wish to retain them for a little while; we do not care to dispense with them just yet, as we may be able to use them in settling up with certain claimants"?

Mr. GOOD. The Railroad Administration?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. They are anxious to let go of these bonds.

Mr. WALSH. That is the impression the committee has got. But suppose they are not anxious?

Mr. GOOD. They have some Liberty bonds there that are selling on the market for only 86 or 87 to-day. They are going to get par for them. Do you think the Railroad Administration would want to part with them?

Mr. WALSH. Then what is the need of the language in the last line, "such issues as it does not desire to retain"?

Mr. GOOD. There will be some of those bonds that railroad employees are making payments on. Those employees should not be released from their obligation to take them where they are willing to take them, and it is only where the employee claims he can not pay for them, as I understand, that the administration has been taking those over. Now, then, that was put in there so as to permit the Railroad Administration to carry out its contract and deliver those bonds. Those bonds it is proposed to have the Director General to deliver to the employee who has purchased them. That is the reason for the language.

Mr. WALSH. So that the Railroad Administration, in the gentleman's opinion, will only seek to retain bonds which have been subscribed for by employees of the railroads and which they are purchasing but have not paid for fully?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and are making payments upon. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The Interstate Commerce Commission, in certifying to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount payable to any carrier under paragraphs (f) and (g) of section 204 of the transportation act, 1920, also shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury such sums, if any, as may be due from such carrier to the President (as operator of transportation systems under Federal control) on account of traffic balances or other indebtedness. The amount so certified to be due the President, upon his request, shall be deducted by the Secretary of the Treasury from the amount so certified to be due such carrier and thereupon shall be credited by him to the appropriation made in section 202 of the transportation act, 1920. Such deductions shall be considered as a payment pro tanto of such indebtedness to the Government.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. OGDEN: Page 3, after line 3, insert: "American Printing House for the Blind: To enable the American Printing House for the Blind more adequately to provide books and apparatus for the education of the blind, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 4, 1919, $10,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane and is new legislation and not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not a deficiency, too, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, it is a deficiency, however. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, carries the balance of the authorization provided for in the act approved August 4, 1919. The deficiency bill which was approved November 4, 1919, appropriated or carried $30,000 of that authorization. Now, the $30,000 has been expended on the program to replace obsolete and worn-out machinery with new machinery and to increase the supply of books for the blind. The amount so carried in the deficiency bill was not sufficient to complete this program or carry out the purpose set out in the act of August 4, 1919; hence the amount carried in this amendment is a deficiency in the sense that it carries out the purposes of that act. It therefore appears to me that the point of order is not well taken. A deficiency exists, and there is existing law authorizing the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OGDEN] offers an amendment to the bill "to enable the American Printing House for the Blind more adequately to provide books and apparatus for the education of the blind, in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 4, 1919, $10,000." To this amendment the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order that it is not germane to the bill, or to any paragraph of the bill, and also that it is unauthorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not a deficiency, either, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. And that it is not a deficiency. The Chair has examined the bill, and there is no provision in the bill relating to the care of the blind, and therefore the Chair holds that the amendment is not germane to the bill or to any section or paragraph of the bill. For that reason the Chair sustains the point. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPROVEMENTS AND REPAIRS.

> Repairs to suburban roads: For current work of repairs to suburban roads and suburban streets, including maintenance of motor vehicles, $35,000.

Mr. HARRELD and Mr. McKEOWN rose.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. I wish to make an inquiry. We have made an appropriation of something like $225,000 recently to improve the streets running out to the improved roads of Maryland. Does that item include this same amount?

Mr. GOOD. That, as I understand, was for repaving certain roads. This item is to supply a deficiency in an appropriation of $200,000 made last year for repair of the roads in the District of Columbia that are outside of what is known as the old city of Washington. There was a balance a couple of weeks ago of about $7,000 or $8,000. Some of the roads are in a deplorable condition. They asked for $75,000 and made the suggestion that if some of these roads were not repaired and damage should result, this Government might be liable. In other words, the roads are in a very bad condition, and ought to be put in a better state of repair.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The appropriation which the gentleman refers to is for the next fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that I agree with him that the roads are in bad shape, being evidently affected by the severe winter weather. They seem to have gone to pieces quite a good deal in the outlying districts.

Mr. GOOD. I think that is so.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I wish to get some information about the item "including maintenance of motor vehicles." What is that for?

Mr. GOOD. What item does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. HARRELD. In that paragraph, line 21.

Mr. GOOD. That includes the motor trucks. It does not include passenger-carrying vehicles. It includes motor trucks and the equipment of the District of Columbia used in repairing roads.

Mr. HARRELD. Repairing roads?

Mr. GOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I presume an appropriation was made before for this same work or similar work?

Mr. GOOD. There was an appropriation in last year's District of Columbia bill for $200,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Did the bill name the streets on which the money was to be expended?

Mr. GOOD. No. That is a lump sum for repairs. It does not name the streets for repairs of this kind. If there is a permanent improvement it names the streets that are to be permanently improved.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I ask the question because sometimes the department uses up all the money that has been appropriated for it, all that Congress thought it should have, and then comes in and asks for an additional appropriation under the heading of a deficiency, when, in fact, those additional appropriations are really not a deficiency at all.

Mr. GOOD. They claim the appropriation this year was insufficient, first, because of the increased cost of labor, and then the increased number of these roads that had to be repaired, because they had not been repaired during the war. They were getting in very bad condition. Now, I know nothing about the question as to whether any preference was made in repairing some roads, and spending more money on some roads than on others, but the committee were impressed with the fact that it was absolutely necessary to make some appropriation. We cut the estimate from $75,000 to $35,000 for that purpose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I asked the question because it has occurred to me that some appropriations made under the guise of deficiencies are not deficiencies but additional appropriations. I think it can not be denied that in many instances we find the departments asking for a certain amount of money. They are allowed less money than they ask. When they take up the work they start out on a plan so large that they know the amount of money appropriated will not enable them to carry the work to the end, and when they have used up their appropriation they come and ask for additional money and call it a deficiency.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that if the heads of departments lived up to the law there could not be any such thing as a deficiency?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There is a law against creating a deficiency.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; but they do not pay any attention to it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is my complaint, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If they were compelled to live up to that law, a deficiency would be an utter impossibility. They will have to come to that some time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In many of these cases a deficiency does not actually occur, but the time when there will be a deficiency is approaching, and they come to the committee and ask for more money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

For two additional members of the commission, at the rate of $12,000 per annum each, from April 16 to June 30, 1920, inclusive; and for the amount required to increase the compensation of nine members of the commission from $10,000 to $12,000 per annum each and the secretary of the commission from $5,000 to $7,500 per annum from February 28 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, $7,004.23.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. GOOD: Page 4, line 22, after the word "inclusive," strike out the figures "$7,004.23" and insert the figures "$12,004.23."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman how he and his committee made a mistake of $5,000?

Mr. GOOD. It was simply an oversight. After the word "inclusive," in line 18, there should have been inserted "$5,000." That is the amount that it takes to pay the compensation of these two additional members of the commission. When we came to check up the total we found that sum had been inadvertently omitted.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman and his committee have the benefit of the guidance of this million-dollar clerk to whom some time ago, not by my vote, the House gave $1,000 for saving the country so much money?

Mr. GOOD. The committee has the services and the advice of very, very efficient clerks. They work day and night; last night they worked until nearly midnight. Under that kind of stress oversights of this sort are bound to creep in, no matter how efficient the clerks are.

Mr. BLANTON. They happen in the best regulated families.

Mr. GOOD. It was a mistake, frankly admitted, and we want to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Distribution of card indexes: For services of assistants at salaries less than $1,000 per annum and for piecework and work by the hour, $2,700.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. IRELAND: Page 5, after line 15, insert: "For payment to Mrs. Fannie Lackland Washington, widow of Lawrence Washington, late attendant in the Representatives' reading room of the Library of Congress, $1,250."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, as every Member of the House is quite well aware, if this amendment receives the favorable action of the House, the recipient of the amount is the widow of the late attendant in the Representatives' room in the Library of Congress.

Lawrence Washington was the last of the male line of that name born in Mount Vernon, and he was born in the room in which the Father of his Country died. He began his employment in the Library of Congress in 1897 at a salary of $900 a year. Later that was increased to $1,200 and then to $1,500, and last year he finally reached the munificent compensation of $2,000 per annum for his services. I am told by all the Members who have employed the reference library under his direction and assistance that he was a wonderfully efficient man in the service and beloved by all who knew him.

Some days ago the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS, sent to the Committee on Accounts a resolution to pay to the widow of the deceased the usual compensation granted by the House to its employees of six months' salary and $250 for funeral expenses.

The late Lawrence Washington was not technically in the employ of the House, and the Committee on Accounts, by whose direction and authority I act in offering this amendment, sought not to create a precedent in this regard; and I think it was the sentiment of the entire committee who were present that it should be offered on some appropriation bill, and that no objection would be made to it, but that they did not care to have it brought in as a report from the Committee on Accounts and thereby set a precedent of that sort. I am sure that our sense of chivalry, justice, and equity will not allow us to take any other than a favorable action on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I would make the point of order against and oppose this amendment. But I can not find it in my heart to oppose this one. I am one of the Members who was intimately acquainted with Mr. Washington. I am one of the recipients of his many kind courtesies and helpful assistance. Mr. Washington had, on one occasion especially, stayed in that library over yonder until half past 3 a. m. assisting me in getting up some data. He has worked with me there several times until past midnight. An employee of the Government, working on a salary of $2,000, who showed that much interest in Government work—I think this is a very small tribute to him. He was a man who loved his work. He was a man who took pride in it. He was a man who felt honored to be efficient in his work and was there ready to serve any Member day and night when called. I can not oppose this amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. While Mr. Washington was not technically an empolyee of this House, he was, in point of fact, an employee that served the membership of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; as a matter of fact and in spirit he was an employee in the service of the Members of this House. I do not believe there was a Member who ever asked assistance whose request he ever turned down. I hope the amendment will pass.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think this amendment presents a very bad precedent, but I hope it never will be used as a precedent. There are so many circumstances surrounding the whole situation, so many Members of the House have felt the justice of it, in view of the fact that Mr. Washington in his lifetime received a salary altogether inadequate for the service he performed, in view of the fact that he was the only male descendant bearing the name of Washington, the first President of the Republic—there has been so much sentiment in favor of it and so many Members have seen me in regard to it, suggesting that I would not make a point of order, that I can not oppose it; but I hope it will never be used, and should never be used, as a precedent in asking Congress to make an appropriation in this manner for the family of an employee of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for war-risk insurance patients and other beneficiaries of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $7,666,187.14.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 19, insert the following: "Miscellaneous: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act for the relief of the estate of John M. Lea, deceased,' approved April 7, 1920, $6,883.31."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the act approved April 7, 1920, reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, in full settlement of the following claim, to the Nashville Trust Co., administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo of the estate of John M. Lea, deceased, late of Nashville, Tenn., the sum of $6,883.31, that being the amount found due by the Court of Claims for rents collected by the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, during the Civil War from the tenants of said John M. Lea, which rents were paid into the Treasury of the United States, as reported to Congress in Senate Document No. 48, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Under the law the Comptroller of the Treasury has held that inasmuch as that language does not provide for an "appropriation out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," that it was not an appropriation. It was clearly the intention of Congress to appropriate the money. The act authorized and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to pay this sum. Now, this amendment is to correct the defect in that language in the act of April 7, 1920, and I am directed by the committee to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

Denver, Colo., Mint: For wages of workmen and other employees, $16,500.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the section. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the term "and elsewhere" with respect to clerical help is not a new clause.

Mr. GOOD. No; it is the same as the original appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. The Health Department has an appropriation for clerical help elsewhere?

Mr. GOOD. A great deal of the clerical help is outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after line 4, insert the following:

"Public buildings—Relief of contractors: For an additional amount for the payment of claims of contractors, etc., arising under the act entitled 'An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors of the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes,' approved August 25, 1919, as amended, $500,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill nor to any paragraph in it, that it is new legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. It was eliminated formerly on a point of order from another bill.

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I made the point of order to this same provision in another bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the situation with regard to this appropriation is this: There is an appropriation this year of $500,000 to pay these contractors. An act was passed, approved August 25, 1919, providing that certain contractors who had contracts for Government buildings, if they sustained loss because of war conditions on contracts that were approved before we went into the war, but which had to be completed during the war, should be reimbursed for actual losses sustained because of war conditions. That is the law. We appropriated $500,000 for that purpose. I am placed in a rather embarrassing position with regard to this item. The item would have been put in the bill but for the fact that the committee desired to save the cost of printing. When it was brought up in the committee I was requested to bring it up on the floor of the House. The only way that it is subject to a point of order, under the ruling of the Chair, is that it is not germane.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Ghairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Another deficiency bill is to be brought in.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It may be incorporated in that bill.

Mr. GOOD. Let me explain the matter to the gentleman a little further. The estimates for the amount now pending before the sundry civil appropriation bill subcommittee are for $1,750,000. The amount that we appropriate here will be deducted from that appropriation. The mere fact that it should go out here will embarrass to a considerable extent certain firms that are now on the threshold of bankruptcy.

Mr. BLANTON. I would have no objection to the amendment if it did not provide for payment for contracts that were not finished in accordance with the terms of the contract, but the amendment, as I caught it, authorized payment for losses where the contractors failed to carry out their contracts, in finishing construction.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; they can not be paid anything except on those contracts that are completed in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. On reading the amendment, I see that is so, and I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee if this appropriation of $7,566,000 is intended to cover the expenses of some of the service men who have been placed by the Health Service in private hospitals and institutions.

Mr. GOOD. Yes. This appropriation is available for the operation of Public Health Service hospitals, including marine hospitals, and also for men who are in contract hospitals.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is it possible out of this appropriation to construct hospitals for the men?

Mr. GOOD. It is not. This appropriation is merely a maintenance item.

Mr. BARBOUR. And it will take care of those who are placed in private institutions?

Mr. GOOD. That is correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES HOUSING CORPORATION.

Washington, D. C., Government hotel for Government workers: For maintenance, operation, and management of the hotel and restaurant therein, including personal services, $275,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I want to ask the chairman if we are to expend $275,000 each quarter for the maintenance of this Government hotel for civilian workers?

Mr. GOOD. For the months of April, May, and June; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And the chairman believes that where these hotel buildings are furnished by the Government, where the furniture in them and all the paraphernalia and everything else—the cooking department and everything—are furnished by the Government, we have to appropriate here every three months $275,000 to carry on the institution for the civilian workers of this Government? Is that his plan as an economist in this House?

Mr. GOOD. That is the plan of the Department of Labor in conducting the hotel.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think we ought to tear down those buildings and throw them into the Potomac River and save this money, rather than carry on an expense that costs us a million one hundred thousand dollars a year over and above the income from it?

Mr. GOOD. The Potomac is a very beautiful river, and I should hate to see its beauty interfered with by depositing those buildings in it. [Laughter.] I will say this to the gentleman from Texas: Congress, about eight months ago, provided by law that all the receipts from the operation of this hotel should be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. Now, they pay all their receipts into the Treasury. According to the statement made before the committee in the operation of this hotel there will be during the year a profit of around $25,000. It was necessary to make an appropriation at the beginning of the year to carry on that hotel. There are about 1,700 Government clerks, young ladies, who are housed and furnished two meals a day in those buildings. We appropriated $700,000 for that purpose. They will run out of funds entirely the 1st of April, and this is to make an appropriation for their subsistence.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the chairman remember the statement put in the report on the bill by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] some time ago, showing the enormous salaries the employees of this housing department were receiving, allowed them by the Secretary of Labor, and the legislation doing away with the housing department? The gentleman remembers that report, does he not?

Mr. GOOD. It has not become a law yet.

Mr. BLANTON. But it passed this House last December. Has the gentleman made any investigation to find out just what kind of salaries these people are drawing now in connection with this hotel business?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; we have had a full list of the salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. What are those salaries?

Mr. GOOD. They run all the way up to $5,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Do the cooks and waiters get $5,000 a year?

Mr. GOOD. No; they do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, men performing service less valuable than cooks and waiters, in the report made by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], were drawing even up to $10,000, allowed them by the Secretary of Labor. One of them, I think, drew as high as $10,000. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if I am mistaken?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; but the gentleman is mistaken in the statement that there are any now who are getting that much salary.

Mr. BLANTON. But it was in the gentleman's report.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. I think one lacked about $2.50 of getting $10,000.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not at the moment recall the exact amounts, but they were too much, and I think some are now getting too much. I am in hearty accord with the gentleman's criticism, but I do not care to discuss the matter now because we are going to have a conference on that bill in the next two or three days.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to end this monkey business?

Mr. LANGLEY. I am going to try to help do it.

Mr. BLANTON. We should dispense with these high-salaried employees down there drawing that kind of a salary.

Mr. LANGLEY. I agree with the gentleman, and I am going to try to help secure the enactment of a law that will prevent the payment of salaries in excess of what the service rendered deserves.

Mr. GOOD. The committee has given less money than was asked for the rest of the year. There is a bill pending, as the gentleman knows, in conference for the purpose of turning this whole organization over to the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLANTON. And it has not been pigeonholed at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. GOOD. I am not familiar with the history of that bill.

Mr. BLANTON. We passed it so long ago that most of us had forgotten all about it, but I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. There has been some delay, due to conditions that I shall be glad to explain when I bring the conference report up in the House.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do that only to say this in reply to what the gentleman from Texas has said, that I know very little as to the report to which the gentleman refers having been made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY]; but the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations would indicate that the Government hotels under the present management are being economically conducted. There is no evidence of any excessive salary being paid at this time, and so far as the Government continuing in the hotel business, Miss James, who is now in control of it, stated she is personally opposed to the Government continuing in the business. The statement presented to the committee by Miss James justifies entirely the action of the House in appropriating this amount.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Is it the purpose of the Government to abandon those buildings down there entirely, or just abandon the hotel part of it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I regret I am not in position to answer the gentleman. That depends in great measure on the legislation which is pending and which has been referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Botanic Garden.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. GOOD: Page 6, strike out line 23 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"LEGISLATIVE.

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

"To pay the widow of William J. Browning, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey, $7,500.

"BOTANIC GARDEN."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13677, the deficiency appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. On that I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ALMON, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. WELTY, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LUHRING, for 10 days, on account of business.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS SIGNATURE.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 12581. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between the said States.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4163. An act to incorporate the Roosevelt Memorial Association; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11578. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4073. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, April 21, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that we feel the weight of responsibility for that eternal vigilance which is the price of our liberties. We thank Thee that in addressing ourselves to the high office of this place we are doing so with a sense of our tremendous responsibility, and we seek the guidance of the changeless and unerring God that Thy law may be the law of our land and Thy will wrought out in all the work and labor of our hands. Bless us as a Nation and people and make us a blessing to the world. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 4073. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City; and

H. R. 11578. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the County Sligo Benevolent and Protective Association, of Boston, Mass., praying for the good offices of the Senate of the United States in securing the release of political prisoners in Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of Holland Camp, No. 38, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Michigan, of Holland, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension soldiers of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the City Commission of Kalamazoo, Mich., praying for an increase in salaries of postal employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Adcraft Club of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to impose certain specified taxes on advertising, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Federation of Labor of Detroit, Mich., praying for an investigation of the activities of the Bureau of Immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 843, International Association of Machinists, of Detroit; of Local Lodge No. 82, International Association of Machinists, of Kalamazoo; and of the Federation of Labor of Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the parole of Federal prisoners, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 530) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4205) to amend section 4, chapter 1, of Title I of an act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, as heretofore amended by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 86 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, to provide for additional judges, and for other judicial purposes," approved March 3, 1909, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 531) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 4258) granting a pension to James Black (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING (for Mr. POINDEXTER):

A bill (S. 4259) to provide further for the relief of war minerals producers, and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4260) for the relief of the Acme Die Casting Corporation, of New York City, N. Y.;

A bill (S. 4261) for the relief of the Sirio Match Co., of New York City, N. Y.;

A bill (S. 4262) for the relief of Fairbanks, Morse & Co., of New York City, N. Y.;

A bill (S. 4266) for the relief of the William Wrigley, jr., Co. (Inc.), of New York City, N. Y.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4267) creating a commission on the racial question; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 4268) granting a pension to Theodosia Benner (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4269) for the relief of Orlando O. Allen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4270) for the relief of J. H. Orr (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 4271) to reimburse D. H. Carpenter, postmaster at Seddon, Ala., for money and stamps stolen from said post office at Seddon, Ala., and repaid by him to the Post Office Department; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4272) to confirm the right, title, and interest of the Peoples' Investment Co. (Inc.), of the State of Louisiana, in certain lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment providing that immediately upon official notification of the death, from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct, of any officer or enlisted man of the regular Navy or regular Marine Corps the Paymaster General of the Navy shall pay to the widow, child or children, or other dependent relative an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the date of his death, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. NEW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WOLCOTT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3219) extending the benefits of the general pension laws to members of the Eighth, Twentieth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth, Thirty-first, Thirty-second, and Thirty-third Regiments, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

THE AMERICAN CREED.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement in reference to the American creed, which has been made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. It is a very brief and terse statement.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Senator SPENCER, of Missouri, in response to a request from a prominent woman's club in St. Louis, Mo., as to his conception of the creed of America and what it meant to him, replied:

"'To me the creed of America is: A country founded upon absolute justice to all, with the door of opportunity open wide and with facilities for general education everywhere available; a place where the fullest liberty prevails and where every man and woman is equal before the law.

"'This creed means to me: A thrilling pride in the glorious history which has established it, and loyalty to the principles which it declares, and a determination, by every means in my power, that it shall be transmitted to the next generation untainted and unweakened.'"

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13677. An act making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McNary	Spencer
Ball	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Swanson
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Thomas
Chamberlain	King	Nugent	Trammell
Comer	Knox	Phelan	Underwood
Culberson	Lenroot	Phipps	Warren
Curtis	McCormick	Pittman	Wolcott
Dial	McCumber	Reed
France	McKellar	Sheppard
Gerry	McLean	Smoot

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KELLOGG, and Mr. OVERMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. OWEN, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. LODGE, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. PAGE, Mr. KEYES, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the committee amendments may be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after the word "duty," to insert "and every person who served 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom," so as to make the section read:

That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, and every person who served 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, and who is now in receipt of, or entitled to receive under existing law, a pension of less than $50 per month, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to have some information from the Senator having charge of the bill regarding that amendment. It seems to be very comprehensive in its character. The bill, of course, was introduced to cover a certain class of pensioners.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to include the veterans of the Mexican War—what few of them are left—and their widows. If there is a real reason for the increase of the pensions of the veterans of the Civil War, owing for the most part to the increase in the cost of living, which is due entirely to the action of the Government itself in the inflation of the currency and in the methods of providing for the recent war, then it would apply to the same extent to the few survivors of the Mexican War and their widows. This amendment is to include those within its provisions.

Mr. THOMAS. That, of course, accounts for the first phrase of the amendment; but I am particularly inquiring about the words "or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation."

Mr. McCUMBER. That is exactly the way the law now reads, and has read for some time, and it has been the basis of the law providing for pensions to Mexican War veterans. So really the only change is the inclusion of those now drawing pensions under the pension laws relative to Mexican soldiers and their widows in the increase provided for in this bill.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I understand the meaning of this amendment, and particularly the words to which the Senator from Colorado last invited the attention of the chairman of the committee. As I understand the Senator, the words "or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto" are found in other enactments dealing with the subject of pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are found in the pension laws relative to pensions for soldiers who served in the Mexican War. They are not written into the pension laws relative to any other class of pensioners. The rule indicated by those words has been followed with reference to Mexican War soldiers; in other words, they did not have to be in Mexico, provided they were serving on the coast of Mexico or on the frontier or on ships adjacent thereto, and were actually in the war. The number is so almost infinitesimal now that it seems to me that we ought not to attempt to change the old rule.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Do I understand that the courts have ruled that unless a man was actually in Mexico he did not serve in the War with Mexico?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not suppose the courts have so ruled at all, but the provision referred to has been the law enacted heretofore, and that portion is simply recopied into this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think in connection with the recent World War, where we give relief to all those who served in the war with Germany, that under the ruling of the department only those would be entitled to relief who served in Germany?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this question came up years ago, and I know that the auditor held that no pension could be paid to any Mexican War veteran under the law unless he had actually served in Mexico during the war. So the law was written as it appears in the pending amendment; and while I have always thought that the wording was rather strange, at least it is the wording that placed on the pension list veterans of the Mexican War who did not actually go into Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. In other words, the Senator thinks, as I do, that the words were unnecessary but, nevertheless, were put in the law on account, I think, of a ruling of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about it.

Mr. THOMAS. The policy of Congress, then, is practically this, is it not, that in legislation a man is construed to be a veteran of the Mexican War whether he served in Mexico or not, if he served on the coast or the frontier or at home?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; if he was on his way, although the war ended before he reached Mexico, if he served 60 days, which is the limitation fixed for a pension as applied to the Mexican War veteran, he would receive his pension.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is to say, the law has been broadened to such a degree that a man who was en route when the war ended is entitled to a pension in the same degree that the man who in the Mexican War bore the brunt of the fighting.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just exactly the same as the soldiers in the war of 1917 who never got an opportunity to get over, but were in camps in the United States or were on their way over, receive exactly the same treatment under all our pension laws as though they had been upon the battle front.

Mr. THOMAS. I know. They are the ones who are now clamoring loudest for a bonus.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think they are clamoring so much as a great many politicians think they are.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be that I am one of the politicians who think so. I can not think otherwise, in view of the mail which I get, some of which is personal and some of which is impersonal.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator must remember that he gets his mail only from the few who do wish it. There were nearly 5,000,000 altogether, and the most of them are not writing.

Mr. THOMAS. The few who do wish it make the most noise, if they are but few only, and it is those who make the noise who successfully influence legislation. I shall not oppose this amendment, although when the time comes I intend to say something about the bill; but I can not at present avoid the impulse of contrasting the compensation which we give to a man who has done virtually nothing with the compensation given to a man who has done everything. Blessed is the man who is on his way to fight, for he shall not be forgotten when pensions are distributed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, last June there were, I think, 215 Mexican veterans left on the rolls. I assume that probably there are not 100 of them left to-day. Now, it may be that there are one or two or three or four of those old veterans of the Mexican War who came under this rule that was established in the law to which objection is now taken.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not objecting.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would the Senator withdraw from them their pensions at the present time?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, no, Mr. President. I am not objecting, and I would not withdraw the pension if I could. Of course, I could not; but——

Mr. McCUMBER. Then would the Senator prevent their pensions being increased if there was a demand and real justice in the increase?

Mr. THOMAS. The difficulty with this sort of legislation is the precedent which it sets for millions who are to come. There is where the Treasury will be sensibly affected, and I criticize it because of that fact. It would be surprising to me if there were 500 men living who were engaged in the Mexican War, even to the extent of wishing that they might get into it. That generation is virtually gone. I do not intend to make any objection to it, among other reasons because the Senator informs me that he has used the phraseology of existing law, but it does supply ground for comment in the future regarding our manner of pension legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Mexican War was in 1846. That is 74 years ago, and if there was a soldier in that war 16 years old he must be 90 years old at the present time. I doubt whether there is a soldier of the Mexican War living who is less than 88 years old. Most of those that are left are over 90 years old, but there are so very few of them left that they are hardly to be considered, and they can not live more than a year or two longer at the most.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to ask my colleague a question, but I will address my inquiry to the chairman of the committee.

My colleague has stated, and the chairman has just stated, that this provision is to deal with "soldiers of the Mexican War," "veterans of the Mexican War." The phrases were used interchangeably. As I understand, this provision is to deal with men who were in the military or naval service of the Government at any time during the period covered by the War with Mexico, whether they rendered any military or naval service in and about Mexico or in connection with the war or not.

That is to say, if there were persons in the Army and the Navy, stationed in Maine or in California, or in the Territory of Montana, where there were Indian tribes, and who were not affected in the remotest degree by the progress of the war or the war itself, had nothing to do with it, rendered no service whatever, and were wholly disconnected from it, they would receive the benefits provided by this bill. If I am in error, I shall be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the amendment speaks for itself. It says:

> And every person who served 60 days or more in the War with Mexico.

That alone might have been construed as meaning only those who were actually on Mexican soil; and therefore it was amended to make it clear that those who had taken part and who had enlisted and become soldiers of the United States in the war against Mexico would be entitled to the pension, even though they may not have reached Mexico; and so it goes on to say, "or on the coasts." The man must have served in the war either on the coasts or frontier of Mexico or in the interior. He might have been stationed along the frontier in the United States to prevent raids; or, if he had enlisted and was in the Army of the United States and was en route to Mexico during the war with that nation, and then, because the war closed without his assistance, he did not get there, he would not be cut off from his pensionable status. It does not refer to those who stayed at home, because they were neither serving in Mexico, nor under the colors on the coasts of Mexico, nor protecting the borders of Mexico.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, his construction of this language and the construction placed upon preceding legislation by the Pension Bureau is that, in order to obtain a pension under this bill or under preceding legislation, the beneficiary must have actually served in Mexico or have rendered military or naval service upon the coasts or frontier of Mexico.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it is not limited to that. It applies also to the man who had started on his journey to perform such service.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator state that it will not be construed to include persons who were stationed—if I may be permitted to refer to the same illustration again—in Montana or in other parts of the United States guarding railroads or looking after the Indian tribes or doing mere garrison duty in Army camps?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it has been so construed. Of course, that would be a construction that would include every one of the Regulars in the United States Army during that war. I do not understand that any such construction has ever been given to it, but, on the contrary, a very limited construction was given to it, so that unless the soldier was actually in Mexico he could not draw a pension, and the law was changed so that it would include those who were actually serving in that war, on the coasts of Mexico, on the frontier, or who had enlisted and were en route to the front. I do not understand that it has ever been applied outside of that.

Mr. SMOOT. Never.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the policy of many of our statesmen, not to say politicians, has been and still is to give pensions to all who were in the military or naval service of the Government during the Civil War and all other wars, whether they were within a thousand miles of any battle field or not, whether they were exposed to any danger or not or suffered any disability by reason of such service. It does not seem to be the policy to reward men for valorous conduct upon the battle field or compensate them for injuries received or disabilities incurred while serving and defending their flag and country. The policy seems to have been—and the same thought seems to possess the minds of politicians and statesmen nowadays, if I accurately interpret the situation—to give pensions to every person who was in the military or naval service of the United States during the entire period of the Civil War, whether he was drafted or volunteered or took the place of another for a bounty or subsidy paid, whether he is rich or poor, whether he needs a pension or whether he does not require it.

The question of wounds or injuries or disabilities is wholly unimportant. Everyone who can make claim to a few days' connection with the military or naval branch of the Government is to be pensioned. The receipt of a pension is no badge of actual military or naval service; it is no evidence of struggle upon the battle field; it furnishes no presumption of wounds or injuries or disabilities received or incurred in defending our country.

That is a policy that undoubtedly commends itself to some people, but I have not been able to reconcile my views with the justice or wisdom or righteousness or patriotism of a policy of that character. Many soldiers of the Civil War have repeatedly declared in the past that pensions should not be paid merely because of a few days' service in the Army, but that the widows and the orphans of those brave men who gave their lives upon the battle field should be cared for and the wounded and disabled should receive pensions. No patriotic American differs with this view. Its justice and humanity appeal to all persons. Our country should bind up the wounds and care for those who have battled for its perpetuity. There is no disposition to evade this duty. But little by little this just and patriotic view has been abandoned, the question of service and sacrifice for country has been ignored, and the position taken that the Treasury was within the reach of all persons who were in any manner connected with the Army, whether they actually served in war or were wounded or suffered disabilities by reason of military or naval service. And the principle was further extended so that all manner of relatives and dependents of those who had been in the Army were to receive pensions.

Under the accepted policy the Government has been compelled to pay in pensions growing out of the Civil War alone more than $5,000,000,000. By the terms of this bill $65,000,000 will be added to the enormous annual budget provided for the beneficiaries tracing their claims for pensions to the Civil War. Last year Congress appropriated more than $220,000,000 for pension claims of Civil War beneficiaries. Millions were also paid to soldiers and sailors who served in the present Great War, and to their families and dependents.

The Senator will recall that a number of years ago President Garfield declared that $27,000,000 would be the greatest amount appropriated for any one year for Civil War pensions, and that when this peak was reached the amounts called for annually would rapidly diminish. Mr. President, that sum is a mere bagatelle. It now is insignificant measured by the demands and by the amounts actually appropriated. We passed the fifty-million mark, then seventy-five millions, one hundred millions, one hundred and fifty millions, two hundred millions, two hundred and twenty millions, and now this bill appropriates sixty or seventy millions more. Three hundred millions of dollars are demanded to be paid during the coming fiscal year as Civil War pensions, and this notwithstanding the fact that as the years have gone by the great Army of the Republic has diminished in number until there are comparatively few survivors.

As I now recall, the number of survivors is 270,000. But as stated, the fewer the soldiers living the greater the amount appropriated. The country was startled when the Civil War pension list called for $50,000,000 annually. The surprise and indeed bewilderment increased when the amount demanded was $100,000,000. When it reached over $220,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the country could not credit the report.

Now we propose to add $65,000,000 additional; and, of course, this is not the end. There is no terminus in sight, and there will be excuses and pretexts for making appropriations which will augment the present huge sum.

Mr. President, as I have indicated, the American people are proud of the heroic services of the Civil War veterans. The battle fields of the Civil War will never be forgotten, and the brave men who then fought and died have an enduring fame. A grateful people will care for their widows, and there have been generous responses to the requests of the veterans who received wounds or incurred disabilities in the line of service. Pensions for these classes all Americans most earnestly approve of.

But there is a feeling that the pension laws have gone too far, that unworthy ones have been protected, and that the list of beneficiaries has been too greatly extended.

I have heard many criticisms of a system which pensioned men who rendered no service, who were exposed to no danger, who were absent from their homes but a few days and then under such circumstances and conditions as to constitute a recreation or, at least, an interesting journey.

And the criticisms have been more severe when they related to the hundreds of thousands of relatives, direct and remote, of some who were never wounded and never saw a battle field or rendered an hour of real military service.

But the criticisms and opposition failed to interfere with the growing demand for pensions. The greater the opposition the larger the appropriations. It might be pertinent to inquire whether the fact that there were hundreds of thousands of voters had anything to do with the appropriations, increasingly large, which were secured.

But it is idle, Mr. President, to oppose pension legislation. Organizations strong and insistent demand it. Many of the people are quiescent and do not understand the staggering demands made upon the Federal Treasury. Indeed, I sometimes think that the people like huge appropriations to be made. The advocates of economy receive but little encouragement and often much abuse. To obtain a great appropriation is to popularize the public servant who is thus successful. But there will be an awakening some day. The looting of the Treasury will not always be a popular pastime. We are now pension mad and bonus mad; we have got so into the habit of spending millions and billions that we seem to be laboring under a species of insanity. We refuse to economize, to practice the virtue of saving. We are prodigal to the limit of criminality. Spend and spend more is the slogan of the hour. We invent pretexts, if good reasons fail, for appropriating public moneys. We waste money in river and harbor bills, in legislation dealing with the Army and the Navy. If we can not expend it for the various departments of the Government, if we can not expend it by keeping in Washington 50,000 more clerks than the public service requires, if we can not expend it through the extravagance of executive agencies and instrumentalities of the Government, we can open the floodgates of the Treasury and pour out the little remaining, and then issue more bonds and tax the people for pensions and bounties and bonuses and largesses and various forms of gratuities.

Mr. President, bills are being introduced almost daily in either the House or the Senate, calling for hundreds of millions of dollars to meet pensions and demands for bonuses and compensation for millions who entered the military or naval service of the Government during the recent European war. It would seem that there is no regard for the public welfare in some quarters. It has been said by some that the high idealism of this war and the spiritual element that guided the American people during the mighty struggle have departed, leaving us to be carried by the tide of selfishness and materialism. I can not believe this indictment to be well founded. We will still fight for our ideals, and in these days of readjustment not forget the mission of our country and the obligations resting upon us. But it does look as though we had become hysterical upon some questions, and were pushing on toward danger lines. We follow too readily the fallacies of doctrinaires and those who would transform this Republic into an oppressive bureaucracy or a decadent socialism. Some persons are preaching the destruction of the States, the assumption by the Federal Government of all authority, and the utilization of the same to build up a mighty, consolidated, socialistic Government. All persons who reach a certain age are to be pensioned by the Federal Government. And the socialistic forms are to be fitted over our political and economic conditions. During the un-American spasms which affect us at times, we become extremists and approve false principles. We are spending hundreds of millions for military and naval pensions; we are creating a formidable civil pension roll, and the demands will increase for still further pensions. Will we have millions of pensioners to be supported by the toiling masses? Will we increase the list of Government employees to the extent of millions and then pension them? It is time that we examined our course and repudiated the many dangers that will result from influences now exercised to control the policies of our country.

I realize that objection to this bill, and to retirement bills, and to pension bills, and to pork-barrel bills, and to extravagant appropriation bills will not avail at this time. We are distempered and suffering from ailments for which no specific is now sought. The demand is to get the money out of the Treasury and to put in more in order that it may be taken away. The stupendous deficits we are creating awaken no apprehensions, and we go on spending as if the Treasury was without a limit.

Since this bill was called up for consideration a moment ago, I picked up the RECORD of yesterday and my eyes fell upon a most admirable presentation of some cognate features of this legislation by the distinguished Representative from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House. At the risk of wearying the chairman of the committe and Senators, I am going to read a few excerpts from that statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, of course, he does not wish the Senate to understand that Mr. GOOD's speech had reference to this bill? It was simply aimed at the bill which we will soon have before us, giving about $2,000,000,000 to the soldiers of 1917.

Mr. KING. If anything I said carried that impression, of course, I want to disclaim intending it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator used the words "this legislation," and I wanted it to be clear that he did not intend to apply his remarks to this bill.

Mr. KING. I am very glad the Senator called my attention to that, because I disclaim intending to directly link these remarks of Mr. GOOD with this particular legislation, but his address is relevant and pertinent to the consideration of the measure now before us. His remarks were general in character, but referred to pension legislation. He said:

> The second year after the close of that war—
>
> Referring to the Civil War—
> a period corresponding to the time we now occupy with regard to the close of this war, we paid out for all purposes * * * $21,000,000 for the soldiers of that war.

I presume he included in that statement the sailors. He continued:

> In the twenty-fourth year after that war was over we paid out $92,000,000 during the year in pensions, hospital treatment, and the administration of soldier legislation. Last year, the first time we had reached the mark of more than $200,000,000, our total appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1919, for the soldiers and sailors exclusive of the late war and the Spanish-American War, including administration, was $223,000,000.

At that rate of progress in 25 years from now we may be paying three or four hundred millions of dollars for the survivors of the Civil War and their alleged dependents and progeny to the nth generation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Did I understand the Senator to say that in 25 years we would be paying out four or five hundred million dollars to survivors of the Civil War.

Mr. KING. That is not exactly what I said. This is what I stated: That at that rate of progress in 25 years we would be appropriating four or five hundred millions of dollars to the survivors of the Civil War and their alleged dependents and progeny.

Mr. McCUMBER. The average age of the present survivors of the Civil War is about 77 years, and I do not think there will be a great many of them left in 25 years.

Mr. KING. I grant that. But that will not deter men and women throughout the country from making demands upon Congress to grant bounties and pensions. I am informed that organizations are being effected, if they have not been completed, upon the part of the descendants of the Civil War veterans, and others who seek pensions through them, in order to secure appropriations and pensions and gratuities and bounties and largesses and bonuses from the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has reference to civil pensions?

Mr. KING. I refer to pensions which will be demanded by persons who link themselves in some manner to persons whose names appear upon the rolls of the Army and Navy Departments.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has no idea that that will ever happen unless there is a general civil pension law?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I believe that even now persons are receiving pensions because of alleged relationship to individuals who served in the Civil War, who in all good conscience should not take money from the Treasury of the United States. But it would be foolish to prophesy as to what the American Congress will do in the matter of creating a civil pension list.

I hope that the American people will not pervert this Government into a huge pension machine and lay burdens upon the producers which will be unbearable. As I have indicated, I hope there will be an awakening, that the true democratic spirit will control the people, and that they will not build up a class of pensioners who will eat out the substance of the people.

If the demand for socialistic legislation shall swell in volume during the next few years as it has these last few years, and if we go more and more to Germany for an example in government and in administrative law, I would not hesitate to say that we will be paying civil pensions to millions as well as to those who are the descendants of persons who rendered military service.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to ask the Senator how many years the present law granting pensions has been in operation?

Mr. KING. I do not recall the first pension law which was passed following the Civil War, but it was immediately after. That law has been amended and supplemented upon numerous occasions since, and the last general pension law was enacted in June, 1918.

Mr. DIAL. Always increasing?

Mr. KING. Always increasing. And let me say to my friend from South Carolina that when the bill which became a law in June, 1918, was under consideration, both in the House and in the Senate, representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic, and, perhaps, those who were not members of that organization but who had been in the military service of the Government during some part of the Civil War, appeared before the committees and made strong and positive statements to the effect that that was the last time any increase would be demanded.

Let me call attention to the report made by the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator McCUMBER, upon the present bill, in which he refers to the statements made before the committee. In the report the Senator states:

> The act of June 10, 1918, carried a most substantial increase of pension to all beneficiaries covered by its provisions, and with the continuation of the policy of special pension legislation to meet extreme cases not adequately covered by the general laws, it was believed that no further general legislation would be necessary to fulfill all governmental obligation toward the remaining veterans of the Civil War.

Here is the point to which I referred a moment ago, continuing from the report:

> In the hearings antedating the enactment of this law it was stated by officers of the Grand Army of the Republic that this would be the last call upon the generosity of the Government in behalf of these soldiers, their widows, and dependents. This statement has often been quoted and suggested as an estoppel by those who oppose a further increase in pension legislation. There might be some force to this argument had not the Government itself, by its financial and administrative policies, so decreased the normal purchasing value of the currency of the country as to leave the recipients of this increased pension in a far worse condition than they were when the legislation was enacted.
> Had the Government by a general law increased the pensions of these soldiers from a $20 to a $30 per month stipend, and in the same law provided that this $30 should be paid in Mexican dollars worth but 50 cents in American money, thus in effect reducing the pension to $15, this manifest wrong and injustice would have called for immediate correction. And yet this is exactly what has resulted indirectly through governmental action and policies.
> * * * * * * *
> It may be said that all the people suffer alike from this deplorable condition.

Namely, the inflation, I suppose, to which the Senator refers—

> This, however, is not the case. Labor has increased in price about 300 per cent since war was declared—

And so forth.

The logic of my distinguished friend the Senator from North Dakota is somewhat striking and original.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose the Senator notices the assumption upon which that argument must be based, which is that the purpose of a pension is to support the beneficiary; that is to say, that it should be sufficiently large to meet the expenses of living and make him independent of work. Of course, if that is so, then the $50 a month proposed is a mere farce, and it ought to be four or five times that amount.

Mr. KING. It would seem that the contention of the Senator from Colorado is correct. The argument of the Senator from North Dakota seems to have been that there was a contractual relation between the Government and the pensioners and that the appropriation was made for the purpose of supporting those who were the beneficiaries of the pension system and made pursuant to the terms of a contract; but it is a rather remarkable suggestion that if the Government makes an appropriation or incurs an obligation to be carried out and executed in futuro or covering a long period of years, and there is any change in the fiscal affairs of the Government or in the ratio between the purchasing power of a dollar and the objects purchased, that a revision of the contract should be made. Under that view there would be no certitude in any legislation or in any relations between the Government and individuals. Every obligation of the Government calling for the payment of a certain sum in gold coin of the United States would have to be revised not only every year, but perhaps every 6 months or every 30 days or every day or every hour, depending upon the financial conditions of the country, the flexibility of the currency, the volume of credits, the productivity of the people, the savings of the country, the economic and industrial conditions obtaining, and a multitude of other matters which directly or indirectly affect prices and business.

It is rather a novel thought——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it a novel thought to the Senator that we have again and again raised the wages of labor on our railways and in our mines to meet the higher cost of living? Is it a novel thought to the Senator that the inflation of currency, whereby in four years we have doubled the amount of our currency, tends to raise the price of every commodity, and that we have acted upon that in raising salaries and in pensioning those connected with Government employment? In many ways we have indicated the necessity of adjusting salaries and wages to the inflated currency and to the consequent increase in the cost of living due to that inflation.

Now, if we do that in the matter of all our policies, can the Senator see any reason why we should not raise the pensions of those who can no longer earn a higher compensation because of their age or disability, and therefore can not meet the present situation which we by our laws or our administration create?

Mr. KING. It would not be proper to be diverted from the subject under consideration to enter into a discussion of the wage question, whether it relates to the employees of the Government or employees of private individuals and corporations in the United States. Of course, the thought is not that wages should be increased; indeed, there were many cases in which they should have been increased; justice demands that the wage earner be paid a fair and a living wage, and changing conditions call for a readjustment of wage scales and in many instances for an increase in wages. But I do not understand that these persons who were the beneficiaries of pensions from the Government occupy any sort of contractual relation to the Government. There is nothing which the Government has done which requires it to make further payments because of the high prices prevailing in the world.

If the logic of the Senator is correct, if it is just to legislate with reference to those conditions to which he has called attention, I submit that it would be the duty of the Government to call in the billions of dollars of bonds which were issued and give more bonds because of the inflation of credits which has occurred since, and bonds which were purchased have gone down, because the purchasing power of bonds since then has been lessened.

When the Government obligated itself for $100 which some man paid to it three years ago to pay him in 20 years $100 in gold coin of the United States, with interest payable semi-annually at a certain per cent, the Government did not agree and there was no obligation, moral or legal, resting upon the Government to increase the face value of the bond or to call it in and give him a bond for $125 or $150 because of the shrinkage in the purchasing power of the dollar between the time that the bond was purchased and the present time.

The argument of the Senator would call for a readjustment of every obligation of the Government, and if it is a sound argument it would call for a readjustment of every contract entered into between individuals.

The Senator from North Dakota is exceedingly dextrous, facile, and successful in justifying this position. He says that the Government has done all these evils; that is, caused inflation; that the Government is to blame. The Government gave to these persons who were beneficiaries under the act of June 10, 1918, a certain increase in their pensions. Now, the Senator says that as a result of more recent legislation the purchasing value of those dollars which are to be paid to veterans of the Civil War has been decreased 50 per cent; ergo, we must double the pensions. Of course, I deny either the premise or the conclusion. Is the Government to blame, morally or legally, for the depreciation to which the Senator refers?

Mr. President, the statement of the Senator embodied in the report is evidently intended by the Senator as an indictment of the financial legislation of the Government which raises the taxes. The Senator from North Dakota is one of the ablest Members of this body, and he has served with the highest ability and patriotism as a member of the Committee on Finance, where he rendered distinguished service.

The Senator from North Dakota helped to formulate the financial legislation enacted to carry on this greatest of all wars, and he materially aided in securing the passage of the great financial measures which the war demanded. Billions of dollars were required in the prosecution of the war, and the legislation enacted made provisions for the enormous demands of the Government. Does the Senator say that the bills which he helped to frame and which he helped to enact into law were improper and that the Government is to blame for those measures? Does the Senator——

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator want an answer just now?

Mr. KING. Just one further question and then the Senator may answer both, if he desires. Does the Senator say the Government was to blame for issuing bonds in order to get money with which to prosecute the war?

The Senator voted against a number of amendments which were offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and supported by some of us to make the taxes higher, to take more of the excess profits, a larger per cent of the incomes of individuals and of corporations. I think some of these amendments should have been adopted, but I am not criticizing the Senator for his vote. It may be that his position was sound and that the views of some of us were economically unsound. I appreciate that taxation may be so heavy as to destroy industries and the very sources upon which the Government must depend for its revenues to carry on war. I think it would have been unwise to have carried out the suggestion of some of our political economists, who urged that we should take all of the earnings of all of the people of the United States above that which they earned before the war. Such a policy as that would have destroyed business, dried up the fountains of productivity, and brought ruin and disaster not only in industry but to our country. In my opinion the financial measures coming from the Committee on Finance during the war will commend themselves to the judgment of historians and statesmen as the years go by. While not perfect, it was wholesome and statesmanlike. In some particulars it could have been improved, in my opinion, but it met in a fair way the needs of the hour.

I now yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me at this time, I will say I think the Senator has misconceived the meaning of the paragraph which he read, as I think he has misconceived the obligation that exists between the Government of the United States and the old soldiers who kept the flag flying during the four years of civil strife. I will now correct, however, only the Senator's first misconception.

The Senator from North Dakota will share in all of the responsibility for the financial legislation that was put upon our statute books to maintain the recent war. The Senator from Utah can not eulogize that too much. It was not perfect, but I think it was necessary under the circumstances. However, the Senator from North Dakota is not responsible for the banking law that was passed by the Congress of the United States in 1913, and the Senator from North Dakota not only voted against that bill but he gave his reason for doing so.

The reason was that when we were attempting to create a financial policy an expansive or elastic currency provision was incorporated in the bill at that time that there should be no taxes whatever upon the issue of paper money for six months. No provision was made that prevented any borrower or person who desired to use paper money borrowing for six months, putting up his collateral, having the United States notes issued upon it, and then, without the payment of a penny, at the end of the six months paying the loan up and borrowing it over. I said at that time that the elasticity would be only in one direction; that it would debase the currency of the United States—that that was inevitable—and that we ought not to pass any legislation that would put it in the hands of the speculators of the United States to destroy the value of the currency.

Every one of my prophecies became true long before the late war, and they have become true in such a startling degree of certainty that one can not read the record of our banking administration without being shocked at the enormous increase in the paper currency of the United States. It was to that I referred, and not to the financial policy in conducting the World War.

If the Senator will allow me, I will give him the figures to show just what we did under the law of 1913. The law did not go into effect until the next year and did not get fully under way until the latter part of 1915. What followed? Before the end of the year 1915 there was outstanding $84,000,000 worth of new Federal reserve bank notes. That was during a few months of the first year. The next year, in 1916, that $84,000,000 grew to $176,000,000. That was before we entered the war. In the next year, 1917, it again more than doubled, amounting to $547,000,000. In the next year that sum was increased to $1,847,000,000, and the next year, in 1919, it was increased to $3,565,000,000.

That, with the enormous importations of gold and with the heavy balance of trade in our favor before we ourselves got into the war, augmented by the cost-plus system, that was adopted by the administration, which allowed every profiteer from the laborer up to gouge the Government, is responsible for the condition and the high cost of living to-day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my distinguished friend has diverted attention from the question which is before us, and his position invites one into a digressive path. To discuss the financial policies of the party to which the Senator belongs and contrast it with the financial policies of the great party to which I have the honor to belong is a task calling for more time than is now at my disposal and leads too far afield from the pension measure now before us.

But his statements call for a few observations in reply. It is evident that the Senator is not in sympathy with the Federal reserve act and with the financial legislation which has been enacted by the Democratic Party, excluding, as I understood him, that legislation which was directly the product of the war. I do not want to do the Senator an injustice, but I want it to go into the RECORD accurately as I interpret him. The Senator approves of the financial legislation enacted by the Congress since the war began. That means the various measures imposing taxes and designed to obtain revenue and the various measures calling for bond issues.

I think that the overwhelming majority of the American people will assent to this position taken by the Senator.

Mr. President, the war was a tremendously expensive undertaking. War always has been and always will be expensive; and the costs of war will increase as we advance in civilization and in the methods of destruction. No one conceived when the World War began that it would cost the nations involved more than $200,000,000,000. It was alleged by many political writers that the entire wealth of the United States at the beginning of the war did not exceed $185,000,000,000, and yet the war cost was more than $200,000,000,000. That means, of course, that the policies adopted for the purpose of obtaining the sinews of war, which were the result of the experience of the past, would be entirely inadequate to deal with the questions and problems which the war presented. The war called for such vast expenditures that it seemed humanly impossible to realize, by any system of taxation or even of confiscation, wealth sufficient to conduct the war. All the gold and silver of the world was considerably less than one-half of what our Nation expended during the war.

France has been burdened with nearly $40,000,000,000 of indebtedness as the result of the war, and Great Britain's indebtedness is substantially the same. It is not necessary, nor have I the time, to recapitulate the cost to the various other belligerents in the mighty contest. So, as I have said, the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator is a member, devised legislation and passed it through Congress which met the situation, and met it in an admirable way. As I have said, I would have imposed heavier taxes upon excess profits and incomes and luxuries.

I would have taken more from those who profited at the expense of the United States. I offered an amendment to one of the revenue bills providing that every person who had a contract with the Government or was directly or indirectly interested in any dealings with the Government should file under oath every six months during the life of the contract a statement of its terms, setting it out textually, if it were in writing, what was done under the contract, what was received under the contract, what was paid to others under the contract, and what profits were realized, and when the work was completed to file a statement recapitulating in detail all of those elements. I had in mind the thought that many contractors and subcontractors and others dealing with the Government during the war would make large profits. I felt that they should be heavily taxed, that full information should be furnished by them in order that taxation might not be evaded, and I further desired that the American people should know who were the profiteers, who were the men who made profits out of the war in war contracts with their own Government when it was fighting for its honor and for the cause of civilization.

The Senate adopted my amendment, but unfortunately it was emasculated in the committee of conference. The committee of conference struck out the essential and vital parts of the provision.

Mr. President, if that provision had been retained in the bill, I think we would have secured more taxes, and some of the men who have robbed the Government would not be enjoying the confidence of the communities in which they live, and would not wear the smile of complacency and superiority which now distinguishes them.

The Senator, however, attacks what I believe the American people regard as one of the most important financial measures that was ever enacted by the Congress of the United States. The party of the Senator from North Dakota was in power in the Nation when the Civil War was fought. With all of the wisdom of the great statesmen who were then in the Congress of the United States, guided by the almost supernatural wisdom of Abraham Lincoln, the Republican Party utterly failed to devise a system of taxation or revenue that met the demands of the hour. The issue of greenbacks under the stress of the war was a palliative and a very poor one; and, in order to effectuate that object, the Constitution of the United States was violated and the Supreme Court of the United States was so adjusted—some say packed—as to secure a decision that validated what great lawyers regarded as an illegal and unconstitutional enactment.

I do not want to indulge in invidious comparisons, but I assert that the legislation of this Congress under a Democratic administration was far superior, evinced higher statesmanship, than that produced by the Civil War. Moreover, the problems and difficulties were greater now than then. I do not want to be misunderstood. The Republicans in the House and in this body as patriotically supported the great legislative program occasioned by the war as did the Democrats, and their example is a testimony of powerful force, that in every hour of danger to our country we are not partisans but Americans.

Of course, the act which the Senator attacks has some defects, and I, in part, sympathize with the criticism which he makes respecting the features to which attention was directed, yet I venture to say that the vast majority of the people of the United States, including the business men, regard the Federal reserve act as the rock of salvation and pillar of safety during the war which we have just passed through.

Does the Senator advocate its repeal? Has he advocated its repeal? Has he offered measures here for the purpose of modifying it? I do not recall that my good friend or any other Republican has seriously attacked the Federal reserve act or has offered amendments of a vital or important character to that great constructive measure. I have wondered, as doubtless many men have, what would have been the result if the Federal reserve act had not been upon the statute books and if we had had upon the statute books only the financial legislation that we found there when the Democratic Party came into power under the first administration of Woodrow Wilson.

Why, Mr. President, if it had not been for the financial policies of the Democratic Party which have been crystallized into law under the splendid leadership of Woodrow Wilson our country would have been bankrupt, so far as credit and money were concerned, within the first six months of the war.

We could not have built up the great fighting machine that our money and our genius and our patriotism produced except for the preceding legislation enacted by the Democratic Party. The Republican Party had been in power for many years and its statesmanship was so bankrupt that it could not and did not devise a fiscal policy that could ride the storms of a little financial flurry in 1907 and 1908, when the Republican Party was in power. The Republican Party was in power when the devastating financial storm of 1873 to 1877 swept over the Nation. The Senator will remember that in the year 1873, when the Republicans were in power, when practically all of the financial legislation upon the statute books was Republican, with the limited number of industries that were then in the United States, there were more than 7,000 failures, and in 1877, under Republican legislation, there were more than 10,000 failures in the United States; and the Senator, if he will reflect for a moment, must confess the fact to be that the financial legislation placed upon the statute books by the Republican Party was an anachronism. It did not rise to the demands of modern civilization and the demands of business and of a progressive industrial Nation such as this.

Commissions had been created by the Republican Party from time to time to consider financial legislation, and they had utterly failed to function. Commissions had been created, too, for the purpose of providing tariff legislation, to the end that the tariff might be reduced and the burdens of taxation placed upon the people minimized; and notwithstanding a commission appointed by the Republican Party reported in 1883 in favor of a reduction of the tariff, a revision of the tariff in the interest of the consumer, the Republican Party, dominated by vested interests and the protected barons of the United States, increased the exactions that were wrung from the laboring men and the consuming public of the United States.

The Senator will remember, too, that later on, because of the failure of the Republican Party to deal with this great question as well as others in a proper way, his party was hurled from power. Great Republicans such as Senator Dolliver raised their voices in the Senate of the United States as well as elsewhere in our land, and denounced the Republican Party for its failure to meet the great issues of the hour and to enact legislation in the interest of the public weal.

The result was that patriotic Republicans, dissatisfied with the reactionary tendencies of their party, looked for leadership elsewhere, and hundreds of thousands of patriotic Americans gave their support to Woodrow Wilson and to the Democratic Party. Let me say that the wisdom of their course was vindicated in the legislation that was enacted by the Democratic Party when it came into power; and one of the great constructive measures of the party which is now criticized by my distinguished friend, known as the Federal reserve act, was passed over the bitter opposition of Republicans. That law commends itself to the judgment of the American people and the Republican Party dares not repeal it.

I challenge the Senator from North Dakota to offer a plank for insertion in the Republican platform, which is to be so varied in form and variegated in color and design, which is now being framed by Mr. Hays and his 171 varieties asking for the repeal of the Federal reserve act.

I should like that issue to be presented to the American people. The Senator dare not, nor dare any Republican, introduce a measure here for the repeal of the Federal reserve act. It carried us through this Great War. It furnished credit to the American people so that they might purchase the bonds issued by the Government, and which it was compelled to issue in order to raise the sinews of war. If it had not been for the credit afforded and provided by the Federal reserve act our bonds would have gone begging, and, if sold, sold only at a great discount.

Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the Federal reserve act or to allude to it, but I was prompted by the question asked by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to call attention to the report of the distinguished chairman of the committee, and I found in the report the words to which I referred, and which were a criticism of the Government of the United States, and a criticism which I construed to apply to the legislation which had been enacted to enable us to prosecute the war.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not like to interrupt the Senator or to interfere with his remarks, but I wondered if he could not discuss the bill. We would like to get it through by 2 o'clock, if possible.

Mr. KING. To get what through by 2 o'clock?

Mr. CURTIS. The pension bill.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Kansas is exceedingly anxious to get certain legislation through. I wish the same anxiety had evinced itself upon the part of my distinguished friend when legislation important to the country was under consideration some time ago.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has been here every day. The Senator from Kansas has voted on every question. The Senator from Kansas is ready to take up any kind of measure. The Senator from Kansas never made a speech to delay action upon any bill in this body, and never will.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am very glad to get the confession of faith of my good friend from Kansas. I did not mean to imply that the Senator from Kansas was an opponent of legislation, but I do assert that the Senator from Kansas and the party to which he belongs have upon many occasions, not this session—I am speaking purely impersonally and generally—opposed legislation which I conceived to be necessary for the welfare of the country, as I have opposed legislation which the Senator from Kansas and his party doubtless conceived to be necessary for the welfare of the country.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator from Kansas opposed many bills advocated on the other side and will continue to do so.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. CURTIS. But the Senator from Kansas never has risen on the floor of the Senate and attempted to talk a bill to death. The Senator from Kansas has always confined himself to the subject before the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Kansas is such a shining light in the Republican Party.

I wish his colleagues would do the same thing. I wish the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], his colleague, had pursued that example when he aided other Senators in talking to death appropriation bills which were so indispensable for the welfare of the country. I wish the Senator from Kansas, who is so potential in the councils of the Republican Party and is the Republican whip of the Senate, had had sufficient influence with other distinguished Republican Senators to prevent them from defeating measures which carried millions of dollars needed for the welfare of the country, and the failure of which occasioned the calling of an extra session.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. It is true that six appropriation bills went over, but those appropriation bills were passed before the money was needed, and under Republican leadership they were passed carrying over a billion dollars less than was estimated by the departments and over $600,000,000 less than was reported by the party represented on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. KING. I have heard that statement——

Mr. CURTIS. It is absolutely true.

Mr. KING. I have heard that statement made at least three times by distinguished Republican Senators. The Senator from Kansas does not deny that the Republican Party filibustered and defeated needed appropriation bills. The Senator does not deny that Republicans have upon more than one occasion talked bills to death. I am not criticizing them for that. I confess that I would like to see many bills killed, killed by direct vote, killed by the intelligent action of Senators; but if they can not be killed that way, there is some legislation so vicious and so damnable and so un-American as that any parliamentary method is justified in encompassing its defeat.

Mr. President, I am not talking this bill to death. This bill is going to pass, and Senators need not worry. No Senator or combination of Senators can kill a pension bill. This bill will pass. Other pension bills will pass. We are going to pension everybody pretty soon, Mr. President. We are so altruistic, money flows so readily into the Treasury of the United States, that we feel it a solemn duty to get it out of the Treasury at the earliest possible moment. We should then congratulate ourselves upon our efficiency and economy. Of course, this bill will pass. It calls for only $65,000,000, and the Senator from Kansas objects to a discussion of it for an hour. It was brought up during the morning hour.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me complete my sentence.

We entered upon the consideration of this bill a few minutes after 12 o'clock. As I recall, the morning hour was not granted to us, and we entered upon the consideration of this bill calling for $65,000,000, and the Senator now, at a quarter of 2, asks if I am not through so that we can pass the bill by 2 o'clock, if I understood him correctly.

Mr. CURTIS. I have not objected to the Senator discussing the bill. The fact is, I asked him to discuss the bill. He has not been discussing the bill for three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas, unfortunately, was not here during all the time. I was discussing the bill. I was reading from the report of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and the report purported to be a discussion of the bill, and the report stated:

> Had the Government by a general law increased the pensions of these soldiers from a $20 to a $30 per month stipend, and in the same law provided that this $30 should be paid in Mexican dollars worth but 50 cents in American money, thus in effect reducing the pension to $15, this manifest wrong and injustice would have called for immediate correction. And yet this is exactly what has resulted indirectly through governmental action and policies. Through governmental laws and administration the purchasing value of these dollars which are being paid to the veterans of the Civil War has been decreased more than 50 per cent.

The distinguished chairman made the statement which I have just read, and I am not complaining at his report, because it is legitimate argument. I called attention to that, and during a brief reference to it the chairman, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], interrupted me and gave his views as to what he meant and what legislation he had reference to in the sentence which I have just read. The distinguished Senator submitted an argument lasting 10 or 15 minutes in regard to the Federal reserve act and what he conceived to be its imperfections. He called attention briefly, as I had done, to the legislation, in which he had participated, enacted during this Congress for the purpose of raising money to prosecute the war. That is legitimate argument.

The argument of the Senator about the unwise legislation, if such be the case, was legitimate argument. I am replying to that in a feeble way, and my distinguished friend from Kansas is dissatisfied with my argument; and perhaps others may be. I am not wholly satisfied with it myself. But it was the best I could make in an impromptu way as a reply to the presentations of my good friend, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Now I beg of my friend from Kansas not to be too impatient. He is going to get this bill through. It is only $65,000,000. What is that between friends? What is that when an election is before us? The Senator from Kansas has in his State a large number of soldiers of the Civil War, and their relatives, their grandchildren, their great grandchildren, their uncles, their aunts, and their alleged dependents. An election is at hand; it will soon be here. The ides of November are before us. The specters of Republican defeat are rearing their ugly heads, perhaps not in Kansas, and yet I hope that the people of Kansas will see the light; but in other parts of the United States. This is an important election. The Republicans want control of the Presidency. They want to control the destinies of this Republic.

Of course, the appropriation of millions of dollars from the Federal Treasury and its distribution throughout the States of the Union will excite attention. It may provoke some little gratitude in the hearts of the beneficiaries. Some great grandchild of some man who was a thousand miles from the battle field, who never saw a cannon or performed military service, doubtless would feel profound gratitude to the Republican Party if he could receive a pension before election.

Of course, it is important, Mr. President, to get this $65,000,000 out of the Treasury as soon as possible, and then more. This is not all. This is just the beginning of the assaults which we are to make upon the taxpayers of the country. Let us open up the floodgates of the Treasury and pour out the money, but do not tell the people we have to tax them. Do not have a sales tax. Make the people believe we can appropriate money and not tax them in order to get the money into the Treasury for the purpose of taking it out of the Treasury for distribution throughout the United States.

There was a time when it was deemed proper for Senators to discuss appropriation bills which came before them for consideration. It is now highly improper. We have spent less than one and a half hours in considering a bill carrying $65,000,000, and yet the whip of the majority party is impatient and complains because we do not pass the bill before 2 o'clock.

I have not yet, nor has any Senator, discussed the various provisions of the bill. No time has been devoted to delaying action. There should be more and freer discussion of these appropriation bills which take millions and hundreds of millions of dollars from the Treasury.

I shall not attempt to prevent a vote on this bill. I know the temper of the Senate. But I shall not be deterred from fairly discussing this bill and any other measure that may come before this body. I shall when I deem it proper challenge attention to improper legislation and to extravagant appropriations.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted by the Senator from South Carolina I was reading a few excerpts from the admirable address made yesterday by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, Mr. GOOD. He states that the Government will expend for the year ending June 30, 1920, on account of soldiers and sailors, $263,968,993. That means the soldiers and sailors of the present war. He further states that the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, for the same purposes are $458,440,000. Mr. President, add those sums—and those are only a small part of what doubtless will be appropriated—to the $223,000,000 carried now by existing law for the soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and their dependents, and those who come under the act, and the $65,000,000 which this act carries, and we have nearly a billion dollars, exclusive of the amounts which no doubt will soon be appropriated as bonuses or largesses or gifts, or what not, under legislation now pending in the other branch of Congress.

It looks as though we might be called upon, Mr. President, for appropriations for the coming year of at least $3,000,000,000 for the Army and the Navy and for the soldiers and for pensions for soldiers. It may be considerably more than that. Then we have the other expenses of the Government. So that when the entire budget is made up I doubt not but what our appropriations in the second year of peace after the war will approximate five or six billion dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The statement the Senator is making is very interesting, and more interesting to me in view of the Senator's vote yesterday on a bill which will cost the American people over $600,000,000 per year. As compared to this bill, it is like a mountain as compared with a molehill. At one blow yesterday, on one vote, we passed a bill calling for the expenditure of over $600,000,000, when the greatest military nation on earth has never expended over $200,000,000 a year in a time of peace.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words in regard to the military bill that passed yesterday, but I shall not be diverted from the discussion which is now before us, particularly in view of the fact that the Senator from Kansas has rather chastised me for not sticking to my text. I will add, however, that I am opposed, as all Americans are, to militarism. The bill which passed the Senate yesterday did not meet my approval. It was defective in many, many ways, and contained provisions obnoxious to me.

I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee, as is the Senator from Tennessee. But upon that committee are some of the ablest and most patriotic Members of this body. They have studied the military needs of this country for years. They submitted a bill as the result of months of constant labor. Those not members of the committee were compelled to rely, in part, upon those able and distinguished Senators. Some measure was necessary. Indeed, Congress can not adjourn without passing a military bill. Without full knowledge of the intricate and complex subject, I voted for the bill, as did all Senators, except 8 or 12, as I recall. Rather than have no bill, I voted for it.

I felt that in conference it will be materially modified and improved. We vote for bills frequently which are wholly distasteful, believing that in conference features which are obnoxious will be eliminated, and that there will emerge from the conference committee a measure which will meet our views.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee claims too much. He contended during the discussion of the Army bill that it was a bad piece of legislation and denounced it then as a Prussian measure and as indefensible. His arguments were denied by able Senators. There are no Members of this body who favor a Prussian military system; those who championed the bill are as patriotic and as interested in the preservation of this Republic as is the Senator from Tennessee. They deny that the cost will be as great as the Senator contends. The bill itself proves that it creates no army such as Germany possessed.

But, Mr. President, we may have appropriated too much for the Military Establishment for the coming year. Concede it.

That is no suitable reply to the present bill or a justification for extravagance in the administration of the affairs of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to say that in 1916 Congress passed what, in my judgment, was the best preparedness bill that was ever passed by the Congress in its history. Every detail of the military situation was provided for in that law, and it has been effective for only four years. Under that law as a groundwork this Nation won the greatest military victory that had ever been won in its history, or in the history of any other nation, and there was no necessity at all for the repeal of that law and the passage of a bill providing for a great military system fashioned after the German military system. There was no necessity whatever for it; and I am frank to say, knowing the Senator's views on economy as I knew them and knowing his views about legislative matters generally as I knew them, I never was more surprised in my life than when I found the Senator voting for a bill of that kind, vicious as I believe it was.

Mr. KING. I am sorry the Senator from Tennessee was not able to impress his views a little more effectively upon his colleagues on the Military Affairs Committee. He is a member of that committee; unfortunately, or fortunately, I am not. He has been associating with the committee for three years. I regret that he was not a better proselyter, and that he did not accomplish more in impressing upon the committee the views which he entertains. Perhaps, after all, his colleagues are not as derelict as he would have us believe them to be. I was absent from the city when the Army bill was under discussion, but I am advised that the Senator's views were then fully presented. Replies were made by his colleagues upon the committee. Certainly these patriotic Senators would not have given support to the bill if it was as bad and vicious as the Senator asserts it to be. Moreover, the bill, as I understand, may be called an administration measure, as I believe it has the support of the Secretary of War.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is desirous of speaking on the river and harbor bill. He is not prepared to-day, but said that he would be ready to-morrow. Under those circumstances I take it that we will be unable to get a vote on the bill to-day, and so I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, in the hope that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] may proceed with his bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the river and harbor bill is before us. It is very important, and I think we ought to dispose of it to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to dispose of it to-day, but from what I am told I do not think it is possible to do so. I should like to accommodate the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who is very anxious to discuss a matter of very great importance in the bill, and he said he would not be ready until to-morrow. I do not desire to put the bill in the attitude of being held before the Senate when we can not get a vote on it to-day. So I think we might just as well go on with the pending pension bill. It can be disposed of to-day very likely, and then we can take up the river and harbor bill to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator why we could not complete the river and harbor bill save as to the feature to which the address of the Senator from Missouri will be directed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill is practically completed except for the proposition which involves the sum that we are to appropriate, whether it is to be large or small.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the unfinished business, as requested by the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senate to continue the consideration of House bill 9369.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War; to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines; and to certain Army nurses; and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it had been my intention to open up the discussion of this subject by presenting some of the salient facts, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was so earnest in his desire to record his opposition to the bill that he interrupted me in my intended address at that time upon the general subject, and he took all the time until the expiration of the morning hour. I do not object to that at all. I am entirely satisfied that he shall present his views in the first instance. I think they can all be met.

The Senator and myself generally agree fairly well upon nearly all matters of legislation. There is little ground for even a partisan quarrel between us. I am not complaining of the Senator from Utah that he considers it necessary at all times to come to the defense of the Democratic administration. I think if I were a member of that party I would feel it incumbent upon me to spend most of my time in defending the administration during the last year or two, and therefore I certainly can not criticize the Senator from Utah.

I was rather surprised, however, that the Senator from Utah spent so much of his time in the defense of the Federal reserve banking laws when at the same time and almost in the beginning of his address he agreed with me that the criticism that I urged against that law was a most valid criticism. If the Senator from Utah had followed his argument a little further, he would also have arrived at the conclusion that all the inflation of our currency results entirely from one great defect in the Federal banking law, a defect which was pointed out at that time and again and again asserted upon the floor, that it would result in a great inflation of the currency. I have reference to that provision, and that alone, of the Federal reserve act which allows expansion of the currency; in other words, the issuing of Federal reserve notes, without any interest, for a given length of time. I felt at that time and so stated on the floor that I feared the speculative tendency of the American people, their habit of carrying on business with borrowed money would always result in a large amount of this currency remaining outstanding and unredeemed. That result has followed.

It is the only criticism I have ever made of that banking law. I think that on the whole it is a very good law, and if we would so modify it as to make the elasticity work both ways, so as to compel a contraction as well as an expansion, we would have perhaps as nearly a perfect system as we could devise. So the criticism was not made with any spirit other than to present what I considered to be the cause of the present greatly inflated currency and with its natural consequence of inflated prices.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to remind the Senator that the real inflation which has taken place in the country is the expansion of credit through the issuance of twenty-six billions of bonds, and because of the activities during the war the deposits of the country increased $20,000,000,000 also. That is the great inflation. But these Federal reserve notes have a provision by which whenever they leave their own districts they are immediately redeemed in gold, and they are going through a daily gold redemption. I happened to be in Nashville a few days ago, where we have a branch bank, and I went into the room where they were dividing out the Federal reserve notes which had come through their office. They had reserve notes from other districts all over the Union, which they were assorting for the purpose of sending in for immediate redemption. The notes, of course, are called for as actual currency by the different banks where they need currency, so that the issue goes out in response to the commercial demand.

There has been, because of the diminished purchasing power of the dollar, due to inflation of credit, a necessary expansion of actual currency, because the merchants of the country find it necessary to have twice as much currency as they had before, since the purchasing power of the currency has diminished because of the expansion of credit due to the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope that we have reached about the end of excessive issues of Federal reserve currency. I hope that we have reached the high point, but there has been very little redemption within the last year. For instance, at the close of 1919 we had outstanding $3,565,000,000 in Federal reserve notes. April 19, two days ago, the amount was $3,519,133,000. So the Senator will see that there has been practically no contraction even during these times of peace. On the contrary, since we ceased to issue bonds it has grown greater than it was even when we were issuing bonds for the purpose of maintaining our war activities.

I am not particularly criticizing the law itself. I think that is a weakness. It is the position I took at the time. I can not agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that this banking legislation was purely a Democratic measure. It really originated with the Republican Congress when we first provided for a commission to study the financial situation of the countries of the world.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. We then brought back the report. It was not a partisan question at that time, and I do not think it has ever been a partisan question. The only difference probably in the conclusions was that in the first report the general idea was that we should have one grand central bank instead of having 12, as was afterwards provided; but the principles were the same. I think the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will agree with me that we have never regarded this enactment as a matter of partisan legislation. I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota, when he speaks of the legislation as originating with the Republican Party, to the fact that the real principle which lay underneath the Federal reserve act, which lay beneath the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, was quick currency against adequate security under an interest charge to prevent inflation. That is the principle of the Reichs Bank of Germany. It was first presented in the Senate of the United States in 1900 by James K. Jones, the leader of the Democrats at that time. He offered it as an amendment to the then pending Aldrich bill, and it was rejected by Mr. Aldrich as not germane. The principle afterwards was written into the so-called Vreeland-Aldrich Act, and that act served a useful purpose in what would have been a panic in August, 1914, by providing a means for quick expansion of currency under the safeguards which I have enumerated; that is, that it should be issued against adequate security under the penalty of an interest charge; but the principles were first presented in the Senate by James K. Jones, the leader of the Democrats in the Senate, in 1900.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think there is any disagreement between the Senator and myself on that point. I do not know that it is important to discuss what political party is entitled to the credit for the law or what political party is responsible for the criticism which I urge against it, and that is that there is not a sufficient penalty to force a contraction of currency after it has once been expanded.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I know, did not agree with me at that time, but the fact remains, no matter what you may say the cause may be, that we have an enormous inflation and that, together with the balance of trade and the gold that we have brought into the United States, has so increased the circulating medium that our yardstick for measuring the prices of all commodities has greatly lengthened, and necessarily the prices of those commodities must come up to meet the increasing length of our yardstick.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I desire, in the interest of truth as I understand it, to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the difference between the expansion of currency and the expansion of credit. When the United States issues $26,000,000,000 of bonds, when bank deposits increase $20,000,000,000, as they have done during the last seven years evidently, regardless of the quantity of currency, men who have bank deposits or men who have United States bonds can easily avail themselves of them as a means of getting currency or getting credit, which is the same thing. Men ordinarily pay their debts by checks on banks rather than in currency. So I think the Senator is greatly mistaken in attributing the diminished purchasing power of the dollar to the excessive issues of Federal reserve notes. It is due to the unavoidable expansion of credits in the form of bonds and in the form of bank deposits which have grown out of the war.

There is a vast difference between the two. While the actual currency of the country was expanded, and it was expanded by $1,100,000,000 in gold, for that matter, which came into us in exchange for our excess commodity shipments abroad—and that had its effect, as the Senator argues, in diminishing the purchasing power of the dollar—yet the real or fundamental cause, the big cause, is the expansion of credit and the expansion of bank deposits. I think if the Senator will give that question his consideration he will be obliged to agree to my statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think all of those conditions enter as elements into the expansion. I can hardly agree with the Senator, however, that they are the principal cause. I think the principal cause, as shown on its face, is the enormous increase in Federal reserve notes which pass current throughout the country as money. But, Mr. President, I am afraid we are drifting from the bill itself, and I shall return to it.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has discussed the question of the obligation of the Government toward the soldiers of the Civil War and has declared that the Government has never entered into a contractual relation with Civil War pensioners to the effect that it would maintain the purchasing value of the pension dollar. That is certainly true; there is no contractual relation whatever between the Government and the old soldiers as such. It is simply a question of our gratitude toward the old soldiers.

I confess that I entertain a sentiment of gratitude toward the old soldiers of the Civil War stronger than that which I entertain toward those of any other war. I can not forget the fact that, when this Nation was on the brink of being torn asunder, there was a strong sentiment in the Northern States, as there was elsewhere, that the South ought to be allowed to go their own way, if they saw fit, so that no man enlisted in the northern Army that did not subject himself to a degree of animosity on the ground that he was attempting the coercion of a number of the great States of the Union. He knew that he was to battle against brothers of his own blood, against those of his own nationality. He was not brought into the conflict by any character of coercion; there was no selective-draft law; he enlisted because he felt that the life of the Government was at stake, and he fought to save this Nation; he battled during those four years against his own kith and kin and race for the purpose of maintaining one United States of America. By his suffering he kept the flag of the Union in the skies; by reason of his courage and his patriotism we have one great, grand, strong country to-day. So I feel that there is a deeper obligation resting on the Government of the United States toward these old veterans of the Civil War, who saved us a Nation, than there is existing toward the soldiers of any other war in which we have ever been engaged. I want to treat all our soldiers justly and fairly and to show our appreciation of the services of all; but when these old men, the majority of whom have already passed beyond their seventy-seventh year, suddenly find confronting them a condition which, so far as they are concerned, amounts to a calamity, whereby the dollars upon which they are dependent to sustain them until they shall be carried to the grave, have been reduced to about 40 per cent of their ordinary purchasing value in a very few years, I feel that then it is incumbent upon us that there is an obligation resting upon our conscience to make good to them the difference between what those dollars would have purchased a few years ago and what they will purchase to-day.

It is immaterial what the cause, the fact remains that the $37.50, which is the average amount granted to these pensioners by the old law, will not to-day purchase more than one-half of what it did when the law was enacted; and if we owed a duty to them to increase their pension at that time, we owe a duty now again to increase it to meet present conditions, not because of a contractual obligation but because of our gratitude toward those men who saved us a country.

Mr. President, I have shown the fact of inflation and its effect. Inflation does not affect the ordinary individual; the laborer can command three times as much for his labor as he could 5 or 6 years ago; the merchant can mark up his goods over night 20 per cent, he can add another 20 per cent to-morrow, and another 20 per cent the next day in order to meet his necessities and the condition brought about by the expansion of the currency, but the old veteran, who can no longer toil, can not add 20 per cent to the purchasing value of the dollar which he must trade for those goods.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator a question simply for information. The Senator is chairman of the Committee on Pensions; and I understand from his remarks that the pending bill proposes to increase certain pensions because of the reduced purchasing power of the dollar incident to the present extraordinary condition of affairs in this country?

Mr. McCUMBER. It can be based upon that ground or upon the further ground, which, of course, is more or less dependent upon the first, that it is necessary if we intend to prevent suffering among the old soldiers.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: Is it proposed to make that increase permanent or only temporary; and, if temporary, what is the length of time contemplated during which the increase shall be effective?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is made permanent, of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think it should be made permanent?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator and I will never live to see the day when conditions will return to what they were three or four years ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree entirely as to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not the slightest expectation of our ever getting back to the condition which existed then; and I do not think that there will be many of the old soldiers who will live long enough to see any particular reduction in the cost of commodities.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, while I agree with the general statement of the Senator that neither of us will live long enough to see prewar conditions prevail again with reference to prices, I hope that we shall both live long enough to see very materially reduced the high prices that now obtain by reason of the small purchasing power of the dollar. I do not expect to see prices as low as they were before the war; but I do expect, not in the immediate future but within a reasonable time, to see some abatement in the present high prices; in fact, unless some abatement can be effected we will go on climaxing and pyramiding until finally we shall have a disastrous collapse in this country which will of itself force a new and better condition.

It does seem to me that if the bill, of which the Senator is in charge, proposing to grant the large increase which he has been discussing is justified by existing conditions—and I am not advised as to the exact increase which the bill proposes to make, but I assume that to meet the condition of a 40-cent dollar which he has outlined, of course, the increase proposed must be large—then there ought to be some time limit placed upon that increase, and if conditions shall be the same when the time limit expires, as they are to-day, then we can continue the increase; otherwise I predict now—and I wish to impress this upon the Senator—that we will never, whatever the change in conditions may be, be able to reduce these pensions below the rate which it is now proposed to fix.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will fix a time limit for the high cost of living, I will agree to fix a time limit to correspond with it upon the pensions that will be granted to meet that condition. The Senator, of course, can not do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course not.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is an impossibility. I do not look for any material change for many years; in fact, I expect to see the high cost of living increased very rapidly during the next year, due to several factors, for one of which Congress will be responsible, namely, the enormously increased expenses and taxation. The second factor is underproduction, due to the fact that we will grant so many favors to so many people that they will live upon gratuities without being compelled to work and add to the production of the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course, there is a difficulty about fixing a time limit, but we have met that difficulty with reference to the salaries of Federal employees by giving a temporary bonus instead of by increasing their salaries.

We gave them a bonus of $240 per year. We did that because we preferred to do that rather than to increase their salaries, and we preferred to do that rather than increase their salaries for the reason that if we increased their salaries we did not know how we would get those salaries back to normal when the unusual conditions and the emergency calling for this increase passed away. Now, rather than to grant this permanent increase I think it would be better public policy to give the soldiers an additional pension each year, just as we extend the bonus from year to year, or to put in effect some other plan that would avoid this permanent increase, which I fear if now made in the form that it is proposed will become permanent, whatever may be the change in conditions, permanent even if the conditions within a few years should return to those that obtained before the World War.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think we would have difficulty in adjusting a proposition of that kind to the situation either as it exists to-day or as it may exist to-morrow. If there is anything that the old soldier is entitled to to-day, it is enough to ease his way toward the end, and also a certainty that it will be forthcoming.

Mr. SIMMONS. I fully sympathize with the views of the Senator in that regard, and certainly I would do nothing or say nothing that would deprive these old veterans of the necessary comforts of life in their last days; but what I arose the second time to say was this: I do not mean, by what I have said with reference to a bonus, to make any suggestion of a plan. I simply wished to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this increase made now, unless something is done to place a limitation upon it, will, in my judgment, become a permanent increase.

Mr. McCUMBER. It will become permanent, in my opinion, also so far as these soldiers are concerned, but that permanency can not last very long to men who are 70 or 80 years of age. It must, in the very nature of things, come to an end very soon, and in my opinion it will come to an end a great many years before there is any particular reduction in the present cost of living.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not your increase apply to all the pensions that are now paid to the Civil War veterans and their dependents?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Civil War veterans and their widows and those dependents whose status is fixed by law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the increase that you make now, if it becomes permanent, will be a permanent increase in the pension indebtedness of this country until the last one of these old veterans and their pensionable dependents shall have died?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator know that that will not be during his day, nor during my day, nor during the day of any other man in this Chamber?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, certainly; there will be some few widows who were rather young when they married some soldiers who were past middle life who undoubtedly will be living after I have passed out of this world. I expect that, and I want to say to the old soldier who leaves this widow: "Because of the gratitude which I have in my heart for your service, because of what you have done for me and mine and this country, I am willing that not only I but my children and my children's children shall tax themselves this little amount to protect you and yours."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. The amount of the present pension, of course, nobody thinks of disturbing now or at any future time; but the Senator is asking us to give them more now, because he says a condition has arisen in this country that has reduced the purchasing power of the dollar. The Senator would not want that increase to continue for any longer than that condition continues, would he?

Mr. McCUMBER. I would not wish it to continue any longer than the condition continues; but I know that the condition will continue. I feel certain that it will. I can not see any possibility even of a material change.

Mr. SIMMONS. Therefore the Senator, although he may be mistaken in that view, would fasten upon the country permanently a large additional pension indebtedness with no way of getting rid of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, there is a way of getting rid of it. The appropriating power of Congress will continue year after year, and if next year Congress thinks this is too much and that it should reduce the amount Congress has the power to do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator ever heard of Congress reducing a pension once fixed?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; and I do not want to hear of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator believe that Congress ever will do it?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; but the Senator brought that question up himself. I say the power of Congress to make the change exists at all times. I would rather make it permanent and leave it for Congress to determine whether or not it ought to make a change afterwards.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not mean that the power would not exist, but I meant that once you increase the pension you will never reduce it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think there will never be an occasion for decreasing this amount.

The Senator speaks about this being a large sum, a heavy burden. So it is. Sixty-five million dollars will probably be added to the pension cost during the year 1921; but let me ask those Senators who object to this added sum if they have considered it in connection with the vast sums that have been paid out and are being paid out to the soldiers of the war of 1917 and their dependents? I think when you stop to contemplate what you did for the soldiers of the Civil War and what you are asked to do for them to-day in comparison with what you did for the soldiers of 1917 and what you are doing for them to-day, you will not fail to draw the conclusion that your duty is to take care of these old soldiers with this additional sum.

Let me call your attention to the fact that we never passed a general pension law for the benefit of those who had not been injured in the Civil War until 25 years after the close of that conflict. We never took any steps to take care of that class of the soldiers of the Spanish War for 20 years after the close of the Spanish War. We began to look after the interests of the soldiers of 1917 within 25 minutes after we called them into the Army. Let us see what we have paid out for their benefit. I am not complaining of these sums, but I want to have the Senators view the two sides of this ledger dispassionately and fairly, and it may help them in arriving at some conclusion as to what their duty is if that duty is to be gauged in any respect by comparisons.

At the close of the present fiscal year there will have been paid out in allowances for the families of the soldiers of the late war $280,000,000. That is for the families alone. The payment of the $60 bonus to persons serving in the war of 1917 has not been completed, but the estimated amount is $256,239,900. The Federal Board for Vocational Education, which affects only the soldiers of the late war, calls for $125,000,000. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance calls for $197,865,600. The Public Health Service, for care of war-risk insurance, asks for $10,000,000. Now, here is a total which will be paid out, even without the bonus bill that is now before the other branch of Congress, to these soldiers of the present war up to 1921, of $869,105,500.

Now comes this other bonus bill, which will pass the House and in all probability will pass the Senate, that will carry about $2,000,000,000 more, and all this within less than two years after the close of the late war. That will take $2,869,105,500.

Why, Mr. President, we have paid out up to date for the soldiers of the last war, to their families, a sum that we did not equal in our appropriations for the Civil War veterans for a period of 40 years after the close of that war. While we are paying out these vast sums to young men who have the grandest opportunity that the world has ever known for earning money, we ought to take into consideration the distress that naturally comes to those old men who have long since passed their age of earning.

From all this, Mr. President, I can not fail to recognize the fact that in our enthusiasm we are rather overdoing the principle of generosity for the men of the late war and are liable to underdo our duty toward those old men of the war of 1861–1865.

I think, Mr. President, the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senate committee ought to pass. Senators think it is going to be a heavy drain upon the resources of the country. Let me give Senators but one little item which you can cut out of the appropriations for this year which will more than take care of this charge upon the Treasury. You will be asked to appropriate $75,000,000 for good roads to assist the States. It will take but $65,000,000 to take care of this added cost in pension legislation. There is no question but what the good roads would be a great benefit to autoists, not only of the present generation but possibly those who come after it, but has it ever occurred to you that these old soldiers are, most of them, even too old to take auto rides at the present time, and that they will receive practically no benefit from that source?

I think we could get along one year without adding to this expense for the good roads. I could pick items out of appropriation bills which would amount to at least $2,000,000,000 that you could easily dispense with and not load upon the American people at the present time. But my voice and sentiment in the matter will not carry very far. I know we are going to spend over $6,000,000,000 this year, and all the arguments we could make against it would not stop that appropriation.

I can not agree with the Senator from Utah that those who espouse this bill are influenced in the slightest degree by what effect it will have upon the votes of these old soldiers. I think the Senator from Utah did his own judgment an injustice when he suggested that in his colloquy with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. These old men, as I said, are from 77 to 90 years of age. I think since the Civil War 99 per cent of them have every year voted the Republican ticket, and I do not believe that they would change in their affiliation with that party if we should fail to grant them this sum, and I do not think the few who are Democrats to-day will change in their affiliation because we shall grant them this little increase. I do not think it will have the slightest effect on them.

The Senator from Utah called attention to the fact that witnesses testified on behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic that they would not come back again to the United States Congress for a further pension. That is true; but that was when their dollar would purchase a dollar's worth of commodities. It will not purchase more than 50 per cent of the same commodities to-day, and therefore they are justified in asking for this raise.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to another feature which we ought to take into consideration. The total number of Civil War soldiers on the pension roll on June 30, 1919, was 271,391. In 1898 there were 745,822 upon the roll. There are only about one-third as many now as there were then. We know, when we take into consideration that they are, on the average, probably above 77 years of age to-day, that the death rate will be exceedingly rapid with them in the next 5 or 6 years. In 10 years the roll will be exhausted. This number will probably be reduced next year to about 240,000.

The total number of widows of Civil War veterans on the pension roll on June 30, 1919, was 293,244. Their greatest number was in 1912, when it was 304,373. As a rule, it may be said that 95 per cent of the widows of these old soldiers are but a few years younger than the soldiers themselves. I know there has been a great deal of talk about young women marrying old soldiers to get the benefit of the pension laws, but that does not apply to 1 in 25,000. It is not worth the slightest consideration. The widows will decrease in number almost as rapidly as the old soldiers themselves. The last two years have shown a decrease of nearly 20,000 a year, and there will probably be 40,000 less of the widows to be appropriated for for 1922 than there will be for the year 1921, and in five years the great bulk of all the ex-soldiers and their widows will have passed to the great beyond and we will be called upon for very little pension legislation to take care of their interests.

Coming to the War with Mexico, there were only 215 of those veterans on the roll on June 30, 1919. There are probably less than a hundred of them to-day. Probably in two years there will be less than 20 of them.

Mr. President, it is because we felt that these few widows of the veterans of the War with Mexico and the few soldiers of that war should be included in the benefits of this act that we amended the bill as passed by the House and added them. We also increase to some extent the pensions for those who have lost limbs or become blind.

I think that under the present situation we ought to pass the bill as it is now proposed to be amended by the committee and assist these old veterans in their few remaining years, and I think this will be really the last general bill which will be passed for their benefit. I disagreed with them when they thought a few years ago it would be the last one, but I think we can care for those who will not be sufficiently cared for in this bill by private pension legislation which we will still enact to meet special cases.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator what is the total amount carried by the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is estimated that for the next year there will be $65,000,000 added. Of course, then it will immediately decrease very rapidly.

Mr. SIMMONS. What would have been the amount carried on the present basis?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was $222,000,000 last year, and I have just been informed that it would have been $214,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. On the present basis?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. With the increase it will be what?

Mr. McCUMBER. That would add sixty-five million. Mr. President, I ask now that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the word "duty," to insert "and every person who served 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom"; in line 17, after the word "physical," to insert "or mental"; in line 18, before the word "regular," to strike out "constant or"; and in line 19, before the word "aid," to insert "personal," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, and every person who served 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, and who is now, or hereafter may become, by reason of age and physical or mental disabilities, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 2, after the word "same," to strike out "or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto"; in line 7, after the word "same," to strike out "or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto"; and in line 13, before the word "shall," to strike out "or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto"; and in line 17, after the word "same," to strike out "or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That from and after the approval of this act all persons whose names are on the pension roll, and who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Civil War, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint or where the same is in such condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, shall receive a pension at the rate of $72 per month; and that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $90 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 23, after the word "for," to insert "or died in service of"; on page 4, line 1, after the word "Domini," to strike out "1915" and insert "1905," so as to read:

That the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War for 90 days or more, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of the length of service was discharged for or died in service of a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the 27th day of June, A. D. 1905, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will not insist upon the amendment inserting 1905. If the bill is made to apply to widows who married soldiers prior to 1915, that goes back five years, and it seems to me that it should not go back any further. In passing these bills heretofore a limit of five years, I think, has been fixed, and I hope the Senator will not insist upon that amendment reducing it to 1905.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there has been so much criticism, though I admit it is uncalled for, of these bills because they included widows who were married after 1900, that the committee felt there would be less objection to the matter, and we could settle it in conference if we made this change. I would prefer to have the committee amendment agreed to and leave it for further consideration in conference.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to strike out the numerals "1905" and to insert in lieu thereof the numerals "1910." I am in favor of the House provision, but offer this amendment so that the conference may be limited to the years between 1910 and 1915.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Glass	McKellar	Smoot
Calder	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Capper	Harrison	New	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Curtis	Keyes	Page	Townsend
Dial	Kirby	Pittman	Underwood
Dillingham	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wadsworth
France	Lodge	Simmons	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Smith, Md.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. KNOX entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

After a little delay,

Mr. COMER, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. KENDRICK, and Mr. GRONNA entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think it ought to be stated that, in conjunction with other Senators who have just entered the Chamber, I have been very busily engaged on an important matter in one of the committees.

Mr. MOSES, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. WATSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. Let the amendment be stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the amendment of the Committee on Pensions changing the numerals "1915" to "1905" and to insert "1910."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I trust that this amendment will not prevail. As the bill stands the widow beneficiaries of this new appropriation are limited to those marrying old soldiers prior to 1905. The amendment proposes to extend that time to 1910, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], after requesting the chairman of the committee to accept the House provision of 1915, proposes the amendment.

The question involved has been before the Senate, Mr. President, on more than one occasion, and thus far it has been deemed wise to limit widows' pensions to widows whose marriages antedated June of 1905. The purpose of that is obvious, and not only obvious but it is wise and timely. It is designed to discourage the intermarriage of young women with very old men and then as survivors enjoy for many years the benefits of a pension granted by the Government to the widows of soldiers.

There are many features of the present law regarding widows' pensions that, in my judgment, are open to very serious criticism. This proposed law does not change them. It certainly should not be permitted to increase them. Under the law of 1916 provision was made for the revival of pensions to widows who, having married a second or third time, again became widows through no fault of their own; so that when the widow of a deceased soldier intermarries with an outsider and the marriage is afterwards terminated by death or divorce through no fault of hers, she can secure a revival of the pension, which attaches and remains to her until she dies or again marries. If she again marries and is again widowed through no fault of hers, the pension again automatically revives. That is carrying the pension system to the 'nth power of extreme. It virtually commits the Government of the United States to the payment of alimony or that which is analogous to alimony; and we may be sure that nice distinctions are not made under those circumstances when a newly made widow applies for the revival of her pension as to the extent to which the fault of her widowhood is her own.

Mr. President, I do not think that law should ever have been passed. I doubt if it would have been passed but for the fact that widows nowadays vote as do other women in many of the States of the Union, and therefore constitute a force to be reckoned with in the distribution of congressional favors. It is now proposed to extend the time so as to take in an additional class of widows marrying men who, according to the statement of the Senator having charge of the bill, and which I have no doubt is true, average 77 years of age. Such marriages must de dictated more by considerations of business than by sentiments of affection. I think it is fair to assume that the average woman marrying a man up to or beyond the age of 77 can scarcely be accused of that self-denial which is the offspring of an undivided affection. On the other hand, it is the most natural thing in the world that thrift should dictate a temporary inconvenience in order to secure the benefits bound to flow therefrom. I do not believe we should encourage that sort of thing. The mating of the young with the old is nearly always disastrous, but, notwithstanding that fact, such marriages frequently occur. Let us not put a governmental premium upon such unnatural alliances by offering rewards, virtually in the shape of alimony, to those who care to undergo the sacrifice.

Mr. President, I want to show my friend from North Dakota that I am not going to filibuster against this bill. I wish the rules of the Senate could be so changed as to make filibustering impossible. Sometimes I have taken advantage of conditions, but, so far as I remember, I have always acknowledged it. I shall say what I have to say upon this bill, I hope not at too great length, and then, as usual, take my seat, respond in the negative to the vote, and suspect that my opposition to the bill largely aided in securing its passage.

Mr. President, this bill proposes to add the sum of $65,000,000 to an already overburdened taxpaying people as a permanent national expenditure. It comes at a time when the chairman of the committee assures us that further enormous appropriations have been and will be made, as a result of which our expenditures for the coming fiscal year will aggregate at least $6,000,000,000; and, with the experience that comes from long service in the Senate, the Senator from North Dakota insists that these various proposed appropriations will in all probability pass through both Houses of Congress and become the law of the land. But it is because of these expenditures, if I understand the argument, that this comparatively small one is justified, the theory being, inasmuch as we are spending vast quantities of money, let everyone get some while the getting is good; also, that the contrast between $65,000,000 and $6,000,000,000 indicates the insignificant character of the amount carried by this bill, and the unwisdom, therefore, of opposing it.

Mr. President, it is an extremely small percentage of the aggregate appropriations with which the Senator says the country is threatened. When I was a young man, I was taught that real saving was comprised of the small items here and there reserved from the mass of expenditure and permitted to accumulate. I have read that the French were the richest nation in the world prior to the war, because the peasantry, no matter what their sacrifice might be, never failed to save something from the earnings of every week, nor to see that the savings were invested so that they would constantly increase. I believe that is true; and I think it would be well for Congress to heed the lesson, and, by saving at the spigot if they can not save at the bunghole, contribute to some extent toward the diminution of public expenditures.

I suppose it will not be long before the so-called bonus bill in some shape will be laid upon the Secretary's desk. I suppose that after due debate it will be accepted. I differ with the Senator having this bill in charge, if the remarks which I am about to refer to apply to this enormous proposed appropriation, in that I think politics and politics alone makes such a bill possible, and politics and politics alone will cause its enactment into law. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate this afternoon in discussing that bill. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. I merely wish to say now that when that bill does come here, and when it has passed, the advocates of it will know that they have had a fight. I am concerned, therefore, more particularly with this bill and with the reasons which actuate the committee in favorably reporting it and asking for its passage. Those reasons are found in the report of the committee, a copy of which I have here, and I want to give the committee credit for stating all of the reasons that in my judgment could be stated in support of the bill.

They realized the force of the assurance of the Grand Army of the Republic in 1918 that if Congress would allow that proposed increase they would be satisfied; they would no longer imitate the daughters of the horseleech but would be satisfied with the increases of that bill. It reminds me a good deal of the dye people, who came here in 1916 and were permitted by a Democratic Congress to write their own schedules of rates, declaring that it was amply sufficient for their purpose, and who now want an increase by 50 per cent, plus an embargo; and the reasons which they give for the change, with all due respect to my distinguished friend, are quite as pertinent as those which are outlined here.

The committee say:

> There might be some force to this argument had not the Government itself, by its financial and administrative policies, so decreased the normal purchasing value of the currency of the country as to leave the recipients of this increased pension in a far worse condition than they were when the legislation was enacted.

In other words, their agreement was made upon the implied guaranty of the Government that the purchasing power of money at that time would not be disturbed. But the purchasing power of money, even had an actual promise been made that these payments should be in gold, has decreased since that time, there being no difference, as far as I know, in the character of the currency which is used as a medium of exchange.

The committee go on to say that the Government by its own conduct, through its own policies, has accomplished this decrease, and upon the assumption, I presume, that no man should be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong, the increase now asked should be conceded and the promise forgotten.

Mr. President, it is true that governmental policies have largely affected the value of money. It is equally true that the value of money was very much affected at the time that promise was made in 1918. Indeed, I think it may be safely said that at that good time the purchasing power of money was scarcely more than it is at present. No such condition was then placed to the promise. The committee in good faith acted upon it, Congress accepted the covenant, and within two years we are face to face with an enormously added increase as the basis of this bill, sought to be defended by the proposition that the Government itself has depreciated its currency.

If promises are so lightly set aside as that, it would be far better that they were not made at all.

The farmer has a good deal to do—not consciously or intentionally—with the high cost of living, in that production and consumption have been enormously disturbed by existing conditions. The wage earner has much to do with it through his constantly successful and successive demands for an increase of wages, which necessarily decreases the purchasing power of money and forces a continually rising increase in the cost of living.

These matters are so obvious that the statement of them is all that is essential. I have too much respect, both personally and officially, for the standing and the character of the members of the committee to say that this is a piece of special pleading; but I have seen cases of special pleading in the courts during my experience at the bar that addressed themselves, to my mind, with much more force than this contention.

The committee say:

> Had the Government by a general law increased the pensions of these soldiers from a $20 to a $30 per month stipend, and in the same law provided that this $30 should be paid in Mexican dollars, worth but 50 cents in American money, thus in effect reducing the pension to $15, this manifest wrong and injustice would have called for immediate correction. And yet this is exactly what has resulted indirectly through governmental action and policies.

Mr. President, if the Congress has done what is here assumed deliberately, in my judgment it would have been a part of that understanding. I do not see how you could have separated it if it were contemporaneous, or virtually so. It has taken no direct step to interfere with the value of money to be paid in pensions, or the value of money to be used in any other way. If the committee saw fit to say that because of this increase the Grand Army of the Republic should not be held to its promise, that it was a hard bargain, and that a generous Government ought to overlook it, I would be much more inclined to accept it; but they do not place it upon any such consideration.

The committee also say:

It may be said that all the people suffer alike from this deplorable condition. This, however, is not the case. Labor has increased in price about 300 per cent since war was declared. Profits in every line of business are greater to-day than ever before in the history of the country. Those who have youth on their side as an asset and those engaged in business are able to immediately adapt themselves to the excessively high price of commodities by demanding and receiving a wage that will meet the higher cost of living and an increased profit in business to meet both the heavier governmental taxes and the higher cost of living.

But these classes can not do so.

Mr. President, that explanation or defense of the bill presupposes an obligation upon the part of the Government of the United States to guarantee a good living to every man in the country who ever wore its uniform, and that the obligation should be respected in times like these by an increase of the amount granted. I do not wonder that the recipients of pensions in America should long ago have come to that conclusion, because the scientific and just theory of pensions limits the beneficiaries to certain classes having special claims, and in most instances the amount of the pension is less than the cost of living, the exceptions, of course, occurring in cases of complete disability or old-age pensions, if I may so term them, paid to officers of the Army and Navy who are compelled to retire after a long life devoted entirely to the public need.

The man who suffers a transient disability may yet be amply able to earn a good living, and the amount of the pension should be graduated to the extent of the disability. A man in perfectly good health, or fairly good health—and he who lives to be 77 and more may be said to have enjoyed good physical vigor for a good many years—ought to be earning a living on his own account if he is not; he ought to be self-supporting at that age if he is not; and if he is an old soldier he ought to avail himself of the generosity of the Government in the establishment of soldiers' homes all over the country, whether he does or not.

We have gone upon another theory. We have accepted the demands of the beneficiaries and the would-be beneficiaries of the pension system, and while I accept as absolutely correct the assurance of the Senator having charge of the bill that political considerations are not behind it, I am unable to accept it as applicable generally, for I assert without fear of successful contradiction that but for the potential influence and voting power of the Grand Army of the Republic, we never would have entered upon this mad career of indiscriminate pensions, much less made it an accepted institution of congressional procedure.

A great many years ago Grover Cleveland, during his first administration, saw fit to veto, and very properly so, an enormous number of private pension bills, giving in each instance the most potent reasons for his action, unanswerable in their character and taken from the record. It is not too much to say that he was defeated for reelection in 1888 largely on account of those veto messages. It was made an issue in that campaign, and the old-soldier vote was rallied against him because he had the courage to protect the Treasury of the United States against demands that seemed to him to be unfair and unjust.

In 1894, in the middle of President Cleveland's second administration, I had occasion to do some campaigning, though very little, in the State of Ohio. It was what is called an off election, but I saw in the city of Columbus, and in one of the other cities of Ohio during that year, processions of men wearing the uniform and carrying transparencies reciting that the President of the United States was an enemy of the old soldier, the legend being: "Vote against the administration; it opposes pensions." And those were no idle processions. The spirit was duplicated in every State in the Union.

The election was overwhelmingly against the administration. I do not know to what extent that movement contributed to the result. At that time I thought the administration was in for a good licking, and away down in my heart of hearts I was secretly glad it got it. But this feature of the campaign against the administration at that time seemed to me peculiarly unjust, and as very significant of the power of an organization that was being used for the purpose of getting money from the Treasury of the United States.

During the pendency of this bill in committee, Mr. President, I have received large numbers of letters from some of the beneficiaries of the bill reproaching me very bitterly for even seeming to oppose it. Some of them have sent me clippings of editorials and statements from the National Tribune, that highly disinterested and patriotic publication having nothing but the good of the country at heart, and animated by a sincere and lofty desire to perpetuate the institutions of America. In many of these letters my motive has been said to be to get even with the old soldiers because I was born and brought up in the South. One of them went so far as to say that he could hardly expect anything else from an old Confederate soldier. That paid me too much honor. I was drafted when I was 15 years old in the Georgia militia, as it was called. I was about as tall as I am now, but not so thickset nor so handsome. I was given an old Austrian musket, which I carried from Milledgeville, Ga., to the sea. I threw it away and walked back without any. That is my record. If I had done that in the Northern Army, I would have been a pensioner long ago, and no doubt would have been a shining light in the Grand Army of the Republic.

There is not any need whatever, it does a man no good, to disclaim a personal motive in opposition to a bill of this kind. He does not have to do it to his friends, and it is a waste of breath to try to do it with the beneficiaries of the bill. So I will try to outlive it, as I have outlived many things else, and do what I think I ought to do with regard to this, as with other schemes of legislation.

There is no such obligation, and if there were, Mr. President, this bill would not discharge it. The Senator having charge of the bill will not contend for a moment that $50 a month in these times will support a soldier, no matter how old he is, unless he is exceptionally fortunate. If the reasons given in this report, in other words, are good, the average pension should be from $250 to $300 per month—$200 at least. Fifty dollars is very little better than thirty, when it comes to a question of support.

No, Mr. President; that can not be the reason. It is simply typical of the progressive tendency of all schemes of appropriations for private benefit. It feeds the spirit of acquisition, and prompts greater and yet greater demands, and these will continue just so long as the Congress of the United States responds to them, and the Congress will respond to them just so long as there are two parties in existence, which are represented in both Houses of Congress, and that will be the case, in all probability, as long as the Government survives; and nobody knows it better than the beneficiaries. They are shrewd enough to play party against party, and I have no doubt they take sheer delight in seeing each trying to outstrip the other in benefactions at the public expense.

We are giving $50 now because we think that is enough for this present demand. It will be $75 a month next year, based upon the same reason, because the price of living, in my judgment, is not going down, certainly not while farms are being abandoned and farm labor is an unknown quantity. The $75 will specify the obligation, on the one hand, to take care of the men who have risked their lives for the country upon the other.

It will also be like this bill in that no discrimination is made whatever between the rich and the poor, the deserving and the undeserving, the just and the unjust, but all will be treated alike. The man who fought for four years during the war and the man who got his record for desertion corrected last week will be side by side. The discriminations that should be made in a bill of this kind are ignored completely.

There are one or two old veterans in my State whose excess-profits tax would make you or me independent for 20 years if we should live so long. They will get $50 a month under this bill. There are many others who are doing well, having a competence and having won that competence by honorable toil and effort in the business life of the country. They will get $50 a month. There are other old soldiers, Mr. President, who are destitute, or nearly so, just as other men who were never in the war are destitute, or nearly so, and the former will get $50 a month, and that notwithstanding the fact that there were 5,000 empty beds in the soldiers' homes of America last week, which we have made appropriations to support and which homes were built and are supported for the purpose of taking care of these men.

One man writes me asking that this bill be passed so that he will be spared the disgrace and humiliation of entering one of these homes. Where there is humiliation or what possible disgrace can flow from such a status is beyond me. I conclude that this gentleman prefers his $50 a month to ease and comfort for the rest of his life at the Nation's expense.

We are therefore supporting soldiers' homes costing millions of dollars per annum, costing nearly twice as much as before the war, on the one hand, while upon the other the accommodations which they extend are not accepted, and the War Department, as well as the Public Health Service, would be very glad to take over some of those places and thus, if possible, economize upon appropriations for new hospital buildings.

Mr. SMOOT. The Public Health Service wants $87,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I know the Public Health Service wants $87,000,000, and if the Senator can think of some institution that does not want some millions from the Government at present I would like to hear of it. It should be given honorable mention both on the floor and in the public press.

Their attention has been called to it, and perhaps the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] also, because he keeps abreast more than any man in the Chamber with everything that is going on that is of importance to the people and which we are likely to consider. That $87,000,000 can be saved, but it will not be saved, because the Public Health Service, like the pensioner, the good-roads man, the river and harbor man, and all the rest, are very anxious for economy at some one else's expense; hence, there is no economy, and there is not likely to be any.

Some of the old soldiers, I am glad to say, write in a different vein. I have selected one letter at random, written by an old gentleman in my State and addressed to me some days ago. He writes:

> The National Tribune asks the old soldiers to write Senators right away. I will say, "Vote as you please." "We ain't hollering our heads off," says one; another says, "This old Government is awful good to us." So it goes with some.

He then is good enough to speak kindly of me and says:

> Don't worry. You are O. K. on several things. Somebody has got to pay the bill. Now, I have written. Good-by. Yours, truly.

He adds:

> Wounded in battle August, 1864. Hurt in runaway in 1908. Still a J. P. in Loveland and living comfortably. I know how to save.

That is a typical letter. Another sends me a communication which I will ask leave to place in the RECORD without reading, written by a veteran of the Civil War, 82 years old, from Troy, Ohio, on "Old age and activity."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OLD AGE AND ACTIVITY.

TROY, OHIO, March 27.

EDITOR OF THE JOURNAL:

DEAR SIR: I was much interested in your editorial of March 23 headed "Our young-old men and women," writing of four men who are still active, the youngest 86, the oldest 97, the combined age of the four being 367 years, and all still at work.

Nowadays, Mr. Editor, "mere years are no sign of either physical or mental diminution." There is living at the Dayton Military Home a veteran who will be 100 years old next June—Comrade W. E. Bayne, of Barracks No. 7. He is as active in body and mind as any man half his age; is commander of Veteran Post, No. 5, of the Grand Army of the Republic. Look at "Uncle JOE" CANNON, ex-Speaker of the House, over 83, hale and hearty; John Adams, when 80, found physical relaxation swimming in the Potomac. As some one has written, "The Almighty so arranged the vital forces in these bodies of ours that it is a matter of behavior, a matter of good living, a matter of vital force inherited from sound parents, and a proper husbanding of that vital force."

And lest we forget, Titian was 98 when he painted his famous "Battle of Lepanto," the most famous single picture in the world. "The Last Judgment" was painted by Michelangelo when 89; Von Moltke at 88 was chief of staff of the Prussian Army. At 88 John Wesley, with undiminished eloquence and power, was preaching daily. At 88 Bancroft was writing deathless history. Palmerston was prime minister of England at 81. At 83 Tennyson composed the tenderest song in our language, "Crossing the Bar." Gladstone conducted exciting campaigns at 80, and at 83 controlled the nation as its premier. Cato was 80 when he learned Greek. Socrates took up music at 80. It is related of Joseph Jefferson that he portrayed Rip Van Winkle with added effectiveness at 75. Whittier and Bryant issued new volumes at 79. Humboldt finished the best work of his life, his "Kosmos," at 90. Galileo was making new discoveries at 73. At 70 Commodore Vanderbilt owned but 120 miles of railroad, and at 88 he owned 10,000 miles of railroad and had added to his fortune $100,000,000. Henry Watterson, who is one of the greatest among editorial writers of the Nation, at 83 is still in the harness, and his editorials are as full of vim and power as ever.

This winter I attended a post meeting at Pleasant Hill, Ohio—Dan W. Williams Post, No. 369, Grand Army of the Republic—a live-wire post. There were 17 Grand Army men present, some of whom came 4 or 5 miles. The average age of the 17 was 81 years and 9 months. This post meets once a month, and the average attendance is 11. "Tell me no more that the old are not capable of high and useful achievements."

JOHN W. RILEY,
A veteran of the Civil War and 82 years of age.

Mr. THOMAS. This is so cheerful and gives so many evidences of vigor and old age in combination that it gives me some hope for myself after I shall have ceased to worry this honorable body and shall have retired to the shades of private life.

I have other letters, that I will not take the time to read, running in the same direction, and insisting that the Government, having done enough for them, ought not at this critical period in our financial history to be expected to give anything more.

I mention these not that they will do any good but because I think that the people should be informed, as far as I can inform them, that this demand at all times and on every propitious occasion for increasing pensions has here and there a very notable exception.

Now, Mr. President, up to and including 1917 this Government had appropriated and expended in pensions for soldiers of the Civil War $5,087,647,618.63. Add to that the appropriations for 1918 and 1919, and the five and one-quarter billion dollar limit has been reached and passed. We have, in other words, paid in pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Civil War an aggregate sum more than the equivalent of the actual valuation of all the property in the Confederate States of America at the end of the war. That includes its railroads, its personal property, and its real estate. The compensation has been more than the equivalent of the monetary value of the territory and property forced back into the Union.

It may be replied that it is worth it, and that is true; but it is not worth it when we consider the effect of this pension system upon the patriotism of the country, upon the public spirit of men, upon the idea of devotion to public service, and upon the duties which every citizen owes to his country. It is this record more than anything else, in my judgment, that has promoted the pending onslaught on the Treasury by the soldiers of the war just ended. It has created, and to a large degree justified, the notion that the Government should pay for every service rendered it, whether required or not. It has smeared American public spirit, and particularly its military spirit, all over with the dollar mark, and while the man, thank God, can still be found, and found in large numbers in America, who perceives and recognizes his duty to his country and his obligation to serve it to the extent of giving up his life in its hour of need, I greatly fear that a majority no longer see that viewpoint, but demand monetary compensation in exchange for patriotic valor and military service.

That is the lowering of our standards of civic virtue, which, if pandered to, as we doubtless will, must inevitably destroy it, and the war which was fought to make the world safe for democracy will be known to posterity as the war followed by burdensome taxes, by appropriations for pensions and bounties and bonuses, crushing the spirit of the people, destroying its sense of enterprise, and bringing it ultimately to the verge of ruin and destruction, if indeed it does not pass that point.

But I promised not to discuss present conditions any more than is necessary, as ample opportunity in all probability will be given to do so.

The committee says:

> It is no answer to say that this law adds $65,000,000 to the burdens of an already overtaxed country.

I thought it was. Doubtless I am mistaken. The reasons given, if I understand them, are that—

> We are overtaxed to-day because of the continuance of extravagant expenditures initiated during the war and which so far we have scarcely made serious efforts to curtail.

That is true.

> Prior to the war the Government was conducted with an annual expense of less than $1,000,000,000. To-day, nearly two years after the close of the war, we are calling and providing for more than $5,000,000,000 yearly to meet the running expenses of the Government in time of peace. Allowing $1,000,000,000 for interest on our war debt, and making liberal allowance for the greatly increased cost of operation in every branch of the service, an increase of about 400 per cent in the ordinary running expenses of the Government, exclusive of interest, can not but indicate that there are many projects calling for large appropriations which are not absolutely necessary and which might well await a return to normal and more favorable conditions.

I agree to that. They are just as necessary as, but no more necessary than, the bill we are considering, and yet the Senator knows just as well as I do that while they are not necessary they are going to be so considered.

I confess, Mr. President, that I have little patience with that partisan spirit of crimination and recrimination which charges each of the sides of this Chamber, and the parties to which they belong, with this extravagance and this untoward situation. We are both equally to blame. We take the burden of it now because ours is the administration. The other side of the aisle takes the burden of it after the 4th of March, 1921, if their rosy expectations are not dimmed by the current of future events. They will run the Government no more inexpensively than we do, simply because the influences which call for extravagance will shift as the balance of political power shifts.

We have never failed in our political conventions to condemn each other for riotous extravagance and an increase of the burdens of the people, and as far as I know we have seldom made any effort, when fortune has rested upon the one or the other banner, to do more than give the other side the opportunity to make the same charge when the convention meets four years hence. So it goes, battledore and shuttlecock, Democratic extravagance and corruption, Republican extravagance and corruption.

We do it because we do not like to resist pressure, and particularly when there is a political or partisan side to it. John Smith, of Podunk, in my State, wants a public building at his crossroads, where there is a population of 350. Jimtown, in an adjoining county, and having the same population, has secured $50,000 for a public building under the Republican administration. If I do not bring home the goods, I am a much poorer statesman than my predecessor, and in all probability I will have upon my head the displeasure of the 350 inhabitants of Podunk. Hence I go before the committee, which is controlled by the members of my party, and I plead for a public building at Podunk. I tell my party associates why I must have it. "I am very fond of the Senate, and I do not like to be retired; $50,000 is not much in an overflowing Treasury; just let me have it, treat me as a good fellow, and I will show the people in Jimtown, in the other county, that I can do a thing or two myself when it comes to getting money from Uncle Sam."

So, Mr. President, we battledore and shuttlecock and spend hours here telling the people what extravagant and reckless wretches we are. We tell the truth about each other in that particular. The people, no doubt, believe both of us; but, unfortunately, they are very easy with our infirmities. The taxpayers do not organize; they simply sit around and swear, and inasmuch as they only do that we are not afraid of them. They have no political influence worth mentioning; they are not organized for plunder. So the good work goes on, and will continue to go on unless conditions change.

Pensions, of course, are one of the easiest appropriations to defend imaginable. I have heard many times the argument in behalf of the defenders of the country. How many times, Mr. President, you have probably heard drawn the picture of the soldier charging through the hail of bullets, with the battle flags tattered and torn, dead men everywhere, the enemy stubborn but finally routed by the heroic charge of heroic men. That appeals to people, and there is a great deal in it. There is everything in it, Mr. President, as to those who are physically disabled and who have a right to demand pensions; but the bounty of the Government is not limited to them under any circumstances. That is what is going to put the bonus through, mark my words. When that bill is discussed here all the battles from Belleau Woods to Sedan will be fought over again, and while they cost this Government directly about $25,000,000,000 the next generation will see added to it twenty-five billions, because the bonus now proposed is only a starter; it is an appetizer; the feast is coming later on; and the gorge will synchronize with every presidential election, with an occasional tidbit on the side, just before the intervening election. Why not? Charge it to the profiteer. We take out everything now on the profiteer.

I see Mr. Bryan in his last issue of the Commoner insists upon trade commissions in the States to cooperate with the Federal Trade Commission to swat the profiteer. He is also in favor of the bonus for service men, to be paid out of a tax on the war profiteers. Those who have been made rich by the war, he says, should be made to furnish the money to pay for the sacrifices made by those who served in the war. I am not surprised they got Mr. Bryan, particularly as the primaries were held yesterday. According to the last accounts, however, the appeal was not successful; but even Mr. Bryan, Mr. President, great commoner as he is and so successful in appealing to the emotions of men, ought not to overlook the fact that the profiteer will pass the taxes right on to the fathers of the boys who will receive the money. That, however, is an indirect and sort of secret process; it is bleeding a man to death with leeches instead of cutting the veins of his arm and letting him see the blood as it flows in torrents from the wound. The tax comes back to the producer every time. You can not avoid it any more than you can avoid the downward current of a stream in obedience to the law of gravitation. This $65,000,000, while it may come immediately from the man who has made excess profits, will inevitably place its burdens upon the producers of the country.

The Senator from North Dakota says we could easily set off this amount by omitting the appropriation of $75,000,000 for good roads; but the Senator knows that is impossible. Why, Mr. President, we could no more stay the appropriation of $75,000,000 for good roads than we could make a voyage to the moon. Every county in every State would be, both physically and metaphorically, upon our back. Good roads! That policy has been inaugurated, and you may remember that it was inaugurated immediately after the war in a Post Office appropriation bill presented, with great success, by our venerable and lamented friend, the late Senator Bankhead, of Alabama, who said, when asked by the Senator from Utah where the money was coming from, that that was no concern of his; that was the business of the Finance Committee. That is the answer that will be made, together with others, to any attempt to omit for one year the appropriation of $75,000,000 for good roads. Oh, no; it will not be done.

Why, there is a bill calling for an appropriation of $450,000,000 pending in the other House or in this body, I forget which; perhaps it is pending in both, for such bills are generally duplicated in the hope, perhaps, that they will get twice as much as one bill calls for. The bill has not been reported out of the committee as yet, and from what the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads said the other day, I do not suppose it will be reported at once, and I was very glad to hear it; but suppose the unexpected should happen and that this $75,000,000 should be eliminated from that particular appropriation bill, does that justify our turning around and appropriating it at once in another direction? If we can save it, let us do so; but I fail to perceive any economy in not cutting off a chew of tobacco from one end of the plug and then cutting a chew of similar size from the other end.

We can legislate until doomsday by that process and get nowhere. At the end the Treasury will be just as barren and just as empty as though no elimination were attempted. I should like to see both of these bills postponed. That would save about $150,000,000, in round numbers. But they will not be.

Next fall, when I take the stump in my State, I will tell my constituents that the Republican Party is in charge of the present Congress and that my party did its best to live up to its last pledge for economy, but it was powerless because it did not control the Senate or the House of Representatives, and it is upon their heads that the wrath of the people should be visited, because, forsooth, they saw our extravagance and went us one better. My friend, the Senator from North Dakota, if he takes part in the campaign, will call attention to the fact that the administration is still Democratic; that we had six years to set a good example, but did not do it, and inasmuch as they were exposed to our pernicious example for six years they became inoculated with the germ of the same habit, which they will get over slowly by degrees, but will need another lease of power in order to enable them to do so. There is nothing new about that; we have been doing that sort of thing for years, but the work of spending the people's money goes merrily on and the taxpayer pays the fiddler.

Five, six billion dollars for the next year! I wonder, Mr. President, if it is possible for the finite mind to grasp the magnitude of that sum. If the Wandering Jew had received $500,000 on the day of the crucifixion of the Savior and an equal amount every year thereafter, he would have to live 80 years longer before he would have a billion dollars, and he would have to live 10,000 years after that in order to get $6,000,000,000. But what does that amount to in the eyes of the Senate and the House in these times? We toss it off with the easy nonchalance of a Neapolitan beggar swallowing a yard of macaroni; it does not even gorge us; we mention it as a stupendous thing rather boastfully.

I do not know whether the people who pay the taxes intend to continue supine or not. My only comment is that if they do they deserve all they get. If they would only unite in a patriotic or some other sort of an association, send their representatives down here to shake their fists under our noses and say, "Either quit spending or you will lose your jobs," we would "sit up and take notice." Until they do that—

> On with the dance! Let joy be unconfined;
> No sleep till morn, when House and Senate meet.

Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say upon this bill. I have no doubt I have contributed, as the vote will show, very largely toward its summary passage; but I have delivered myself of views which I entertain upon it. I protest against its passage at this time, and shall, of course, vote against it.

I intend before the final vote is taken, however, to ask either for the elimination of the words "during the Civil War," on line 25 of page 2, or for the addition of the words "Mexican, Spanish, and," so that then disability pensions may be made available to those who became disabled in those other struggles. If disability is to be compensated—and it should be—then that disability is the same, and the need for recognizing it now is the same, whether it was incurred in the Civil War or in any other war.

Of course, I can not offer that amendment now, because another amendment is pending and undisposed of.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, coming from the South, perhaps it would be in better taste for me to have nothing to say on this bill, and if the amount were the same as provided in the law at the present time I would remain silent; but I feel that this increase in so short a time after another increase two years ago is unjustifiable and is an inexcusable raid upon the Public Treasury.

I can do no more than enter my protest against the bill. As I said, if it were the amount that was allowed in the former bill or in the law as it exists I would say nothing; but I do protest against the increase now. It is out of place, uncalled for, and unnecessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 4, line 3, after the words "apply to," to strike out "all former widows of persons" and insert "a former widow of any person"; in line 6, before the word "honorably," to strike out "were" and insert "was"; in line 8, after the word "for," to insert "or died in service of"; in line 20, after the word "widow," to strike out "having" and insert "leaving"; in line 25, before the word "helpless," to strike out "permanently" and insert "mentally or physically"; and on page 5, line 14, after the word "cease," to insert "And provided further, That the rate of pension for the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the War of 1812, or for 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be $30 per month," so as to read:

And this section shall apply to a former widow of any person who served for 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days was discharged for or died in service of a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage has, or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce without fault on the part of the wife; and any such former widow shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month; and any widow, as mentioned in this section, shall also be paid $6 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise mentally or physically helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute: And provided further, That in case of any widow whose name has been dropped from the pension roll because of her remarriage, if the pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal of pension under this act until that pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to such widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease: And provided further, That the rate of pension for the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the War of 1812, or for 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is just one more committee amendment that I will ask to have made, a mere correction of a word. On page 4, line 8, before the word "discharged," I move to strike out the word "were" and insert in lieu thereof the word "was."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that is the last committee amendment. I move to amend, on line 25, page 2, by inserting between the words "the" and "Civil" the words "War with Mexico, Spanish-American War, or the."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 25, before the words "Civil War," it is proposed to insert "War with Mexico, Spanish-American War, or the," so that if amended it will read:

That from and after the approval of this act all persons whose names are on the pension roll, and who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the War with Mexico, Spanish-American War, or the Civil War—

And so forth.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it will be observed that this section refers exclusively to disabilities, and I think its provisions should be made available to those who have been disabled in these other wars.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the principal objection and the only reason why we did not consider them was that we have another bill before Congress which has passed the House and has been reported favorably to the Senate which deals with the Spanish War veterans alone, and, if I remember rightly, that is covered by the proposed law. The provisions are somewhat dissimilar.

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps I can offset that by this amendment, and thus limit the appropriations that would otherwise be necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that that will not be the case.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not the remotest idea that it will. I simply indulge the vain hope.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will turn to the bill upon the calendar, he will find that it deals with the soldiers of the Spanish War.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I am aware of that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. While the rates under that bill are not as high as those in this bill, I wish to say to the Senator that they are satisfactory to the veterans of the Spanish War, and these rates for the disabled soldiers of the Civil War are the highest rates of the kind in any proposed legislation or pending bill; and I think the effect of the amendment of the Senator would be to increase the amount of the appropriation rather than to decrease it.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I think it would decrease it, but it would decrease it in the proper direction. I shall not argue the matter. I simply ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Curtis	McNary	Sheppard	Trammell
Dial	Nelson	Smith, Md.	Wadsworth
Glass	New	Smoot	Warren
Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Spencer	Watson
King	Overman	Swanson
McCumber	Pomerene	Townsend

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twenty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAPPER and Mr. SUTHERLAND answered to their names when called.

Mr. CALDER, Mr. LODGE, Mr. KNOX, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. KEYES, Mr. BALL, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. KIRBY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understand that there is a quorum present in the city and in the offices around the Capitol and in the cloakrooms, and so forth. I therefore move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. MOSES entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I inquire of the Chair the number yet required to make a quorum?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are six needed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am somewhat in doubt as to whether we could get that number without waiting considerably after the regular adjournment hour, and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 22, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee, our Father in heaven, for the many disclosures Thou hast made of Thyself on land and sky and sea, the change of seasons, seed time and harvest, especially for the light Thou hast implanted in the soul of man which brings him in contact with Thee. To follow it is peace, joy, and contentment. To turn aside from it is discontent, sorrow, and disorder.

Inspire us by that light to walk humbly with Thee and do unto others as we would be done by. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

Mr. PLATT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 13138) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended May 15, 1916, on which the previous question had been moved on the last Calendar Wednesday, with the decision pending on the parliamentary question as to whether the previous question could be moved on a Calendar Wednesday bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that, despite the rule forbidding a committee to have more than two days, he may be permitted to call up the bill which was pending on the last Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Chair rules or the House gives unanimous consent to take up this bill, does that give the Committee on Banking and Currency the right to call up any other bills to-day?

The SPEAKER. No. If the House gave permission to call up this bill, the committee's jurisdiction would end with that.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if consent is not given, and the Speaker rules that the motion for the previous question is in order, and the previous question should be voted down, of course gentlemen opposed to the bill claiming recognition would be entitled to an hour's time under the rule. I doubt if we should take that chance on Calendar Wednesday, the committee already having occupied two full days with a question of that sort pending, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

PERMITTING PRIVATE BANKERS TO BE DIRECTORS IN TWO BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the bill H. R. 13138.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to make that motion, but it will require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me a moment——

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. The Chair's ruling involves this, that he will recognize on Calendar Wednesday a gentleman to move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The rule is—

Provided further, That whenever any committee shall have occupied two Wednesdays it shall not be in order, unless the House by a two-thirds vote shall otherwise determine, to consider any unfinished business previously called up by such committee, unless the previous question had been ordered thereon, upon any succeeding Wednesday until the other committees have been called in their turn under this rule.

Mr. WINGO. I see. I had lost sight of that. I was thinking of the general rule. I stand corrected.

The SPEAKER. It was intended that such a committee should have an opportunity.

Mr. WINGO. I see.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As to simply voting on this bill, I believe that the Chair has ruled that the motion is in order; but simply voting on that is not a fair test as to whether the House wants to dispense with Calendar Wednesday. The way that thing runs is, these men out here in the lobby, the Members, commence streaming in here, and some gentlemen out in the lobby suggest how to vote or what our vote is or what the Republican vote is, or something of the sort; and it is not a fair chance to do away with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit, this bill was left over from the last Calendar Wednesday, and there is no opposition to it. Whichever way the Speaker rules, it will be passed in a few minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask that the bill be reported?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of the House that the Chair does not consider that this motion would dispense with Calendar Wednesday. This would simply allow the Committee on Banking and Currency to conclude one bill, concerning which the motion is made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My recollection about that is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself and the present Speaker are the only ones that ever had anything to do with this Calendar Wednesday rule, and my recollection is, although I would not be positive about it, that Speaker CANNON and myself both ruled that in a situation like this you could go on and vote on a bill on a third Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. That is when the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; that is when the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not been ordered on this bill. The motion for the previous question is pending.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, is not the situation substantially this, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], on the second Wednesday which his committee occupied, called up a bill and after some discussion moved the previous question, and that the point of order was made against that motion, and before it was decided the House adjourned? Now, the gentleman from New York simply wishes to take up that bill where it was left, to ask for a decision on that motion, and conclude the consideration of that measure, when the call of the committees will proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is a correct statement of the situation. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] to consider the unfinished business which was pending on the last Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks that the bill be reported. The Chair thinks that is a reasonable request. Without objection, the bill will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13138) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended May 15, 1916.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended by the act of May 15, 1916, be further amended by inserting in the proviso at the end of the second clause of said section, after the word "prohibit," the words "any private banker or," so that the proviso as amended shall read:

"And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prohibit any private banker or any officer, director, or employee of any member bank or class A director of a Federal reserve bank, who shall first procure the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, which board is hereby authorized, at its discretion, to grant, withhold, or revoke such consent, from being an officer, director, or employee of not more than two other banks, banking associations, or trust companies, whether organized under the laws of the United States or any State, if such other bank, banking association, or trust company is not in substantial competition with such banker or member bank.

"The consent of the Federal Reserve Board may be procured before the person applying therefor has been elected as a class A director of a Federal reserve bank or as a director of any member bank."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York to consider this bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that two-thirds having, in his opinion, voted in the affirmative, the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill that has just been reported is before the House for consideration.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, may I refresh the memory of the Chair? A motion for the previous question had been made and a point of order was pending. The determination of that point of order would be the first thing, would it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is the first business. The determination of this point of order is not without difficulty. It is a puzzling question. What the Chair should determine is, of course, the intent of this new rule. It has never been interpreted. Under Speaker CLARK the question was once raised, but the Speaker reserved time for deliberation, and then the question did not come up again, just as it would not have come up to-day except for the two-thirds vote of the House, and so it is a novel question.

The purpose of the Chair will be to decide the question, both in accord with what he thinks was the purpose of those who framed the rule, and also in accord with what he thinks would be for the advantage of the House in carrying out that purpose.

The original intention of the Calendar Wednesday rule was to force the consideration upon one day of the week of a certain class of business. Experience showed, however, that the rule was not accomplishing what was hoped and planned, and accordingly the rule was changed and the clause inserted which gives rise to the question before us to-day.

The rule reads—

Not more than two hours of general debate shall be permitted on any measure called up on Calendar Wednesday, and all debate must be confined to the subject matter of the bill, the time to be equally divided between those for and against the bill.

The Chair is disposed to follow, in general, the line of reasoning made two weeks ago by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. The phrase—

Not more than two hours of general debate shall be permitted—has some uncertainty, for although the phrase "general debate" is usually used as applying to debate in Committee of the Whole, where it is not confined to the subject of the bill, yet it is also used as to debate on a bill in the House, the initial debate covering the whole subject of the bill, and the Chair does not think that phrase alone determines the question, although it might be ruled that "general debate" applied simply to debate in Committee of the Whole. The Chair thinks it tends in that direction.

Then the phrase—

All debate must be confined to the subject matter of the bill—applies simply to debate in Committee of the Whole, because in the House without any such provision the debate must be confined to the subject matter of the bill. But, although that phrase applies simply to the Committee of the Whole it does not necessarily follow that the whole sentence has the same application. Then comes the phrase—the time to be equally divided between those for and against the bill.

That might apply as well to bills on the House Calendar as to bills on the Union Calendar. But the main purpose of this clause was to expedite the business of the House. The Calendar Wednesday rule had fallen short of accomplishing the end for which it was originally aimed, that of giving to relatively unimportant bills one day in the week when they would be considered and removed from the calendar. By tactics which might be called filibustering the purpose of that rule had been evaded, and this provision was inserted to prevent those delaying tactics. So the Chair thinks the main purpose of adopting this rule was speed and expedition in the transaction of the business of the House on Calendar Wednesday.

That being so, it seems to the Chair that that purpose will be best furthered by holding that this clause applies to bills on the Union Calendar only and that when bills on the House Calendar are brought up on Calendar Wednesday the previous question can be ordered at any time. The only way in which that would at all controvert this rule would be that it might interfere with the phrase—

the time to be equally divided between those for and against the bill—

because the man who had the bill in charge might use five minutes and then move the previous question. He might not give to those opposed to the bill any opportunity for debate. But the Chair does not think that argument has much practical force, for it is the custom for the man in charge of a bill to recognize the equal claim to debate of those opposed, and it is very rare that in debate the time is not fairly divided. On this very bill, for instance, the gentleman having it in charge, after having used 10 minutes himself, yielded 10 minutes to a gentleman opposed to the bill. The Chair might suggest that this very bill somewhat illustrates the fact that this ruling would not interfere with fair play, but would further the main purpose of the rule and prevent filibustering and hasten action, because the Chair has more than a suspicion that the time desired in opposition was not really because of antagonism to the bill, but was aimed at prolonging the consideration of this bill, so as to occupy the Calendar Wednesday and prevent the consideration of other bills which might follow it. So this very case is an illustration of the way in which the purpose of Calendar Wednesday is sometimes being obstructed and the rule availed of for filibustering purposes.

Therefore the Chair thinks that it would best be carrying out the intention of those who framed this provision and expediting the business of the House to rule that the previous question can be ordered. That leaves it all in the control of the House, because if the House desires debate the previous question can be voted down. Therefore the Chair rules that the previous question, which was moved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], is in order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, there was some confusion on the floor and I did not hear all that the Chair said as to an equal division of the time. Does the Chair hold that under his decision, if the chairman of a committee wished to cut off debate, he could arbitrarily get up and debate the bill for one minute, and then move the previous question, and if a majority of the House saw fit to deprive the opposition, which might consist of one man, of the provision of the rule which gives him an equal amount of time, the House could do that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the gentleman can move the previous question after one minute's debate if he so desires; that he has the same power in this case as to moving the previous question that he would have at any time in the House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the difficulty of the question, and, with all deference to the Chair, I believe I will appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 59, noes 8.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members. As many as are in favor of the decision of the Chair standing as the judgment of the House will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 274, nays 15, answered "present" 5, not voting 133, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York for the previous question on the bill.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were 143 ayes and 10 noes.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. COLLIER, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absense as of April 14 for an indefinite period on account of sickness in his family.

CELEBRATION OF ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF ADMISSION OF STATE OF MAINE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk called the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12460) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, as soon as practicable, and in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union as a State, there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 50-cent pieces to the number of 100,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purpose, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the Government shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the proposition involved in this bill is to use a special design in the coinage of $50,000 worth of half dollars in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union. The bill is based exactly on the act passed in the Sixty-fifth Congress in a similar case, in the matter of the admission of the State of Illinois. The rights of the Government have been entirely protected, as we believe, in the bill. No expense is involved on the part of the Government of the United States, the expense of preparing dies and all other details being taken care of by the State of Maine. The design prepared by the State under the terms of the bill must be approved by the Director of the Mint. There is the same amount of silver in the proposed half dollar as in the ordinary coined half dollar.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is this to take the place of the coinage of any other half dollars during the next year?

Mr. PETERS. This does not change the regular business of coinage. It simply uses this design on $50,000 worth of 50-cent pieces. It has no other effect on the coinage.

Mr. TILSON. It is well known that silver at the present time is at a very high price as compared with the former price or with the price as measured by gold. Will there be any difficulty in securing the silver metal or the additional amount of silver metal to make into these coins?

Mr. PETERS. I understand there will not be. The Government is coining 50-cent pieces, of course, from time to time, and, in the next $50,000 that is being coined, if this bill should become a law, this special design will be used. There is no expense whatever attached to the transaction on the part of the Government. We believe it to be a suitable and desirable way of recognizing an important historical event.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Who is bearing the expense of the dies?

Mr. PETERS. The State of Maine pays all of the expense of the dies.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has this measure the approval of the Treasury Department?

Mr. PETERS. It has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Director of the Mint. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will not move the previous question until we can get some information in respect to the bill.

Mr. VESTAL. I withhold the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I could not hear all of the explanation of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PETERS]. Is it the purpose to have the $50,000 worth of these coins redeemed after the anniversary? I presume that when the anniversary is had the coins will be used in connection with the celebration. Then, naturally, after the celebration shall have ceased, outside of the sentimental or souvenir value, there will be no reason for the continuation of this particular design. Is there any provision in this bill for its discontinuance or for the redemption of the coins?

Mr. PETERS. Not at all; there could not be. The coins will be used exactly as any other 50-cent pieces are used. They will simply go into circulation with a special design upon them, as was the case in the State of Illinois some years ago.

Mr. GARD. I understand that, but what I am trying to get at is this: Some of the thrifty people in the State of Maine will take some of these 50-cent pieces and put them away where they will never see the light of day again, at least among people who circulate money by spending it. Is there going to be any power of redemption, or are these coins still to roam through our currency system?

Mr. PETERS. There is going to be no special power of redemption. They will continue to roam so long as they are in circulation. It can not be otherwise.

Mr. GARD. I see that section 2 provides for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins in accordance with the laws now in force relating to subsidiary coinage.

Mr. PETERS. Certainly, so far as any coins are redeemed. These will have no special consideration and no special privilege. The general laws in respect to coinage apply to these 50-cent pieces just as to other 50-cent pieces.

Mr. GARD. I have in my hand Public, No. 163, which relates to the coinage of 50-cent pieces for the celebration of the anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union. A hasty examination shows that the bill under consideration is the same as that contained in act No. 163.

Mr. PETERS. It is exactly the same, changing, of course, the United States?

Mr. GARD. Is there any provision about the dies, which shall not be made at Government expense, becoming the property of the United States?

Mr. PETERS. I think the law provides for that now. The law in force provides that all such dies shall be the property of the United States. They are made under the direction of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. GARD. Asking pardon for my crass ignorance on the matter, will the gentleman kindly advise me when this celebration is to be had?

Mr. PETERS. It is in progress now, and will be all of this year in the State of Maine.

Mr. GARD. There is no particular time at which a celebration will be had?

Mr. PETERS. Different towns and cities take up the matter during the summer and will have special celebrations, but it will be a general year of reunions and celebrations in the State of Maine in honor of our centennial.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VESTAL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COINAGE IN COMMEMORATION OF ADMISSION OF STATE OF ALABAMA INTO THE UNION.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12824.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12824) to authorize the coinage of 25-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union.

Be it enacted, etc., That as soon as practicable, and in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union as a State, there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 25-cent pieces to the number of 100,000, such 25-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and said 25-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purpose, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the Government shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "25-cent" and insert in lieu thereof "50-cent."

Page 1, line 7, strike out "25-cent" and insert in lieu thereof "50-cent."

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union, which occurred December 14, 1819. The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, of which I have the honor of being a member, unanimously reported the bill favorably to the House. The original bill provided for the coinage of one hundred thousand 25-cent pieces, while the present bill, as amended, provides for the coinage of one hundred thousand 50-cent pieces in commemoration of that important historical event, and I now ask your favorable consideration and support for the passage of the bill.

Alabama's history and her traditions occupy a distinguished chapter in the history of our great Republic. Her agricultural and mineral resources constitute vast wealth, and her contribution to the Republic in eminent statesmen, orators, soldiers, educators, and sterling citizenship surpasses her untold and inestimable material wealth.

Hernando De Soto, a Spanish cavalier, ambitious to surpass in glory the exploits of Cortez, another Spanish cavalier, applied for and received a commission from the Spanish King, Charles V, to invade and subject the region then known as Florida. He organized a troop of bold adventurers and, after long, weary marches and many bloody engagements with Indian tribes, eventually succeeded in traversing that territory now known as the States of Florida and Georgia, and crossed what is now the Alabama-Georgia State line and entered Cherokee County, Ala., July 2, 1540. This event marks the first entrance of the white man into the domains of Alabama. Crossing the Coosa River, De Soto marched to Tallassee, stopping en route on a hill where now stands the majestic capitol of the State. At Montgomery De Soto met the Indian chief Tuskaloosa, whose reign extended over the broad territories bordering the Alabama and Tombigbee Rivers. From Alabama De Soto found his way into Mississippi, then into Tennessee, and on April 25, 1541, at Chickasaw Bluff, he discovered the Mississippi River. De Soto, fired by ambition and lured on by two desires, that of transcending the achievements of Cortez and to find the vast wealth of gold and gems of which he had heard such glowing stories, utterly failed in the accomplishment, and with blighted hopes he passed away and was buried in the waters of the Mississippi.

For more than a century and a half, so far as history discloses, Alabama was not visited by a solitary white man. In the year 1682 the French Government, under Louis XIV, with designs of conquest and the building of a mighty empire in the New World, commissioned La Salle to explore the Mississippi River and in the name of France possess all that vast territory drained by the great river. In 1699 the first French colonists anchored near Mobile Point, settled at Biloxi, Miss., and in 1709 settled Mobile under the direction of Iberville, after whose death Bienville governed the colony for 30 years. With varying fortunes Mobile passed into Spanish possession, then to British, and again, in 1780, following a victory by Galvez over the British, Mobile fell into the hands of the Spanish. For more than 32 years it remained under Spanish rule. On April 15, 1813, Mobile was acquired by the United States through conquest, and the Stars and Stripes waved above its fort.

Alabama as a Territory of the United States developed rapidly. Settlers came in from Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, and North Carolina. The early history of the Territory abounds in battles and adventures with the Indians. The most notable of all the battles with the red men is that of Horseshoe Bend, near my boyhood home, in Tallapoosa County. It was here that Gen. Jackson drove the Indians into the bend of the Tallapoosa River and, after desperate and bloody fighting, slaughtered them by the hundreds. Many Americans were killed, the Indians bravely fighting to the last, many of them refusing mercy. In this battle Maj. L. P. Montgomery, after whom Montgomery County is named, was slain. The renowned Sam Houston, famous in Texas as well as in Alabama, was wounded in the same battle.

The early history of Alabama is checkered with thrilling adventure and romance. It was here that De Soto ended his brilliant and romantic career; it was here that Aaron Burr, that brilliant though debased conspirator, was arrested and thence conveyed to Washington for trial as a traitor; it was here that the exiled friends of Napoleon landed following his defeat at Waterloo. Courtiers and statesmen, brave generals who had achieved fame upon the proudest battle fields of the Old World, beautiful women whose presence once graced the courts of Europe, came as exiles and outcasts. Near Demopolis, Ala., the colony settled and there lived until the Bourbons, relaxing their hatred, recalled many of them. Others settled in the cities of the West, and few remained in the State.

The political life of Alabama, until it was admitted in 1819 into the Union of States, comprises the history of the Spanish, French, British, and American government of that territory which is now the State of Alabama. Its control has been under the flags of four nations, and in the sixties the flag of the Southern Confederacy floated from her capitol, where now waves the Stars and Stripes—now and forever. Many were the eminent statesmen, orators, and educators who directed the growth and development of this great State from its birth. William R. King, statesman and orator, contributed his great talents and service to the State. He served in Congress, in the Constitutional Convention, United States Senate, was minister to France, and in 1852 was elected Vice President of the United States. Alexander B. Meek is the father of the public-school system in Alabama, and in 1853 introduced a bill to establish and maintain a system of free public schools in this State. The term of Gov. Thomas Bibb, 1820–21, marks an era of great prosperity. Settlers flocked to the State, newspapers were established, steamboat companies were organized, the University of Alabama was chartered, lands were opened for settlers, and schools were established. In 1825 Gov. Pickens received, in Montgomery, Gen. Lafayette, the bosom friend of George Washington, as the State's guest. The people greeted him with a continuous ovation in his journey from Montgomery to Mobile. The brilliant William L. Yancey entered politics in Alabama in 1841, served in Congress, became leader of southern Democrats, was commissioner to England, drew up the ordinance of secession and secured its passage. William L. Yancey, orator and statesman, has been rightly called the "Demosthenes of the South."

Among Alabama's great men I may justly mention Henry W. Hilliard, statesman, orator, and educator. He was minister to Belgium under Harrison and minister to Brazil under Hayes. Among the distinguished Alabamians who won the rank of general in the cause of the Southern Confederacy are James A. Longstreet, Josiah Gorgas, W. W. Allen, Daniel Leadbetter, Cullen A. Battle, James Cantey, J. T. Holtzclaw, James H. Clanton, Henry D. Clayton, and Sterling A. M. Wood. The daring exploits of Admiral Raphael Semmes are known to the world, and the Confederate cruiser Alabama is celebrated in the annals of naval history. Beside John Paul Jones, who sailed his ship under the cliffs of the English Channel, Raphael Semmes stands without a peer. During the trying days of the Civil War deeds of heroism and valor were not confined to the men of my State. There were deeds of heroism, brave sacrifice, and uncomplaining suffering on the part of the noble women of Alabama, whose virtues and deeds are not recorded on the pages of human history.

Of the many heroic women of that State there is one, at least, whose name lives in history, whose heroism is clothed in beautiful verse of many poets, and whose memory is perpetuated in marble and granite. In Gadsden, my home city, Emma Sansom lived as a girl. A monument to her memory stands on the banks of the Coosa River. Almost within the limits of the city, preserved by the State, is the old Sansom homestead, where the heroine spent her girlhood days. Gen. Forest, in his pursuit of Col. Streight, whose raiding force of 2,000 men were headed for Rock Run Furnace, in Cherokee County, to destroy it, together with connecting railway lines to Rome, Ga., when he reached the swollen waters of Black Creek he had almost overtaken Streight and needed a guide to conduct him to a ford of the creek. Emma Sansom volunteered and leaped on the horse behind the general. Soon shot and shell were striking about them, but bravely this 16-year-old girl piloted the general to a safe landing. He continued his pursuit of Streight, and, by strategy and skill, captured him and his 2,000 picked troops at Laurence, Cherokee County, with a force of barely 600 men.

Gen. Joseph Wheeler, a veteran of two wars, served for many years in this House. He rendered valiant service to the Confederacy, and in the War with Spain Gen. Wheeler donned the "blue," unsheathed his sword for his country, and carried the Stars and Stripes to victory at Santiago. As a reward for his gallantry President McKinley appointed him a major general. He served a short period in the Philippines, was retired as a major general, and died a few years thereafter. His remains now repose in beautiful Arlington Cemetery, on the banks of the Potomac, beneath the tallest monument adorning that great national burying ground. Alabama has furnished one Justice to the United States Supreme Court, Justice John A. Campbell. She has contributed many statesmen, soldiers, orators, and men and women of letters. Among the latter I recall the names of Mrs. Chaudron, Mrs. Octavia Le Vert, Mrs. Elizabeth Bellamy, Mrs. Augusta Evans Wilson, T. C. De Leon, Joseph Hamilton, Hannis Taylor, Abram J. Ryan, Dr. Thomas M. Owen, Albert A. Mullen, Samuel Mintern Peck, William Russell Smith, Mary Johnson, Dr. J. L. M. Curry, whose statue now adorns Statuary Hall in this Capitol, and many others whose names I can not now recall.

Alabama's dark days of reconstruction, like those of every other Southern State, are not matters of pleasant reminiscence, and I shall forego any further reference here. Suffice that it be said, Alabama and her people are true. In the War with Spain she cheerfully contributed her brave sons, and in the world's Great War the flower of the State, in the Rainbow Division, astonished the world, broke the Prussian Guard, and carried Old Glory to victory. The names of these brave men would fill a volume. Hundreds of them I know personally, many of whom now sleep amid the poppies in Flanders Field.

I should prove recreant to duty if I failed to mention Alabama's three grand old men—Gen. Pettus, John T. Morgan, and John Hollis Bankhead. John T. Morgan's great fight for the Nicaragua Canal ultimately resulted in opening the work at Panama, but it remained for another Alabamian to consummate the great plan—Gen. William L. Sibert, of Gadsden, Ala. The work of John Hollis Bankhead stands as a monument to the great material development of Alabama.

Of the mineral and agricultural wealth of Alabama and her material development I have not spoken. Her growth in population, her splendid cities, her vast resources, stand as monuments to the world and need no encomium from me. Recently $50,000,000 were voted in bonds to build highways in the State. Mobile Bay furnishes a splendid harbor; the Alabama is navigable; the Warrior has been made so with locks and dams; the Coosa, larger than the Warrior, by the maintenance of the storage or reservoir system will furnish a great artery of commerce to the Gulf.

Alabama has risen from the ashes of war and the desolation of reconstruction to its present exalted station. With you her citizenship rejoices in the prosperity and glory of the Republic. Her people, devoted and true, are ever ready to respond to duty's call in defense of flag, home, and country. In all that is good and great for the advancement of America, whether it be sacrifice in time of war or labor in days of peace, Alabama is ever ready to respond with all her resources and with all her strength. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. I will yield.

Mr. GARD. I was wondering whether the committee had taken into consideration this question. Of course, I do not like to oppose, and hardly anyone here would oppose, and I favor the purpose of issuing these commemorative coins, but what I would like to know is how many of these constructive measure bills the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures are now going to bring out, and I speak of that seriously for this reason: The integrity of money is maintained largely and more easily with the integrity of design. Now, where designs are made numerous and fantastic, as they may be for the purpose of a centennial or a memorial celebration, have the gentlemen on the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee borne in mind the difficulty as incident to coinage measures with respect to the increase of the possibility of counterfeiting? I speak of that because it would seem to me if we are going on with a number of these half dollars for Maine, Arkansas, Alabama, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, and they are each to have State half dollars, because that is what it amounts to, are not we in danger of overdoing the proposition? Are not we getting away from the stability of design which makes people understand what it means, and are not we in danger of laying ourselves open to fantastic and frivolous currency which in the future must be redeemed by the issuance of stable coins representing 50 cents?

Mr. VESTAL. I will say to the gentleman that the point raised is a serious one. These bills were sent to the Secretary of the Treasury for his report, and I might say that there is only one other bill of this kind. His suggestion is along the same line of the gentleman from Ohio, that there ought not to be too many of these bills for that reason.

Mr. GARD. Well, his only suggestion I see in the report is in the letter—I have not the favor of the whole letter, but I speak from the part used by the committee—where he states that the department has no specific recommendation to make.

Mr. VESTAL. That is the report that is given to the committee, and a personal conversation with him after these three bills had been reported.

Mr. GARD. What is the other bill to be reported?

Mr. VESTAL. H. R. 13227.

Mr. GARD. What is it about?

Mr. VESTAL. It is a bill introduced by Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts to commemorate the landing of the Pilgrims.

Mr. GARD. Is there also to be a coin for the anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes; there is to be a coin.

Mr. GARD. A 50-cent coin, too?

Mr. VESTAL. A 50-cent coin.

Mr. GARD. That simply illustrates the drift of things I have been trying to explain. I am sure with everyone here I am in favor of having a big celebration wherever these State celebrations occur, because I think that makes for a better public spirit, but for the life of me I can not see what advantage there is for a State celebration to gather up a lot of coins with a particular stamp on them. It seems to me rather to cheapen the national coin, because it looks like an old-fashioned medal at a county fair rather than the half dollar of the daddies, to use the old expression. I think that these propositions are open to serious objection, which, of course, should be voiced by the Secretary of the Treasury, because if the Secretary of the Treasury and his executive officers are willing to take up the burden of maintaining these coins and seeing that they are not counterfeited, seeing that the dies are protected and they are not used except for the purposes authorized by the act, then surely there could not be much complaint from the legislative side, but I speak the way I do because it seems to me upon serious reflection that we are in actual danger of overdoing this commemoration coin stuff, and instead of making it an attribute which would inure to the benefit of the State or community, we are going beyond that and are cheapening our coin. I hope the gentleman and his committee will bear in mind in slight measure what I have said regarding it, at least for transmission to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union."

On motion of Mr. VESTAL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COINAGE IN COMMEMORATION OF THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 13227.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13227) to authorize the coinage of a 50-cent piece in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims.

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 50-cent pieces to the number of 500,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

Mr. VESTAL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this measure is along the line of those previously passed. I want to say that I appreciate the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], but I would direct his attention to the fact that the Congress is not establishing any new practice in authorizing these souvenir coins in commemoration of important historic events. At the time of the World's Fair in Chicago they authorized, I believe, the coinage of five million 50-cent pieces. We seldom see any of them in circulation now. I suppose they have either been lost or have gone into the hands of souvenir hunters, and are treasured mementoes of that great event.

Of course, there is no need to elaborate upon the importance of the great event which these coins are authorized to commemorate in part. If the gentleman from Ohio has any new questions in connection with these matters that have come up in his mind, I shall be very glad to attempt to answer them.

Mr. GARD. I would like to have information from the gentleman about the merits of the bill for which he stands sponsor. I know the bill provides for 500,000 of these 50-cent pieces, thus raising the limit over the State of Maine by some 400,000.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. This is a tercentenary instead of a centenary. It is a three hundredth anniversary instead of a one hundredth anniversary.

Mr. GARD. I understand. So the gentleman's idea is that if we could dig up a four hundredth anniversary, they would be entitled to still more?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARD. Has the gentleman in his general store of information knowledge as to how many half dollars there are in the United States?

Mr. WALSH. No; I have not. I will say to the gentleman I seldom see one, and it is a pretty difficult matter to keep track of them, but there are a very large number. I think if they were all placed to my credit I would be perfectly willing——

Mr. GARD. I ask the gentleman's indulgence for a moment to inquire of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL], if he has any information, in the confusion of coins, as to how many 50-cent pieces there are issued?

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman mean how many different designs?

Mr. GARD. How many in bulk or amount?

Mr. VESTAL. I have not that information.

Mr. GARD. How large an amount of 50-cent pieces in money is the United States sponsor for now as issued from its mints?

Mr. VESTAL. I am not able to give the gentleman that information.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman from Ohio any further question?

Mr. GARD. No; I have not any further question.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. MILLER. I see that this bill is in relation to the commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims. At what place, Provincetown or Plymouth?

Mr. WALSH. In Massachusetts.

Mr. MILLER. That includes both the landing at Provincetown and at Plymouth?

Mr. WALSH. They made the first landing at Provincetown, and then made their settlement at Plymouth.

Mr. MILLER. With 9 or 10 days' difference.

Mr. WALSH. About a month.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Speaker, these half dollars, as I understand, will contain more than 50 cents' worth of silver bullion?

Mr. VESTAL. These pieces authorized to be coined here will have the same amount of silver as the ordinary half dollar.

Mr. DUNBAR. The ordinary half dollar, as I understand it, is at a premium. If the silver dollar is melted into bullion, it will bring more than a dollar. Will these silver half dollars which are to be coined contain more than 50 cents' worth of silver bullion?

Mr. VESTAL. I can answer the gentleman by saying there will be no difference.

Mr. DUNBAR. I know there will be no difference. You stated that. What I want to know is how much silver will actually be in these half dollars, and if there is an expense to be incurred by reason of their coinage will the United States bear that expense?

Mr. VESTAL. Oh, no.

Mr. DUNBAR. Who will bear it?

Mr. VESTAL. The State of Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill, on line 6, page 1, by striking out the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VESTAL: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. GARD. What is the reason for that?

Mr. VESTAL. The committee in consideration of this measure reported 300,000 instead of 500,000, but in the printing of the bill——

Mr. GARD. The bill as it came out was for 500,000?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes; it was a mistake in the printing of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Is this a committee amendment?

Mr. VESTAL. It is.

Mr. GARD. For 300,000?

Mr. VESTAL. For 300,000 instead of 500,000.

Mr. GARD. Is there any thought in the mind of the gentleman from Indiana or in the mind of the gentleman from Massachusetts that there will be any increased purchasing power of these half dollars issued for the tercentenary celebration?

Mr. WALSH. Why, I think very likely, particularly on Cape Cod.

Mr. GARD. I trust that I may have an opportunity of spending a few days there.

Mr. WALSH. I think that each of the three States that are interested in these measures will be very glad to have the gentleman within its borders for the purpose of acquiring and assisting in circulating some of these special coins.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I want to move to amend the title by striking out "a 50-cent piece" and inserting in lieu thereof "50-cent pieces."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by striking out the words "a 50-cent piece" and insert in lieu thereof "50-cent pieces."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

On motion of Mr. VESTAL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STANDARDS OF MEASURES.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12350.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12350, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12350, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to dispensing with the first reading of the bill?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] is recognized.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to standardize hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables and is along the line of the legislation that has heretofore been passed by Congress standardizing the Climax grape baskets and other fruit containers. The bill provides for five different sizes of hampers. At the present time there are something like 49 different styles or varieties of hampers and about 34 different sizes.

The photograph I have here [exhibiting same] will give the committee an idea of the different varieties and sizes of hampers that are now being used in the United States in the marketing of fruits and vegetables. This bill proposes to eliminate about 30 sizes and to standardize 5 different sizes of hampers.

The committee can readily see that with the hampers that are now being used, ranging all the way from the size of a quart to 50 quarts, in the use of a 27-quart hamper or a 28-quart hamper the ordinary consumer can not tell the difference between that and a bushel, and the styles and sizes are made in such a way that the ordinary layman could not tell the difference between a hamper containing 27 quarts and a hamper containing 32 quarts. So the bill proposes to standardize the peck hamper, the half-bushel hamper, the five-eighths-bushel hamper, the bushel, and the bushel and a half, eliminating all the other different sizes and styles of hampers.

The same thing applies to the round-stave basket. This photograph [indicating] shows the number of sizes and styles of the round-stave basket. The bottom row illustrates what the sizes of the baskets will be if standardized under this bill, except that we have included in the bill a five-eighths bushel round stave basket, making five sizes of the round stave basket and eliminating about 30.

This photograph [indicating] illustrates what was done by recent legislation in Congress in the way of standardizing the small fruit basket. The bottom photograph shows the number and sizes of baskets that were in use before the standardization bill was passed. At the top are shown the ones that are in use now.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Is there anything in this legislation that shall settle the question whether the bottom of the basket shall be in the bottom or up in the middle? [Laughter.]

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. GARD. By whom are these illustrations of obsolete and new designs prepared?

Mr. VESTAL. By the Bureau of Markets. This photograph shows at the top the number of splint baskets and sizes and styles that are now used. The bottom shows what would be the sizes under this bill—8 quarts, 12 quarts, 16 quarts, 20 quarts, and 24 quarts. The photograph that I showed a moment ago illustrates what the committee has included, the five-eighths bushel basket.

Mr. CASEY. Why a five-eighths basket?

Mr. VESTAL. The bill as originally drawn excluded the five-eighths bushel basket. Extensive hearings were had on this bill. It developed that in the marketing of tomatoes especially the five-eighths bushel basket was used in every State, practically, where they were marketing tomatoes. Especially in the States of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Indiana, and Ohio they were using the five-eighths bushel baskets, and the evidence before the committee convinced the committee that it was a size that ought to be included. In fact, it is a large half bushel—five-eighths—so that there can be no mistaking it. You get a large half bushel instead of a small. There would be no deception there, and there would be no mistaking the five-eighths for a full-sized bushel.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Is that to be stamped by the Government?

Mr. VESTAL. No; these containers under the bill are not supposed to be stamped. We are fixing the dimensions and capacity of these baskets so that they must contain a half bushel, or bushel, or bushel and a half.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. But they are plain, and no stamping is required?

Mr. VESTAL. No; but it is made unlawful to manufacture any other sizes.

Mr. KNUTSON. There is no necessity of stamping if it is made unlawful to use any other sizes.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I want to inquire if there is anything in this bill that requires the contents of the container to be marked on the outside of it?

Mr. VESTAL. No.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I think the bill should be amended so that the capacity of the container should be marked on the outside, so that people purchasing any of these products in baskets may know just what they are getting. For instance, a woman or a general purchaser does not know the difference between the appearance of a five-eighths bushel or one-half bushel.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman will allow me to explain, I may say that the five-eighths bushel basket will not be used in the marketing of general food products. Under the evolution of the tomato industry it has been found that for field work, for factory work, and for all work connected with the gathering, handling, and delivery of the tomato the five-eighths basket is the maximum amount of the vegetable that can go without crushing in the hamper, and is the one size that can best be used in the field for the ordinary boy or girl or man to carry. Anything under it is a loss of 20 per cent, and anything above it is too much to handle and results in loss of efficiency.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. But in the regular marketing of fruits and vegetables I think that the basket should be marked to show just exactly what it contains, so that the purchaser going to the market or going to the store may know just what amount of fruit or vegetables he buys.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman suppose anybody would have any difficulty in seeing the difference between a peck measure and a half bushel, or between a half bushel and a bushel?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. No; they would have no difficulty concerning that, but they could not tell the difference between a five-eighths bushel measure and a four-eighths bushel measure.

Mr. LAYTON. The five-eighths of a bushel does not enter into this matter at all for general purposes. It is only for tomatoes, and the experience of 30 years shows that a five-eighths basket is the evolution of utility for the handling of that one special product.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Take the case of peaches.

Mr. LAYTON. They are not put in five-eighths baskets.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. They are put in all kinds of baskets.

Mr. GARD and Mr. JUUL rose.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr VESTAL. I want to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JUUL. What is the use of having a basket that, if it was full, would contain a bushel, if there is not in the law something compelling the seller of the merchandise to put a bushel of stuff into it? You are simply dealing with baskets here. I want to see it made compulsory that the basket shall contain its full capacity.

Mr. LAYTON. It must be full or it can not go into interstate commerce.

Mr. JUUL. Is there anything in the law which compels that?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] said no.

Mr. VESTAL. The committee have excluded the filling provision that was originally in the bill, for the reason that there is now pending in the House a bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture amending the pure food and drugs act which compels the filling of all these containers according to strict commercial practice. That is the reason why it was eliminated from this bill.

Mr. JUUL. Does not the gentleman think this would be a good place to have it?

Mr. VESTAL. I am not so sure about that. This bill seeks simply to provide certain containers, making it unlawful to manufacture, sell, or offer for sale, for instance, a 27-quart measure or a 28-quart measure. Those are all cut out. This is done so that if the ordinary person goes in to buy a bushel of potatoes the basket which holds those potatoes shall be a bushel basket.

Anybody can see whether or not the bushel container is full, but can not tell so much about the size of the container. For instance, this particular thing developed in the hearings, which satisfied my mind with reference to the justice of this sort of legislation: Gentlemen were before the committee asking for the retention of the 14-quart basket or hamper. They claimed that they needed that in their business, that it was absolutely necessary. I asked one of them, "Why do you desire to keep the 14-quart basket? Why not eliminate the 14-quart basket? We have the 16-quart or half-bushel basket. Why is not that sufficient?"

He immediately replied, unwittingly, I suppose, "The reason we want the 14-quart basket is because we get just as much money for 14 quarts as we do for 16 quarts."

That is, they were putting over on the public a 14-quart basket for a 16-quart basket.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. That is the very reason why I shall insist that the container shall be marked so as to show just exactly what it contains, so that people will know exactly what they are buying.

Mr. VESTAL. I see the force of the gentleman's contention.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. People go to markets and stores and buy fruits and vegetables by the basket, and many of them do not have any idea whether they are getting half a peck or three-quarters of a peck.

Mr. VESTAL. If there is no such thing as a 14-quart basket on the market, and if there is nothing but a 16-quart basket, the purchaser is bound to get 16 quarts whether it is marked on the outside of the basket or not.

Mr. KELLAR. Is there not a law now on the statute books, which was reported by the Committee on Agriculture, providing that containers must be marked to show how much they contain?

Mr. VESTAL. I think those are only State laws which compel the marking of the package. This bill does not provide for it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. What is the objection to providing in this law that they shall mark the baskets to show the sizes?

Mr. VESTAL. I do not know that there is any objection to it, but I do not believe it will help any.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. I want to get some information about the bill, and I ask the gentleman's indulgence. There is an existing law fixing the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities. That law was passed by the Sixty-third Congress. I take it that it relates exclusively to the barrel as a standard container, does it not? It seems to be a standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities, other than cranberries.

Mr. VESTAL. That covers cases where the barrel is used.

Mr. GARD. Is it commercially necessary to follow the language of our present law, as you do here in part only? You say the standard hamper for fruits and vegetables shall be a one-peck hamper, one-half bushel hamper, and so forth. Is it necessary to say that this standard hamper for fruits and vegetables and other dry commodities other than cranberries shall be of a certain dimension? In other words, when we passed the standard-barrel bill there seemed to have been a different scale or standard applied to cranberries from the one applied to fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities. Probably the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] can tell about cranberries. What I want to know is, first, whether this language should be included in the present bill?

Mr. VESTAL. I will say to the gentleman that I am not sure about that. We had Mr. Downey, of the Bureau of Markets, before the committee, and he went over the language very thoroughly. That did not occur to me, and I do not know whether that language should be included or not.

Mr. GARD. When we passed this bill I remember that there was quite a discussion about the cranberry barrel and the barrel provided for other than fruits and vegetables. There seemed to be a difference between barrels for the use of dry commodities and wet commodities. Of course the wet commodities have largely ceased.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. VESTAL. I will take five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARD. I want to call the gentleman's attention further to this.

Mr. VESTAL. It seemed to me that in regard to the standard-barrel act, cranberries are packed in a different sort of a barrel from other commodities and is exempt.

Mr. GARD. Cranberries are exempt in the barrel act.

Mr. VESTAL. We are not seeking to standardize the barrel, but certain hampers that are not used in the marketing of cranberries.

Mr. GARD. I am referring to the additional phrase "other dry commodities."

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. There is a difference between cranberry and other fruits for this reason: There is no one who would buy cranberries except from the retailer, and therefore a variety of kinds of packages for cranberries are not so necessary, because they will be distributed through the retailer, and the public is not going to be injured or cheated.

Mr. GARD. That argument is not conclusive, to my mind. If a man buys a barrel of cranberries he wants to know what the barrel contains. If he buys a barrel of cranberries he ought to have some standardized measure. I call the gentleman's attention to page 15 of his bill, which provides that this act shall not prohibit the manufacture of baskets or parts thereof to any foreign country in accordance with the specifications of a foreign consignee. The present law about the barrel is:

Provided, That no barrel shall be deemed below the standard within the meaning of this act when shipped to a foreign country and marketed according to specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser if not in conflict with the laws of the foreign country under which it is intended to be shipped.

Mr. VESTAL. The language in this act is not the same, but it means the same thing.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman thinks the language in his bill is practically the language in the barrel bill.

Mr. VESTAL. I think it will have the same effect.

Mr. GARD. I want to call attention to the additional exception which, I presume, is a committee amendment, as it appears on page 15, "nor shall this act prevent the manufacture of banana hampers of the shape and character now in commercial use as shipping containers for bananas." What is the object of that exception?

Mr. VESTAL. Bananas are not shipped in crates. There are different sizes of bunches of bananas. The crates that are around them are built over the bunch of bananas. One bunch may contain a certain number of dozen and another bunch contain a much larger number, and so the exception is made in favor of the covering of the bunch of bananas.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Certainly.

Mr. SINNOTT. How does this bill affect the small strawberry boxes as containers?

Mr. VESTAL. It does not affect them at all.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. Does this bill change the size or the standard of the Northwest apple boxes?

Mr. VESTAL. It does not.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Does this bill give any particular or exclusive right to any particular kind of container or patented container?

Mr. VESTAL. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. It leaves it absolutely open to any manufacturer?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this measure, as you will note from its title, is to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables. I view all standardization as a benefit to the consuming public, and, while there is no intention of placing any burden upon the middleman, it is a significant fact that the consumer invariably must foot the bill. The added expense caused by inefficiency in market produce is passed on to the consumer, thus increasing the cost of living.

The lack of uniformity in the sizes and dimensions of fruit and vegetable containers has stirred up a general demand for their standardization through Federal legislation. Individual States have taken it upon themselves to fix standards within their own jurisdictions, which, in turn, has complicated the situation to a greater extent. It is very clear that a Federal law is the only solution to this really national problem.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. There was an attempt some time ago in the House to standardize the containers of flour and meal. After all of the time wasted in the passage of that bill, we have no standard barrel for flour. Is there any more definite good that will come from this legislation?

Mr. KELLER. Why have we not a standard barrel for flour now?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will look over the legislation which finally passed, he will see that we are without a standard barrel for flour.

Mr. KELLER. I believe that we have a standard barrel for flour. This bill is definite and positive.

Mr. BLANTON. Will this bill cause the manufacturers of containers that are not standardized to scrap their plants?

Mr. KELLER. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean whether they will have to get new machinery and remodel their whole business.

Mr. KELLER. No; the manufacturer that makes these kinds of containers can readjust his machinery to comply with this bill with little cost.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman tell us whether, and to what extent, if at all, the shipment of apples will be affected by the provisions of this bill?

Mr. KELLER. Not at all, because the section covering apple boxes was taken out of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Then the matter of the containers in which apples are shipped is altogether excluded from this legislation?

Mr. KELLER. Yes. While there has been some opposition to this measure, it is, indeed, a source of gratification to know that the honest producer and grower, the honest commission merchant, the honest retail merchant, and the general public are heartily in favor of it. With the innumerable types, sizes, shapes, and forms of containers now in use throughout the country it is remarkable, indeed, that no greater protest has been registered by those concerned in the growth, distribution, and consumption of farm produce. Neither the buyer nor the seller can have even an accurate conception of the true contents of the basket or crate offered for sale. In purchasing vegetables at a market the ordinary consumer rarely, if ever, ascertains the weight or measure of the commodity he desires. He asks for 10 cents or 25 cents or 50 cents worth of a certain vegetable, and evidently assumes that he is getting value according to some standard measurement, when, as a matter of fact, he has trusted to the honesty of the dealer to see that he is getting value for his money. This simply paves the way for much misunderstanding, deception, and even fraud in the marketing of these commodities.

The continuance of such a system is unfair to the honest producer, it works an injustice on the straightforward middleman, it subjects the dealer to the condemnation of the general public, and indirectly adds to the high cost of living. With a standardized container in use throughout the country, protection is assured to every agency involved in the distribution of fruits and vegetables from the producer and grower down to the consumer.

As stated above, the demand for standardization is nationwide. Differences exist only as to what containers shall be adopted as standards. Consideration has, of necessity, been given to certain shapes and sizes of containers used in certain sections of the country for local utility, but there would seem to be no valid reason for the great diversity of containers in use throughout the country when the same result can be had by reducing these containers to a certain standard and eliminating the confusion resulting from such diversity. The legitimate business man demands that his business and his integrity be protected, while the consumer demands a system whereby he may ascertain the true quantity of a certain commodity when purchasing it. No substantial reason can be given for the existence of two containers so nearly alike in volume as the 14-quart and the 16-quart peach basket or the seven-eighths bushel and the bushel bean hamper. The smaller container generally masquerades for the larger.

There are in common use to-day over 40 types of cabbage crates, 20 styles of celery crates, 30 lettuce crates or boxes, 50 types of hampers, 20 sizes of round-stave baskets, and 25 sizes of splint or market baskets, where a few essential sizes would answer all the demands of the trade. This condition is most undesirable. Manufacturing costs are increased; losses to the shipper or carrier through breakage in transit are increased. The ultimate result is the tendency to increase wholesale and retail prices. The general public is called upon to pay for this inefficiency and lack of system in marketing.

A thorough canvass of the varied sections of the country has resulted in the conclusion that five sizes of hampers are ample to satisfy all the requirements of the trade. These sizes are the 1-peck hamper, one-half-bushel hamper, five-eighths-bushel hamper, 1-bushel hamper, and 1½-bushel hamper, the capacities and specifications for which are included in this measure.

The round-stave basket is perhaps more generally used as a shipping container than the hamper. This container can be used in shipping most varieties of fruits and vegetables. A confusing variety of this basket is also in use, to simplify which this measure reduces the number to five—one-half, five-eighths, 1, 1½, and 2 bushel basket, of a capacity and conforming to certain specifications.

Splint baskets are used quite generally in the marketing of fruits and vegetables. Like the hamper and the round-stave basket, the splint or market basket has an endless variation of size and shape, many of which are deliberately made for deception. When State or municipal agencies commence to doubt the contents of containers, the wily salesman sells his produce "by the basket," not mentioning the size. The only antidote for this evil is standardization, and I trust this House will readily appreciate the growing necessity for the enactment of the proposed legislation.

The original bill as introduced empowered the Secretary of Agriculture to prescribe tolerances in the quantities of fruits or vegetables to be packed in hampers, round-stave baskets, splint baskets, and so forth, but the committee in its final draft of this measure has seen fit to eliminate this provision, for the reason that it has already been provided for in the bill H. R. 10311, now pending on the calendar. Personally I strongly favor such a provision; it is another step forward in protecting the honest dealer and the consumer.

In conclusion I want to offer a few words of commendation to the Bureau of Standards for their whole-hearted and efficient assistance in connection with this progressive work. The untiring efforts of the employees of the bureau in compiling data and statistics and the thoroughness with which they have investigated every phase of marketing produce in all sorts of containers and in all parts of the country is worthy of note. Seldom is any good word spoken on the floor of this House for any of the Government bureaus, and I therefore take pleasure at this time in commending the Bureau of Standards for their efficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the bill.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL). The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a very comprehensive measure, and was reported only on the 19th of April. It apparently makes some important changes and imposes some very new restrictions upon the use of containers for fruits and vegetables. I do not see in the bill any exception saved which would permit the operation of laws which have passed the Congress heretofore fixing definite standards for certain classes of commodities. We passed an apple-barrel bill, as I recall it, and if I am not mistaken a bill for cranberries and other dry commodities. As I read this bill rather hastily, the only exception that has been made is apple boxes. If this bill becomes a law, the previous act which we passed fixing the standard for apple barrels will be suspended, will it not?

Mr. VESTAL. I think not. We are only standardizing certain containers and only attempt to do it—hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables. Those are the only things standardized by this bill. It will not affect any standardization of a barrel. There is provision in the bill on page 13 that the act shall not apply to baskets or other containers having a capacity less than 4 quarts. I do not think this will in any way conflict with the apple barrel act.

Mr. WALSH. The question is, When does a container cease to be a hamper and become a barrel, or when does it cease to be a round-stave basket and become a barrel? Is there anything in the gentleman's hearings to show when it is classified as a barrel?

Mr. GARD. Is the gentleman asking about the barrel bill?

Mr. WALSH. I was asking whether or not this measure supersedes the standard barrel bill which was passed, I think, in the Sixty-fourth Congress and also in the Sixty-fifth.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I think the astute gentleman from Massachusetts is taking advantage of the steering committee and its bill when none of the steering committee is present to defend it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the point of order prevented me from getting an answer to my question, and I shall wait until the five-minute rule.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the fact that the committee has reported this measure for final passage by no means indicates that it is suitable for all kinds of fruits, vegetables, and truck for all the different sections of this country. They have inserted a five-eighths bushel hamper here as an amendment to the original bill. The committee report brings out a five-eighths bushel hamper for vegetables which is eminently correct and proper, but the same committee fails to place in its amended bill the seven-eighths bushel hamper. I represent a section of the country where I believe the finest tomatoes in the United States are grown—the Crystal Springs tomato. Mississippi is a great vegetable growing State. Those people throughout the State of Mississippi, and, I believe, the surrounding States—Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, and Texas—are accustomed to a seven-eighths bushel hamper. The advantage of that is that they can get more of that size in the refrigerating cars, and with the least loss in space.

These vegetables raised away down in the South must be transported by railway trains to the distant markets of the East and the North. Those cars must be refrigerated, and in order to have it economically done the hampers must be of a size regulated so as to get the greatest number of hampers properly cooled inside the car. The trade in the South has found that the seven-eighths bushel hamper is best for another reason, and that is that the larger size, the bushel and the bushel and a half size, are too bulky, and the effect of the ice in the refrigeration of the cars prevents those large hampers from having cool air get into the center in order to protect the vegetables.

Mr. LAYTON and Mr. KNUTSON rose.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield a little later on. All of the box factories that make these hampers for the farmers to put these vegetables in are making the sizes that the trade has agreed on. If this bill is passed here to cut out the seven-eighths hamper, it would work a great hardship upon the farmers in that section of the country. I have no objection to the bushel size, to the bushel and a half size, and the half-bushel size. We can make the seven-eighths bushel size a standard, just the same as we can make the five-eighths bushel size the standard. Over in New Jersey and in the territories close by the markets they want the five-eighths size instead of the seven-eighths size. I am for that. I want the particular section of the country to have what is most economical in point of shipment and what will be most advantageous not only to the producer but to the consumer. The bill provides, and the law regulates it, that the quantity that is in the box or hamper or container must be stamped on the outside of it, so that there can be no object whatever in the producer or the shipper attempting to deceive anybody. If he ships the produce in a five-eighths bushel hamper, the public knows that it is a five-eighths hamper instead of a six-eighths hamper; and if he ships it in a seven-eighths hamper, the public or the purchaser knows that it is a seven-eighths hamper instead of a bushel hamper.

So it is for a matter of absolute economy and protection to the grower, the producer of the vegetables, in order that his vegetables may arrive at the point of destination in a good and edible condition.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. QUIN. I will yield to my friend from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May not this legislation lose sight of the fact that in shipping perishable vegetables from the gentleman's section the shippers often even place ice in the container? That may be a matter that has not but ought to receive consideration. In fact, I understand that frequently shipments are made, for instance, from Ponchatoula, La., or from Meridian, Miss., when it is necessary to place ice in conveyors containing vegetables or fruit.

Mr. QUIN. Why, certainly that is true.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That, it seems to me, is a practical matter to be taken into view in considering the expediency of the proposed standardization.

Mr. LAYTON. What kind of fruit would they pack ice with?
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Why, a variety of vegetables——
Mr. QUIN. Strawberries.
Mr. LAYTON. Pack ice with strawberries?
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. They do pack ice with a variety of vegetables, and the gentleman only has to look over the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission deciding cases with which that commission has dealt to see that I have stated a fact that nobody can dispute.
Mr. QUIN. Why, of course, that is true.
Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. QUIN. I can not yield right now. I will yield to the gentleman after a little. I want to get the facts clear before the House. Now, I take it, this committee wants to do the right thing, but in this legislation they may work a great injury to a great industry in this country. Now, as the gentleman from Virginia in his statement to me pointed out, these vegetables must be iced. They can not say what size cars they shall be in. The Interstate Commerce Commission has the regulating of the size of the refrigerating cars. The producers and shippers ought to have the right to get as many of the vegetables in a car as the space will possible allow, and if you cut out the seven-eighths bushel hamper you are going to have a lot of waste space in the car and the ultimate consumer and the producer alike must be the loser. Now, as to the question of the icing of these vegetables, all are not familiar with that. These people who ship them, these truck growers who produce that truck, know that these cars must be iced at certain intervals along the railroads. For instance, in the city in which I live, McComb, is the icing point for all cars of vegetables that come between the city of New Orleans and McComb City, Miss. The McComb City ice factory refrigerates all of those cars. These vegetables then go on their way toward the east, north to another point along the road where they must be iced and refrigerated in order that the vegetables may be protected and wholesome, so as to be in good condition when they arrive at the point of destination in order that the ultimate consumer may have them in condition to place upon his table.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GARD. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.
Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. QUIN. For a short question, please, sir.
Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The ice that is put in is put inside the cars. It is not put in the containers, is it?
Mr. QUIN. It is put in the cars, but many of these vegetables must have ice around them. It depends upon the time of year, the condition of the weather, and the distance where they are being shipped.
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I may again interrupt the gentleman, I know, as I have said, that very often the containers themselves require icing. It has been shown in the shipment of lettuce at certain seasons that it is necessary to ice, and that ice can only be applied in that way.
Mr. QUIN. Of course, it is necessary to be done. This Congress, by passing this bill, can work a great injury to an important industry and at the same time work a great injury upon the consuming public.
Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. QUIN. In one minute. According to this bill you cut out the seven-eighths-bushel hamper, and in doing that you are working a great injury to a great vegetable-growing section not only to the State of Mississippi but to Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Texas, to those principal vegetable-growing sections in the seventh congressional district of Mississippi that send vegetables right here to this city, to New York City, to Philadelphia, to Baltimore, to Chicago, and everywhere else. From one town in my district, Crystal Springs, Miss., as many as 75 cars a day are going out, and all the other towns in Copiah County and other counties in the district ship in large quantities truck and vegetables to the needy households in the North.
Mr. McKEOWN. Is there any provision made in this bill to take care of the producers who have already on hand for their shipments the size hampers the gentleman is talking about? What is the condition of a shipper in that respect?
Mr. QUIN. They ought to do it. The chairman tells me that they are trying to do it, but I do not think it is safeguarded. He claims that this bill is not to go into effect for 12 months, but the best way to protect the vegetable growers of this country is to kill this bill. We have got the proper size hampers. Do you know there are 49 different size hampers in use in all the different sections of the United States? Forty-nine of them, and why should this committee come along with all these varieties and say, You can not have the seven-eighths-bushel hamper? Can you explain that? They have allowed the five-eighths; and I say they are right in allowing it, but in the name of equity and justice why can not they put in a provision for the seven-eighths-bushel hamper? There can not be any answer to that when the seven-eighths-bushel hamper takes more vegetables to the market from the South than all the other size hampers combined, and no one can be injured by it.
The public does not care anything about the size of the hamper. What the public wants is the greatest quantity of vegetables in the best possible condition and at the lowest price, and this bill you gentlemen are placing before this House will tend to injure the vegetables that are shipped from the South. It will make more expense in shipment, so that there will be less wholesome vegetables, and more vegetables in bad condition, at a higher price to the consumer in the northern and eastern cities and less profit to the truck grower than there ever have been before, and there can not be any other result if you cut out the seven-eighths hamper.
Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. QUIN. May I have a few minutes more?
Mr. GARD. I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.
Mr. LAYTON. I want to know if your logic does not imply that the Congress ought to abolish the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and do away with the standardization of everything in the country?
Mr. QUIN. Oh, no, my friend; I think that is a useful committee, indeed, and it has useful work, and that it has done good work before, except I believe it is mistaken in its ideas on this bill and in cutting out the seven-eighths bushel hamper.
Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?
Mr. QUIN. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he will explain these photographs in his time in connection with the bill?
Mr. QUIN. Oh, I have not the time. I have not looked at the photographs. I stated that there are 49 different sizes of containers, and I can not conceive why there was such a necessity to cut out the seven-eighths bushel hamper that the vegetables from the South are shipped in, and which I know the trade has decided is the best, because they have worked all these years for the special purpose of getting a container that would carry the vegetables in the best condition and at the least cost.
Mr. KNUTSON. I take it from the gentleman's remarks that he has made a deep study of the question of refrigeration. How much difference is there in the penetrating ability of cold air in its effect on a seven-eighths bushel container and a bushel container. Will the gentleman explain that to the committee?
Mr. QUIN. I could not give the scientific part of it, but these men who are engaged in the truck-growing business and shipping business, and have been engaged in it for 30 years, in Crystal Springs and Hazlehurst, Miss., know that the seven-eighths bushel hamper is the most practicable. They know the vegetables reach their destination in better condition when shipped in that size container. They know the bushel hamper does not allow cold air to get into the center to properly protect the vegetables there. They know that the five-eighths hamper is all right. They know that the seven-eighths bushel hamper is all right for that section—the South. And, as I stated, our friends in New Jersey know that the five-eighths bushel hamper is better for that country, because they do not have to ship the vegetables so far. But when you start a trainload of vegetables from Mississippi and run it clear up to New York City, you must consider the distance and the season of the year, and that the cold air must go to the center of the vegetables in order to keep that entire trainload of vegetables in good condition. And if those men who have their money invested in it—the thousands of people who make their livelihood in raising vegetables for shipment in interstate commerce—ask this Congress to keep the seven-eighths bushel hamper in force, it seems to me that appeal ought to fall on your ears in the right way.
Mr. GARD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as is usually the case under the present régime, we are considering an important measure, departing from the present business customs of this Nation, with about 35 or 40 Members present on the floor, most of whom have no knowledge whatever concerning this bill. Not long ago we spent most of a whole day and part of another on a measure to standardize containers for flour and meal, and when we got through and sent the bill to the Senate it then did not contain a standard barrel of flour. And we have no standard barrel of flour by law at this time. And God knows what we will have when we get through with the consideration of this bill and pass it.

In that connection let me call your attention to the conditions under the present régime. Here yesterday, when we had up the urgent deficiency bill, carrying one item alone of $300,000,000 for the railroads, when we got to a final vote on that bill let me show you what happened under the Republican régime. I quote from page 5925 of the RECORD:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Now, remember, the bill carried one item alone of $300,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. On that I ask for a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 0.
So the bill was passed.

Eighty-six Members were on the floor in the House when a bill of that character and importance to the country was passed, and you know about how few were here throughout the day during the general debate on the bill.

Let me call your attention to the preceding day, when we had a new measure before this House, also departing from the usual business custom, creating another bureau in a Government already overridden with bureaus. This question came up: When it was moved to suspend the rules and pass that bill and a second was demanded, the old Nestor of the House said that he would not agree to a second being ordered with only a handful of people present. When the Speaker asked if there was objection to a second being considered as ordered, he said:

Mr. CANNON. I do not know about that. Why should it be? There is just a handful of people here.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We can get them here.
Mr. CANNON. I guess you better get them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas called for tellers, and it developed that only 31 Members were present, when Mr. CANNON said:

I think a quorum is not present. I make the point of no quorum.

And that bill was passed in a short time, with no consideration by the House, or practically none by the membership of the House proper.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not the gentleman think that that rather argues for efficiency?

Mr. BLANTON. It shows that on every single day we take up legislation and pass it the great bulk of the membership of this House knows practically nothing whatever on earth about it, and I am going to show that your committee here does not know much about this bill. Here is a ridiculous provision. I am not complaining about the Republican whip of the House, who is now smiling at me, because he is efficient, although he and I have a little difference once in a while. However, he is efficient. But here is a bill to close up all the manufacturing plants of this country except one. The one that manufactures this particular kind of container can keep on running and manufacturing them.

Now, the originals of these photographs here had to be manufactured, did they not, or they would not be photographs of them? They had to be the actual manufactured containers in order to photograph them before you could have all these pictures?

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. KELLER. I wish to say that the manufacturers are all for this bill.

Mr. LAYTON. And the growers.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure there is nobody against it at all. It is a bill that is going to pass unanimously here, because you do not know anything about it. Let me show you what a ridiculous idea there is in this bill. It is all right to have a standard and say that in a bushel there shall be so many cubic inches. That is all right. It is all right to say that in a half bushel there shall be so many cubic inches; that in a bushel and a bushel and a half container there shall be so many cubic inches. That is standardizing; that is all right. But you do not stop there. You go on and say how the bottom of it shall be made and how the middle of it shall be made, and how the next part, up toward the top, shall be made, and how the top of it shall be made, and out of what material it shall be made, and the size thereof, corresponding to the particular kind of container manufactured in some particular manufactory of this country. That is where the vice comes in, and you provide a penalty of $100 and 60 days in jail for anybody who shall violate the provisions of this bill.

Let me show you. Section 6, on page 13, provides—

That it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, sell, offer for sale, or ship, or to import or cause to be imported into the continental United States, hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, either filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets, that do not comply with this act.

Then let me show you how ridiculous it is to provide a provision of this kind in a sensible law. I am reading section 7 now, on page 14, and I want you to notice it:

That any hamper, round-stave basket, or splint basket for fruits or vegetables, whether filled or unfilled—

That is, empty or full. All of you know what that means, whether a thing is empty or full. We are all empty now. [Laughter.]

Which shall be manufactured for sale or shipment, offered for sale, sold, shipped, or imported—

And now listen—

May be proceeded against in any district court of the United States within the district where the same shall be found.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank the gentleman from Ohio.

I am reading the language of the committee's bill, word for word. I have not placed any construction on it. I am reading the English language for what it usually means. What does it say? That if you find a container here, or a splint basket here, or one of these hampers—and if it is empty or full it does not make any difference—the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States may proceed against that basket or hamper or container in a Federal court, and proceed against the same wherever he may find them. That is ridiculous, even to my good friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]. It provides for a suit in the Federal court by a Federal district attorney, with all the expenses incident thereto, against an empty container or an empty basket. Is that foolish or not?

A MEMBER. That is done every day.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it is just about as sensible as everything else the Republican Party has proposed in this House since May 19, 1919, when they took charge. Who violates the law? The innocent little container, full or empty? Does it violate the law? Why, the man who manufactures it, the man who sells it, the man who uses it against the laws of standardization—he is the malefactor. You do not proceed against the poor little basket or the poor little empty hamper wherever you find it in a district court by a great big district attorney, with a great big United States marshal present.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Is there anything in the law about proceeding against the violators of the law?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. It says they shall be fined $100 or put in jail 60 days.

Mr. TINCHER. There is another question I want to ask. Are the containers patented? Is it the custom to have these containers patented?

Mr. BLANTON. I feel reasonably sure that every single article delineated on these pictures is patented. That is what I am getting to.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Delaware perhaps knows more about this than I do. The gentleman is older than I am. I have such a high regard for him that I will take his word for it.

Mr. LAYTON. Have you a basket factory in your town?

Mr. BLANTON. No.

Mr. LAYTON. I assumed not.

Mr. BLANTON. But I assume that the man who had sense enough to design and manufacture a basket which a big Republican committee would bring in here with photographs and try to get it fixed upon as a standard would have sense enough to patent it and protect it.

Mr. TINCHER. If it is not patented, according to the gentleman's premise, there would not be anything to hinder anybody from manufacturing it?

Mr. BLANTON. No; if it is not patented. But if it is patented my argument is good, because it would affect a particular manufacturer. That article is subject to patent. If it is not patented, the fellow who designed it and originated it slept on his rights and lost valuable property rights probably. But what I am getting at is simply this: As far as we ought to go in standardizing containers for fruits and vegetables is to say that they shall be put up in a peck measure container, or in a half bushel or bushel container, or in a bushel and a half container, and that those particular measures shall contain so many cubic inches of fruit and vegetables each; and then, when we have gone that far, we have provided complete standardization of the container for fruits and vegetables, and we ought not to go any further.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May it not be pertinent to inquire of the gentlemen who are informed whether or not an application has been made for a patent?

Mr. BLANTON. You can find that out from this committee.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. What provision is made with reference to imported containers? Will they be barred by this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Unless they are built according to the measurements provided for in this bill in a certain way at the bottom, in a certain way at the middle, and in a certain way at the top, and unless they conform to these particular measurements, bottom, middle, and top, according to this bill, they are absolutely thrown on the junk pile in this country. They are of no use whatever for fruit and vegetable shipments. You have got to do away with them. You have got either to change your machinery or do away with your machinery in all the various manufactories in this country.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. JUUL. Is it not a fact that many of these baskets that are now being manufactured are made in the sizes that this law provides for, so that they will not have to change their machinery, because they already manufacture those identical sizes and styles?

Mr. BLANTON. One thing I do know, and I am sure the gentleman from Delaware will agree with me——

Mr. LAYTON. I do not know about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I take it for granted that he will, because I assume that he is a sensible man. Why should we not stop when we prescribe the content in stated cubic inches of a standardized container? The gentleman will admit surely that when you provide that it shall be built just exactly like this picture, that every bushel basket shall be just like that, then the gentleman must admit that every other basket that is not in that shape and form is absolutely thrown in the junk pile.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me to answer him?

Mr. BLANTON. I will allow the gentleman to answer me.

Mr. LAYTON. I will say that the gentleman's mind is not comprehensive and does not take into account other elements which enter into this question.

Mr. BLANTON. It takes into account things that the gentleman never dreamed of.

Mr. LAYTON. Wait a moment. If you have got a bushel basket of so many cubic inches, you can manufacture containers of a thousand different shapes and forms, which would not be suitable for truckage, would not be suitable for packing in cars, refrigerator cars, or any other way. A standardization of the size and shape of the container is necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. There is just one redeeming feature about this bill, gentlemen, and that is that it provides that it shall not go into effect until a year from next November. Before this bill goes into effect and these defects develop, we will have an opportunity to change it. I will promise the gentleman that.

Mr. LAYTON. Who?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows what I mean when I say "we." I am referring to our distinguished leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the party he represents, of which I am a humble member. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman? He may be sure that it is not an abusive question, but merely for information.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever we get our Republican friends cornered over there, all they can do is to try to abuse us.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What I should like to suggest—not quite in the way of a question, perhaps—is this, that here we have a bill that may very seriously affect the agricultural and trucking interests. I do not assume that to be the fact, but it may. Now, is it a wise thing to pass such a bill hastily, which was reported from the committee only on the 19th of April, and not even printed until the 20th and possibly not printed until last night, with a very small membership of the committee on it who are now present, and without the opportunity for Members to be here who may be interested, no notice having been received that the bill would come up to-day, and no opportunity being given us to communicate with our constituents, many of whom are certainly interested one way or the other?

Mr. BLANTON. We have had more time than usual, because the notice that we have of the consideration of these freak bills usually consists of the production of a hip-pocket rule by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I think it is barely possible that I voted for the bill to authorize the standardization of things, but I was a good deal opposed to it at the time, and I interrogated the men who had it in charge, and they assured the House over and over that this authority to standardize everything did not mean anything except that they would establish an official yardstick, for instance, and put it up here in the Treasury, so that if all the other yardsticks on earth were destroyed by some calamity, you could go up there and get one, and the same way as to foot measures and quart measures and gallon measures, and so forth.

Now, this Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and the department together have been usurping powers under that bill from the day it was passed until now. There is no question in the world about that. For instance, I had a set-to with Uncle Jimmie Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, a man for whom I have always had very profound respect and great affection. It is sort of out of date to talk about it now, but the second largest winery in the world was in my district, and there is no place on earth where grapes grow in greater profusion than they do on the banks of the Missouri River. That is how that whole country came to be settled up by the Germans when they came in here after the revolution of 1848.

One day I got a clipping sent by that big winery. There are several smaller ones, but the big one sent to me a clipping stating that the Agricultural Department was going to establish a standard for wine, that they were going to mark it "pure wine" when it did not have any sugar and water added, and all the rest they were going to mark "adulterated." Now, it happens that there is only one small piece of land on the habitable globe, as far as anybody knows, where grapes grow with enough sugar in them so that you do not have to add sugar and water, and that is in a comparatively small part of California.

All the rest of our folks, in Missouri and on this side of the mountains and in most parts of California, have to add sugar and water to their grape juice. So I wrote a nice letter to Secretary Wilson and inclosed this clipping, asking him if he was going to try to do any such fool thing as that, and, if so, where he got any authority to do it? Well, I received a great, long letter signed by him, three pages, letter-paper size, explaining this, that, and the other, and finally giving me a good deal of a scolding for having the impudence to call in question the wisdom of the Department of Agriculture. So the next day I went down there and I walked into his room with this letter in my hand, and he began to grin and said, "Don't you quarrel with me about that letter. I never wrote it. I signed it." I said, "Who did write it?" He said, "Dr. Wiley." I said, "Who is Dr. Wiley?" He said, "He is the chief chemist." I said, "Where is he?" And he told me, and I went over there and Wiley and I had a fuss, and I explained to him that there was no earthly sense in what he was doing, and that in addition to that it was a great outrage. Well, finally I beat him out to change it from "pure wine" and "adulterated wine" to "natural wine" and "artificial wine." That was nearly as bad as the other. So one of the California brethern introduced a bill here to that effect, and I got hold of him and clubbed his bill to death. Now, that was clearly a usurpation of authority under this standardizing act, and so is this bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was exactly right, except that he did not go far enough, because he did not know how far to go. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, my objection to this bill is that you not only fix the size and shape of your container, which may be of considerable convenience in shipping, but you also prescribe the thickness of the staves. Down in my country we have a great deal of timber which we prepare to make these baskets, or the constituent parts of the baskets; for instance, if you want a basket like the hoop basket, they are put up in long strips, 100 in a bundle. They are sent to the place where these things are assembled. Therefore it is a cheap way to ship them in that manner. The trouble with the bill is that you prescribe the thickness of the staves or the thickness of the basket. Every man who manufactures this timber has bought his machinery and it is fitted to cut rapidly and quickly the constituent parts of these containers.

If I could write your bill and I was a manufacturer of the machinery, or if I had a large number of establishments already at work and I could write your bill so as to conform directly to that particular machinery that I use, or if I was manufacturing the machinery that goes into these factories that manufacture the timber for the baskets, I do not know just what I would give Congress to write a bill so framed for a container in design, thickness, and shape as to conform to the particular machinery I was using in manufacturing. If I had my place established I do not know what I would give if you would give me a monopoly until they were able to establish their plants to make these containers. Just how many thousand or million dollars' worth of machinery you are virtually compelling them to discard in making provision for the cubical contents of the container and going into specific descriptions as to the thickness of the staves and length of the staves, and so on, I do not know.

You gentlemen are getting into pretty deep water, because I do not believe that any member of this committee would be guilty, knowingly, of passing a bill to have the stave of a certain thickness or shape because it was made by a certain character of machinery. But when you go this much into the details you may be making some people rich and you may be pauperizing others.

In other words, if I had a certain number of ships to sell, if I could put a bill through Congress saying that you should go into the market and buy ships of a certain type, of a certain beam, of certain depth, and of certain description, perhaps I would have the only ships in the world of that description.

A gentleman told me about a matter that happened some years ago where they were erecting a building of a certain type and wanted certain attachments put into the building. The bill that was passed described the kind of attachments they wanted. The result was that he was the only fellow in the world that manufactured attachments of that sort and type.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I notice by section 7 it requires the destruction of all round stave baskets, splint baskets, and hampers that do not conform with the provisions of this bill. That would entail a destruction of considerable property, would it not?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; you would be amazed to go into the warehouses and see them filled with stuff of which not a single stick could be used in the making of one of these standard baskets.

That is my objection to this bill. I have no objection to your making standard sizes, and, by the way, you have arbitrarily in section 1, standardizing the sizes, eliminated the seven-eighths of a bushel, which is one of the standards. You go from a half a bushel and five-eighths of a bushel to a bushel, and leave out the seven-eighths of a bushel. That is the hamper used almost exclusively for light vegetables down in my country. Go into the district of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], which is the largest vegetable district in that country, and see where they are shipping out vegetables not only by the carload but by the trainload. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I used to think that there were some lawyers in the House. If there are any left that have any respect for the Constitution or the right of the legislature to delegate powers, I respectfully refer that lawyer to section 6, now changed to section 5, on page 12 of the bill, which reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That in order to provide for the more economical use of space in packing or transportation, or for the greater conservation of material or labor in manufacture or handling, or of the contents in course of shipment, of hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, or apple boxes, or parts thereof—

In other words, you give the purposes for which you delegate this legislative power—

the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he finds necessary, may, in his regulations, prescribe specifications with respect to the material used, or the dimensions thereof, for such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes, or parts thereof in addition to, differing from, or superseding those set forth in sections 1, 2, 3, or 4 of this act, but not departing from the respective capacities therein prescribed.

If there is any lawyer here who has any respect for the Constitution let him stand up here and tell me if we have any possible power to enact a statute like that. What does it do? It goes on in this bill and states what the dimension and number of the splints shall be, and then it says that the Secretary of Agriculture, if he wants to, can absolutely substitute another standard, another dimension, on giving six months' notice. These standards are to be fixed by him as he deems necessary; not if he finds certain facts exist then a certain standard shall obtain. We can delegate authority to the Secretary of Agriculture, or any administrative officer, to ascertain certain facts, and in the event that he finds a certain contingency exists or in the event of a certain contingency, then a certain provision shall be the law, but we can not authorize him, if he deems it necessary, to repeal our own standard. Truly this section "is a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

What else do you do? You not only give him the right to fix the dimensions of the hamper but he can fix the kind of material.

In other words, he may say that we can not make these hampers out of the material that we have in my section of the country and compel us to buy boxes made of another kind of wood from another part of the United States. He can say that these containers shall be made of paper, if he wants to, or that they shall be made of spruce, if he wants to, or that they shall be made of cedar, and he may do that without the consent of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I knew, and it is beginning to dawn on the country, that the Republicans, who are in control of this Congress, are absolutely the greatest aggregation of incompetents ever gathered beneath the dome of the Capitol, but I never thought that they would absolutely admit it themselves and give an administration officer the right to fix the kind of material out of which they shall be constructed and the size of the fruit baskets and hampers to be used. If you want to violate the spirit of the Constitution, if you want, under the subterfuge of a standard of weights and measures, to undertake to pass a thing like this, then, for God's sake, save your face, at least. If you do not know what it ought to be test it out and change it yourselves, but do not leave it to a Secretary of Agriculture, who might not know anything about it at all, as we have had some in the past who would not know a hamper from a fruit basket. What does the chairman of the committee understand in law is a hamper?

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, that is a very foolish question.

Mr. WINGO. If it is a foolish question, then the gentleman may expose my foolishness. Tell me what the courts have held a hamper is. Have the courts held what a hamper is?

Mr. VESTAL. Probably not.

Mr. WINGO. No. But you are writing a criminal statute, using the word, and you can not tell what it is. The gentleman does not know anything about the facts or the law. He says that it is a foolish question. It is a foolish question, because you have a foolish bill, brought out by a foolish committee, headed by a foolish chairman, who does not know any more about a hamper than he seems to know about the Constitution. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss the merits of the bill, but will confine my remarks in the main to sections 6 and 7, which are the penal provisions of the act. I do want to say in a preliminary way that the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is based entirely upon the proposition that these baskets are or might be patented. Of course, they are not patented, and if they are not patented now they can not be patented hereafter, so that that argument falls entirely to the ground.

The purpose of this bill is to prevent the use in commerce and shipments in commerce of baskets which do not conform to the standards set up in the bill. That prohibition is to be enforced in two ways: First, it is to be enforced by a penalty which is, in effect, upon the person who offers to sell articles in such a basket in commerce or offers such baskets for shipment in commerce. That is a penalty against the person, the penalty provided for in section 6. But the punishment of the person who offers these baskets for shipment in commerce does not do away with the baskets themselves. Section 7 proposes to outlaw the basket itself and provides the machinery whereby the outlawed baskets can be confiscated by the Government and destroyed. There is nothing unusual in such a proceeding. There are a number of United States statutes which declare articles or commodities outlawed, so far as they are used in interstate commerce, and those laws provide for the confiscation and destruction of the articles themselves. For instance, suppose an article which is misbranded is offered for shipment in interstate commerce. The pure-food act provides a method whereby the person who offers that article may be punished, and also a means whereby the article itself may be attached by a process of libel, and after judgment destroyed. That is the whole purpose of section 7, which my good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] so violently attacks. I am surprised that he should attack it. He has been the judge of a district court, I am informed, down in his native State. He ought to know, but he does not know, that that sort of process is a very common thing under Federal jurisdiction and that the purpose of it is to destroy the thing which the law outlaws. There is nothing new in it at all. It would be an entirely futile thing if all you could do under this act would be to punish the person who offered the baskets for shipment in commerce, but must still permit the baskets themselves to go freely in commerce. The only real remedy you have, the remedy that is effective, is not the remedy which punishes the individual who offers the basket for shipment, but it is the remedy which outlaws the basket itself in commerce and provides the method whereby the basket may be confiscated and destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, it has been a long time since the members on the Democratic side of the aisle have been so worked up over a piece of legislation as they are over this, but when I reflect upon the fact that most of my good friends on the Democratic side represent that section of the country from which we get our early fruits and vegetables, and when I reflect further upon the fact that they have for years been selling us seven-eighths of a bushel for a bushel, I do not blame them for being worked up, because the passage of this bill is going to cut into their revenues quite a bit.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I can not yield just now. All kinds of excuses have been given by gentlemen on the other side for opposing this legislation.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I can not yield?

Mr. JUUL. Can not the gentleman yield for half a second?

Mr. KNUTSON. The expert on refrigeration from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] says that you can cool and keep cool a seven-eighths bushel hamper, but that you can not cool and keep cool a bushel hamper, and that is the reason he opposes it. Another opposes it because it is unconstitutional, and so we have it all along down the line, every Member on that side who has spoken having a different excuse. I want to commend the Democratic Members from the Southern States for the fidelity with which they are representing their constituents' interests on the floor this afternoon.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sorry, but I can not yield. They have certainly displayed a zeal which is worthy of a better cause.

It is unfortunate that they are so situated geographically that they are compelled to get up on the floor of this House and condone and defend fraud and deceit.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. If the gentleman is going to talk this way, there should be a quorum to hear him, and I make the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. KNUTSON. I trust my friend will not do that. I paid very respectful attention to the gentleman while he talked, and I trust he will not press his point of no quorum, because I have only a few minutes remaining.

Mr. QUIN. I think there ought to be a quorum here.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman can not take me off my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-eight gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Brumbaugh	Darrow	Freeman

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12350, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 272 Members answered to their names, and he reported herewith the list of absentees to be recorded in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, when I was taken off my feet by the point of no quorum made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], I was about to explain that the position taken by the Democratic side is not justified. As a matter of fact, when the shippers in the Southern States send a container of early fruit or vegetables to the North which holds but seven-eighths of a bushel they only get paid for seven-eighths of a bushel. It is the commission merchant, the middle man, who is able to make a bushel out of it. So there is absolutely no justification for the almost united opposition on the Democratic side against this legislation. We are trying by this bill to standardize the containers used in this country—that is, the containers for vegetables and fruits—so that the American people will be given full measure and a square deal. We contend that by doing that we will reduce the cost of living by just that much, and thereby enable the Democrats to make good in part their pledge made before the election of 1912 to reduce the high cost of living, something that they have not made any effort to do by themselves. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed his time.

Mr. VESTAL. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. VESTAL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I doubt the wisdom of some of the provisions of this bill, and I doubt the right of the Congress to enact some of them. They have been referred to, so I will not take time to discuss them. I mean the provisions relating to the material out of which baskets shall be made, the number of staves, the thickness of them, and so forth. I doubt the wisdom of giving any officer of the Government authority to determine those matters; but I wish to speak of another matter. I find in section 4, the new section 4, page 11, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall in his regulations prescribe such tolerances as he may find necessary to allow in the capacities and specifications for hampers, and so forth. I think it is unwise to require that the Secretary of Agriculture shall in advance prescribe the variations and tolerances which shall be permitted. The Committee on Agriculture some time ago was considering what is known as the "slack-filled container bill." The committee found that in many lines of business and as to many commodities, containers are only partially filled by the manufacturer or dealer whose business it is to fill them, and thereby fraud was practiced on the purchaser. The bill contains a proviso to the effect that reasonable variations and tolerances "may" be established. Dealers and manufacturers who appeared before the committee, every one, insisted that the word "may" should be changed to "shall," requiring that the Secretary of Agriculture in advance of his efforts to enforce the act must establish variations and tolerances. The same principle is involved in the bill before us; this bill says the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe variations and tolerances. What is the effect of that? Just as soon as variations and tolerances are established containers with a smaller capacity become standard. Every container would be made just as small as the law will permit, just as small as the Secretary will permit. That will be uniformly the practice. Whereas if the Secretary is permitted in his discretion to establish the variations and tolerances he may establish them or permit them as to some containers and not as to others, as he finds it wise to do so in the administration of the law. If the administration of the law is in the hands of a careful, wise man—that is the way it seemed to our committee, and we gave careful consideration to it—it is best that he should not be required in advance to determine and announce the character and extent of the tolerance permitted to a manufacturer; the Secretary should be permitted to consider each case as it arises. If it is found that there is a wide variation and it is evidently intentional it may be held to be a violation of the law, and if it is a small variation and there is no evidence of intention to violate the law, it can be overlooked. And, in the judgment of our committee, if we should make it mandatory on the Secretary of Agriculture to establish variations and tolerances, it would be necessary for him as to every one of these things to establish his variations, publish them, and have them known before he could enter upon the enforcement of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I believe it would be unfortunate if gentlemen on this side of the aisle should take an antagonistic attitude to the principle of this bill. There can be no legislation of this character which may be said to be in the interest of the producer or of the consumer alone. It must be of general interest or there is no interest at all. Now, those of us who live in producing districts and whose commodities must go far afield to find final consumption know nothing more important than to have our commodities standardized as to quality and container, when they go in containers, so that they may have a commercial status at the point of first concentration. There is not any question about that. In order to have economic distribution of agricultural commodities it must be possible to have them so standardized as to quality and container that the man who lives far away from the center of production and the man who lives at the point of production may discuss them and trade in them and each man have the identical mental picture that the other man has with regard to the thing that is being traded in.

Now, I think there are some provisions in this bill that ought not to be here, and I believe that we ought not to vote for the bill without amendment unless the chairman of the committee can explain to our satisfaction why it has been deemed essential to determine in advance the number of splits in the basket and the general detail of its construction.

I do believe, however, that the general shape of the basket is important in standardization. It is important, I believe, in the transportation of these commodities. And I take it for granted that the chairman of this committee and his associates upon the committee have determined in advance of bringing in this bill, by consultations with transportation men and producers, the kind of basket that will economize the transportation facilities of this country. Now, that is all there is to it. And I believe, genlemen, we ought to approach the consideration of this bill in a kindly attiude toward its purpose, and endeavor if possible in good spirit among ourselves to so amend the bill that the objectionable features will be eliminated.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I take it for granted that the gentleman agrees with me that there can not be any possible sectional or party question in the consideration of a matter of this character and that nobody on this side of the House for a minute dreams of putting the question in any such attitude?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not imagine any man will be so foolish as to have such an attitude. There is nothing partisan or sectional in the bill. If we have a container that gives us a certain capacity, and that container is so fashioned that it brings a penalty upon the trade, that penalty is divided in most instances between production and consumption. And I do think that when we come to legislate with regard to these matters our purpose should be to legislate for honest commerce. [Applause.] And these variations in containers, gentlemen, not only make it difficult for men who live far apart to trade in these commodities, but they put a premium upon dishonesty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that all the fruit growers, so far as the committee knows anything about them, are absolutely in favor of this legislation. The manufacturers of baskets——

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. VESTAL. I have only four minutes.

Mr. OSBORNE. I know; but I have a very important question bearing upon what the gentleman has just said.

Mr. VESTAL. All right.

Mr. OSBORNE. I want to ask the gentleman if in the consideration of this bill the western-coast producers of fruits were heard?

Mr. VESTAL. They were heard before the committee through their representatives.

Mr. OSBORNE. I would like to ask further as to these restrictions upon containers. For instance, in my State we produce 50,000 carloads of oranges and grapefruit a year. Would that affect the containers that they already use and where they have millions of dollars invested in plants for the making of the containers?

Mr. VESTAL. I think not. We only seek by this bill to standardize hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets. It does not have anything to do with boxes or crates of any kind or character.

I wanted to say that no manufacturer—and they were represented before the committee—was opposed to this bill. It merely cuts out a lot of sizes, but it does not change the machinery of any factory. It simply reduces the number of sizes.

And I want to say in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] that I understand he is interested in the seven-eighths bushel, of course, because people in his community are using the seven-eighths bushel, and that the evidence before the committee is to the effect that in practically every State of the Union where tomatoes were grown they use the five-eighths bushel hamper. Now, the reason the committee deemed it wise to cut out the seven-eighths bushel hamper was the fact that it is so nearly a bushel. The whole purpose of this bill is to try to bring about honest commerce, so that there will be no discrimination and that the public will not be discriminated against. The figures show conclusively that this is being done all over the country to-day, and, as I said in the beginning of the argument on this bill, one circumstance illustrates the whole thing. A gentleman from Baltimore testified before the committee, and was seeking to have the 14-quart basket standardized—and this bill cuts out the 14-quart basket and makes it a 16-quart basket—and we asked him why, and he said, "Because we get from the consumer the same amount of money for 14 quarts as we get for 16 quarts."

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is not that just exactly the intention of this bill, namely, to prevent such things as that?

Mr. VESTAL. That is the purpose of the bill, of course.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman justify any opposition to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the standard hampers for fruits and vegetables shall be 1-peck hamper, one-half bushel hamper, 1-bushel hamper, and 1½-bushel hamper, which, respectively, shall be of the capacity and conform to the specifications set forth in this section.

(a) The standard 1-peck hamper shall contain 537.6 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 10⅝ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 6¼ inches; the inside length of the staves shall be 9⅝ inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-tenth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge even with the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-tenth of an inch thick and 10½ inches long; and the bottom piece shall be one-half of an inch thick.

(b) The standard one-half bushel hamper shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 13 inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 8¼ inches; the inside length of the staves shall be 12 inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-ninth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge even with the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-tenth of an inch thick and 12⅝ inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, are we reading this bill for amendment by sections?

The CHAIRMAN. By sections.

Mr. GARD. I would suggest to the gentleman who has charge of the bill, representing the committee, that it might make for expedition and better work in the passage of the bill if we were to consider amendments as they would come by these lettered subdivisions. For instance, at the end of paragraph (a), that part of it, we can consider amendments to that, and then in the same way with the subdivisions following. If you wait until the end of the whole section, you will have a great accumulation of things, and it is difficult to understand them; so that if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to consider amendments at the end of any subsection we would get along better.

Mr. VESTAL. I think in the interest of time it will be better to consider the bill by sections instead of by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(e) The standard 1-bushel hamper shall contain 2,150.42 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 15½ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 9 inches; the inside length of the staves to the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 19 inches; the inside hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge three-eighths of an inch below the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-eighth of an inch thick and 20 inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

(d) The standard 1½-bushel hamper shall contain 3,225.63 cubic inches and conform to either of the following specifications:

(1) The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 16½ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 9 inches; the inside length of the staves to the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 26 inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge three-eighths of an inch below the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-sixth of an inch thick and 27 inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

(2) The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 16⅔ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 10 inches; the inside length of the staves to the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 23 inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge three-eighths of an inch below the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-eighth of an inch thick and 24 inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "be," insert the word "the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 4, after the word "hamper," insert the words "five-eighths bushel hamper."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, after line 7, insert:
"For the purposes of this act a quart standard dry measure has a capacity of 67$\frac{2}{10}$ cubic inches."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, just at the moment I have forgotten the dry-measure table. Will my genial friend from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL], the chairman of the committee, tell me what is a standard dry-measure quart now?

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. It is one-fourth of a gallon, which is 268.8 cubic inches, which would be 67.2 cubic inches.

Mr. WINGO. How much do you change it from this?

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. It does not change it.

Mr. WINGO. Then what is the object of the amendment? Is it to state the existing standard?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. A quart is already standardized, is it not?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is not uniformly used all over the country.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, you have not any criminal penalty for not using the standard, and the idea is to put the standard in here? Now, if a man happens to use a quart that is 67½ cubic inches, that would give the consumer an advantage, but under this bill he would be a criminal unless you would let the Secretary of Agriculture fix the differential. Is not that true? Nobody seems to know, and that is generally true, I find, about all these socialistic bills.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman asks me, I am not in charge of the bill, nor am I a member of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. I did not refer to the gentleman. I said "socialistic bills." I did not intend that as an assault upon my friend from Michigan. But this bill is typical of socialism. This bill "damphoolishness gone to seed." You nowhere penalize a man and shut out of interstate commerce a basket that is not fully filled. You can go down here and buy articles in that way now, and if you standardize the container, unless you punish them for having a false measurement printed on it or unless you punish them for having it deceptively filled or packed, you are not going to protect the consumer. I am perfectly willing to punish the man who uses deceptive containers and make it unlawful to transport deceptive containers in interstate commerce, but under the Constitution we can only undertake to fix weights and measures. We can not determine the material. If we can provide the kind of material that must be used, we can say what color it shall be. We can not say how many staves there shall be. Under the provisions of this bill it absolutely puts out of business the basket that is used by the greatest peach orchard in the world. Do the Members of the House think that is necessary in order to protect the public?

Mr. KELLER. What size is that basket?

Mr. WINGO. I could not give it to you according to the description in this bill, because I can not find any two men who can give the same explanation of the sizes or measures used in the bill.

Mr. KELLER. What is the difference?

Mr. WINGO. In the first place, it has one less stave in it. Again, I know they use a seven-eighths-inch bottom in the basket. You provide here for a five-eighths-inch bottom. If a man uses the seven-eighths-inch bottom, he is a criminal. It is absurd to limit the thickness of the bottom board to five-eighths of an inch. The members of the committee may have had experts before them who know what a hamper is. Maybe some one knows what a "resaw" is, and it may be that some one knows how these bottoms are resawed. I challenge the gentleman to take a thousand of these bottoms that are resawed and find them anywhere near uniform. He will not find 30 per cent of them that are of the same thickness. You can not do it. When I was a boy I had some experience in a mill where that kind of work was turned out. If the board is wet it may "gum," and if it strikes a knot, that will make it wobble, and one side will be thick and the other side will be thin. One side may be five-eighths of an inch thick, and the other side three-eighths of an inch. Yet if a man happens to use the same bottom in a half-bushel basket that he uses in that 1 peck, he has committed a criminal offense.

It shows that you are not doing what you say you do. I am willing to help you to punish fraud, but this is to do what? It is to build up another great mass of inspectors who will go nosing around throughout the country. I am sick and tired, for one, of authorizing people to go out as Federal officials and nose about spying on citizens. I want to take the hand of the Federal Government off of business. Let us define and fix a penalty for crime. Let us fix a standard against fraud, but for God's sake do not go and say that if a farmer happens to use an old basket and it has one splint more than the standard splint basket, or if he has a basket where the bottom has been destroyed or damaged and he picks up a piece of pine wood to repair it and that piece is too thick, although it makes the basket stronger, he is thereby made a criminal. This bill, I repeat, is "damphoolishness gone to seed." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I call attention to the fact that this proposed committee amendment provides that a quart measure shall contain so many cubic inches, and there it stops. It does not provide how the quart measure shall be built, what its shape shall be, or what kind of material shall go into it. But later on in the bill when you get up to the peck measure you not only provide how many cubic inches it shall contain, but then you go on and provide how it shall be made, what shall go into it, and how it shall look after it is made. And so with the other larger containers provided for in the bill, up to the bushel and the bushel and a half. If it is necessary to standardize containers by putting in all of these specifications named, then the quart container is just as much a container as the peck container, or the half bushel, or the bushel, or the bushel and a half. If it is necessary to provide the shape, and how it shall look, and the dimensions at the bottom and the middle and the top, and the material, and how much of it, for the peck and half bushel, and the bushel and the bushel and a half, why is it not equally necessary to provide it for the quart container? This is just like that ridiculous resolution that you Republican colleagues brought in here the other day, on which you had two days' debate, that you called a peace resolution, to provide for peace with Germany, and forgot all about the state of war with the royal Government of Austria-Hungary. The resolution left them out entirely, left us up in the air in a state of war with the dual Government of Austria-Hungary, and declared by the House resolution that we had ceased to be at war with Germany. Why can not our friends on the other side of the aisle be consistent in these measures? Why can they not make them complete, sensible, and symmetrical? Why do they not make the same provisions with reference to the quart container that they do as to the larger ones? If it is necessary as to the others, it is necessary as to the quart measure. I am in favor of standard measures to prevent fraud, but I take the position that in providing a standard container for fruits and vegetables, when you provide that such container shall contain so many specified cubic inches you have gone just as far as is necessary in the law, and all the balance is just monkey business that you have brought in here on this floor—just one more piece of typical Republican chicken-feed legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. GARD. I desire to speak in favor of the amendment. I think the amendment is founded on some legislation which appears in the act of August 31, 1916, wherein the same identical phraseology is used. I presume it was the intent of the committee who had this in charge to designate what a dry-quart standard should be in order that the pecks and the half pecks and the other measures should be determined by some standard. So the dry quart is established in this bill as the measuring standard, and in the act of August 31, 1916, we provide for dry half pints, dry pints, and dry quarts, and the same language is used concerning quarts as is used here, in that subdivision (b) of section 1 provides that the dry quart shall contain 67.2 cubic inches, which is the same language as is used here. It would seem to me that in writing this bill, providing what shall be the contents of certain measures, when we make the quart the unit of measurement it is well to define the contents of the quart, and that is all that is attempted to be done here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3 insert a new subsection as follows: "(c) The standard five-eighths-bushel hamper shall contain 1,344 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 14¼ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 9 inches; the inside length of the staves shall be 12⅞ inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge even with the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-ninth of an inch long and 13½ inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out all after the first two lines of subsection (c).

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in the bill. That is the proposed amendment.

Mr. QUIN. Then I am opposed to the amendment for the reason that it specifies how the five-eighths bushel hamper shall be made. Gentlemen, you will understand that in California they make the five-eighths bushel hamper out of a kind of wood that is native to California and easy to obtain there. In Louisiana they make the hamper out of wood that is native there, and the same thing in Mississippi. This committee amendment would make the hamper costly and inconvenient and hard to get in some sections where they grow fruits and vegetables. I take it that the committee want a bill which, if it passes, will be practical and at the same time carry out the theory on which the committee are acting. If this amendment is agreed to, the producer and the ultimate consumer will pay an exorbitant price for this particular kind of container.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. QUIN. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. In view of the high cost of living, in view of the condition of the railroads of the country, in view of the shipper himself, suppose there was fixed by law a certain number of cubic inches in a package, but you did not fix the size and shape of it, you would have a tremendous loss by having a heterogeneous collection of containers, all with the same number of cubic inches, and of such different sizes that in the packing, handling, and transportation you would lose by the process.

Mr. QUIN. The people who are producing the vegetables are the ones who pay the freight. Now, the immediate community where they raise fruit and vegetables is going to furnish a hamper that will occupy the least room inside of the car and at the same time have the fruits and vegetables so packed that they will receive cool air. You can trust the people who are raising the truck. They are going to want a container of reasonable cost. Do you know that the cost of containers has quadrupled in the last six years? A container that cost 4 cents six years ago is costing 25 cents right now in my district. If you put this kind of a bill through and make it law, that container may cost 50 cents next year. So this committee ought to be careful in making specifications that will cost the ultimate consumer of these vegetables, the man who eats them, not only the difference in transportation but the difference in the cost of that container.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does the gentleman know that the more containers made of any one size the cheaper they are bound to be, cheaper than making them in various sizes?

Mr. QUIN. That depends on the particular section. They do not use the five-eighths of a bushel very much in my country, but where they do use it it would be cheaper. The seven-eighths bushel is used almost universally in Mississippi, and, of course it would be cheaper to the producer and shipper and finally to the ultimate consumer. But you are putting it on the theory that you are going to have a certain kind of wood, a certain kind of nails, a certain thickness to it, a certain number of strips, and that will necessarily make it cost more. How are you going to get around it? You can have your five-eighths of a bushel hamper and you ought to have it, but we ought not to have the restrictions on it that you put on here. I think it would be a costly experiment, and I hope the committee will not adopt these specifications as set forth in the subsection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment shall prevail, it will leave in the bill a declaration of a standard for the five-eighths bushel hamper. It will not, however, undertake to define the thickness of the planks or the diameter between the staves or any of those other incidental propositions.

If this amendment in the Committee of the Whole indicates that it is favored by the committee, I think it will be followed by the committee, or some one else, offering amendments that would make the same provision as to the other paragraphs in this section.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that there is very great force in the argument which I heard made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. There is no doubt of the constitutional power of the Congress to declare a standard. In my opinion—and I have thought something of it since the bill was up here not very long ago having a similar purpose—there is, to say the least, very grave doubt as to the constitutional right of Congress to go into the question of undertaking to define the size and the material that shall go into the making up of these containers. It seems to me that Congress ought to be content to rest upon its clear, unquestionable constitutional power of declaring a standard and leaving these nebulous or doubtful questions untouched by the Government.

I have not had the opportunity of studying this bill with sufficient care to know just what effect it is going to have upon the vegetable market and upon the shipments of vegetables and fruit by the growers. In the section of the country that I have the honor to represent vegetable growing is a great industry. It is a matter of vital importance to that section. They are required now in the shipment of berries, the shipment of potatoes, and the shipment of peas to stamp on the packages the amount that the package contains. There is no probability of the consumer or the purchaser being defrauded.

The law at present is sufficient for the protection of the consumer. This legislation, to my mind, is but another imposition by the Federal power upon the daily habits and commercial customs of the community and of citizens without any corresponding benefit to the consumers or to the public generally in the results that will be obtained therefrom. I repeat that it is proper to exercise that unquestioned power which Congress has to declare a standard, and when we shall have done that we have done all the Constitution gives us a clear right to do and all that the public needs or demands. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to ask the gentleman if under the interstate commerce clause we would have the power to make it unlawful to manufacture these crates in the sizes that are condemned by this bill.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think so. Perhaps we might have the power to prevent a shipment in interstate commerce.

Mr. CONNALLY. I mean outside of the commerce power we would not have any power to prohibit the manufacture and sale?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think so, not even under the interstate commerce clause. I think the whole thing must rest on the clause that Congress shall have the power to standardize weights and measures.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not undertake to interpret the meaning of the constitutional provision, but is not there a provision for regulating commerce?

Mr. GARRETT. Regulating commerce between the States, and so forth.

Mr. LAYTON. Congress has the power to regulate commerce.

Mr. GARRETT. Interstate commerce, certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. Might not it have the power of regulation on the ground of great benefit to the public by regulating the size of the packages as well as the contents for the purpose of benefiting the roads and the shippers?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think so. At any rate the bill is not predicated upon the commerce clause of the Constitution, but on the other provision of which I spoke.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I doubt the advisability of this Congress undertaking to describe how these containers shall be built, except as Congress prescribes their capacity, as the two lines on this page describe the number of cubic inches which must constitute the five-eighths bushel hamper. It occurs to me, listening to what the gentleman from Delaware says, that Congress has the right to control interstate commerce, that this bill is not based on that portion of the Constitution at all. This is establishing standards to be applied all over the country, in every locality and community throughout this country, where it will be the law if this bill be passed. After the bill becomes law, the manufacturer and user will find that the inside top hoop must be one-eighth of an inch thick; they will find that each stave shall be not less than one-ninth of an inch thick; and that the bottom piece shall be not less than five-eighths of an inch thick. Aside from the advisability of enacting such legislation as that, I very much doubt the power of Congress to enact it. In that respect I believe with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and if it seems adadvisable, if we have the power, to say anything about the material of which the container shall be built, if it seems advisable to say that some of these parts shall be so thick, we certainly ought to say that they shall be not less than so thick, because we are considering only the inside capacity, and if the inside capacity meets the requirements, I do not know why we should say that the walls should be only so thick. Supposing the bottom piece is found to be six-eighths of an inch thick, why should the law say that it should be only five-eighths of an inch thick and make it a crime if it is one-eighth of an inch thicker? It makes it stronger. The interior capacity is prescribed; therefore nobody can be deceived as to the quantity of food products it contains. The interior capacity is there; that requirement can not be evaded. It is the outside of the container, the outside mold, that is affected if the material is too thick.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to find myself in disagreement with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], because I have the highest opinion of the wisdom and sagacity of both of them, but it seems to me that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee be adopted the purposes to be served by this bill will be entirely destroyed. The purpose of this bill is to prevent fraud, and fraud will not be prevented by simply providing that a five-eighths bushel basket shall contain a certain number of cubic inches. We recently had before the Committee on Agriculture, of which I have the honor to be a member, a bill which related to the use of packages which were made in a shape or form such as to deceive the purchaser. The testimony before that committee shows, I think, beyond any dispute whatever, that it is possible to take two bottles or two baskets or two boxes of exactly the same cubical content and make them in such form as to deceive the purchaser as to the quantity of the contents. You can take two baskets of different shapes, which may contain exactly the same number of apples or tomatoes of the same size, and yet to the purchaser one of them will seem very much larger than the other, and the purchaser will thereby be deceived. One of the purposes of this bill is to prevent that very thing.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the law now require that the contents shall be stamped on each package?

Mr. ANDERSON. As to certain things I think that is so, but not as to everything.

Mr. GARRETT. I know that in the case of sweet potatoes—yams—that is the law, because people down in my country very innocently got into trouble because they did not stamp the contents.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is probably right about that, but the testimony before us indicated that notwithstanding the fact that as to those packages that were designated as containing 2 ounces or 4 ounces, or 6 pounds or 10 pounds, the shape of them nevertheless led the purchaser to believe that he was getting more than he actually got.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I just wanted to ask the gentleman one question which I think he ought to cover in his argument. Is there not this danger in prescribing the precise thickness, that you are going to add, in these days of exceedingly high-priced lumber, in all its varieties, very greatly to the enormous cost of the container to-day, and consequently will not this bill, if passed in the present form, absolutely limit you to a lumber container and exclude all composite boxes to which the trade is having recourse to-day in its efforts to economize?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think so myself, and if that were true some of the manufacturers of these boxes and users of these containers who were before the committee would undoubtedly have raised that question. Entirely aside from that particular phase of the proposition, there is a general provision in the bill which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish tolerances, and if he should find that it is desirable to permit the staves to be somewhat thicker or thinner than provided in this act, he would have that power under the permission to establish tolerances, in my judgment.

The gentleman from Tennessee raises the constitutional question with respect to this provision.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. In a moment. I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Tennessee is correct in that position. That is to say, I think the establishment of the number of cubic inches in a five-eighths bushel basket is a matter of establishing a standard, but when you come to say that the staves shall be so thick, and the bottom so thick, and that the staves shall be so far apart, it seems to me that the only possible chance of sustaining that proposition is upon the theory of a regulation of commerce, and that this bill does not contain any provision which does limit the operation of this act to those baskets or containers which do go into interstate commerce. That is a matter, however, which can be corrected, and I hope will be corrected, when we reach the appropriate section. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I approve the general purposes of the bill, but its details I fear will not only confuse legislators but will be almost impossible of execution in the operation of commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. For example, on page 2 of the bill, it is provided that the inside top hoop shall be one-tenth of an inch thick, and so forth. Why should Congress prescribe the thickness of an inside top hoop of a box, basket, or other container? This contemplates a wooden hoop, I take it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I imagine so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Do we not know that a metal hoop, such as a wire hoop and an iron hoop, is now used, and I am told that one-sixteenth or one thirty-second of an inch of such material gives all the tensile strength necessary?

In addition, we do now know what will be the character of the materials out of which baskets and boxes must be made in the next two or three years, and therefore should Congress project such an iron-clad detail into the future? Should we not give some play to the ingenuity, the necessities, and inventions of the people who carry on the commerce of the country? Will not the exigencies of trade inexorably compel people who engage in it to adopt the proper materials out of which to manufacture these boxes and baskets?

Mr. ANDERSON. What the gentleman says may have some force, but the fact still remains that you can not protect the consumer of the articles which come in these boxes unless you do specify in great detail the character and the dimensions of the material which is to be used in the manufacture. You could take a basket with a one-half-inch bottom and put in a 2½-inch bottom, and make a one-half-bushel basket look like a five-eighths basket.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But I am addressing my remarks to the material out of which these containers must be made.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is nothing that specifies the material.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why should we prescribe the material at all? And why should we prescribe a character of material to which perhaps you can not conform, or, if so, for only a few years?

Mr. ANDERSON. There is not anything that requires a basket to be made out of any particular material——

Mr. MONTAGUE. The bill requires that the top hoop shall be one-tenth of an inch thick.

Mr. ANDERSON. But that does not require it to be made of wood.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But why require a wood hoop to be one-tenth of an inch thick? And supposing there is no wood out of which to make it, what becomes of trade and commerce then? What does Congress know, in the very nature of things what can Congress know, of such mechanical details?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman should not make such an assumption as that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not making an assumption; I am reading the text of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am reading the mandate of the bill. Congress should confine its power to legislation and not extend it to administrative regulations. We should be cautious in our loading legislation with impracticable, if not impossible, requirements.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I would state that containers are on the market now made of metal.

Mr. ANDERSON. For the shipment of this class of articles?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We find in the bill that the Secretary may, if he finds it necessary in his regulations, prescribe specifically with respect to the material used.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, I was not discussing that section.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It arose in the colloquy with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

Mr. ANDERSON. That is very true, and when we get to that section we will discuss it, but I am discussing this section now. I rose to discuss the argument advanced by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Michigan, and I hope I have done it successfully.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, western New York is a center for the production of food and vegetables, and in the past few years we have seen apple barrels go from 28 or 30 cents until to-day they are selling at a dollar and ten cents. I take it that this bill, while it does not say that this container shall be made of wood, really, from the specifications, restricts the material to wood, and the gentleman from Virginia very aptly asks, "Supposing we can not find the wood, what, then, is to become of the produce of the country?" That is not an impossible situation at all, since the enormous advance in the price of the barrel has grown out of the shortage of wood. There is not a single variety of lumber that has not gone up about four times the price it was even a year or 18 months ago, and we are now facing an actual famine. It is a practical condition that confronts us. As the gentleman from Virginia very well suggested, we sit down here, a body of men not experts in the making of these packages, and we attempt to prescribe to the manufacturers the material they shall use and precisely how they shall use it, and by doing that, first, we exclude from use all but one material, a material of which we are likely to have a shortage; and, second, we exclude the manufacturing community, as the gentleman from Virginia very aptly and very well said, from devising any better or simpler or cheaper or more expeditious way of making a basket or making a container, whatever it may be.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. MacGREGOR. For the information of the gentleman, who comes from the same district practically, I was informed by a man who was interested in baskets within a very short time we will not be able to secure baskets for the Niagara fruit district this fall because of the shortage of wood and wire.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I understand that same thing. I understand men have contracted some months ago for baskets and to-day the situation is that you can not find anybody who will give you a contract to deliver baskets made of wood. They are beginning in my district to make baskets of composite.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to ask the gentleman what becomes of all these baskets that do not conform to these sizes? Will not the passage of this bill further restrict the supply of baskets by outlawing all of the baskets now in the business that do not conform to this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think that objection is taken care of by a subsequent clause in the bill, where they say this shall not take effect until six months after November next. But we have the next fruit crop to deal with, and we should not bind down these fruit and vegetable growers to a basket which they may find it impossible to obtain. This may be a very, very serious thing. We are legislating here in an iron-clad way, and we may find that when the season comes we have passed a law which it is impossible to live up to in a practical way, and so it might become impossible to ship our fruits and vegetables.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I happen to know, from having been counsel in certain cases, that even before the war began there was a great shortage of material from which containers could be manufactured. Some had even gone to the extent of using the waste and scrap accumulated at the sawmills. I have not the slightest doubt that the point suggested by the gentleman is one that ought to be very gravely considered to determine whether or not we are legislating with complete information and with full appreciation of conditions as they actually exist.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think the gentleman's suggestion is entirely right. Let me say a word. I have not any question but that the committee is animated by the very best and very highest purpose, and I sympathize with that purpose, and all I say is that they can reach their end, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] suggests, by specifying the number of cubic inches, and if it is not clear that such a law already exists provide for stamping the quantity on the outside of the container.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I surely will.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. If an amendment were added containing the words "if made of wood," so that it would not eliminate the baskets made of paper or wire, and would not confine it, as the committee evidently intended, to baskets manufactured exclusively out of wood, would not that answer your objection?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think it would quite, because you would be in danger then of prescribing conditions that might be impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY. As I said to the committee a moment ago, I am in entire sympathy with the purposes of this bill. I want to reach the same point that they desire to reach, and all that I suggest in relation to it is that we shall not pass legislation here that shall be so detailed, shall be so specific, shall go into such particulars, as to make the accomplishment of what we have in mind not alone impossible, but which would accomplish something we do not desire to do at all, and that is to make shipment of these products impossible. And it does seem to me, if the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan is adopted, that we prescribe simply the cubic contents and have a provision that there shall be stamped upon each package its contents, we will have accomplished all that we can accomplish and all that it is safe to attempt to accomplish in regard to this legislation at this particular time.

Mr. LAYTON. Is the gentleman speaking by reason of protest on the part of manufacturers?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The only protests I have had, if the gentleman please, were not in regard to this bill, as to which I do not think my people are informed, but in regard to the apple-barrel bill, which passed some time ago.

Mr. LAYTON. I only wanted to bring out this fact——

Mr. DEMPSEY. But I am very familiar with this question of the manufacture of fruit packages, because I have been interested in the raising of fruit myself.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for a minute myself in order to make a statement. I am familiar with the fact that numbers—I imagine a hundred—of different manufacturers who are in this business and who manufacture millions of these containers are themselves anxious to have these standard containers.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have no question about that. No doubt they want the standard container, but they do not want specifications as to the way of manufacturing it prescribed. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, is it not the practice to make that request in the House instead of in the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It is, unless there is no objection.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment, so that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may submit a request?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 22, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to our task to-day with thought of the splendid achievements of our fathers, who with brave hearts and unconquerable spirit and devotion to the high principles of justice and reverence toward Thy name laid strong and well the foundations of our national life. We pray that we may, emulating their example, follow on to accomplish that which they so well began. Give us Thy blessing to-day to this end. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 12460. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union;

H. R. 12824. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union;

H. R. 13138. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended May 15, 1916; and

H. R. 13227. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KAHN, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. MCKENZIE, Mr. DENT, and Mr. FIELDS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 53 to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53 to the bill, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. WASON, and Mr. SISSON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 806. An act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians against the United States; and

S. 2442. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church, by patent in fee, certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Haven and Danbury, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation to incorporate the International Association of Rotary Clubs, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Connecticut Bankers' Association, of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation permitting banks to make an exchange charge of 10 cents per $100 or fraction on checks drawn on themselves presented through the Federal reserve banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of the United Irish Societies of Bridgeport, Conn., and a petition of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of America, of Willimantic, Conn., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 123, American Flint Glass Workers, of Waterbury, Conn., praying for the protection of the glass industry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Allan M. Osborn Camp, No. 1, United Spanish War Veterans, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to Spanish War Veterans, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Mather Post, No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Connecticut, of Deep River, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to soldiers of the Civil War and their widows, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against any change in the present standards of weights and measures, which was referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of East Hartford, Conn., and a petition of the Employers' Association of Hartford County, Conn., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Kiwanis Club, the Business Men's Association, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Bridgeport Screw Co., all of Bridgeport; of the Chamber of Commerce of Middletown; and of sundry employees of the D. M. Reed Co., of Bridgeport, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of a daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Fairfield County Farm Bureau, of Danbury, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of a daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Connecticut State Retail Jewelers' Association, praying for the repeal of the excise tax on jewelry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Excelsior Lodge, International Association of Machinists, of Derby, Conn., praying for the repeal of the espionage law, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Newton S. Manross Post, No. 57, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Connecticut, of Forrestville; of Nathanial Lyon Post, No. 2, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Connecticut, of Hartford; and of Robert O. Tyler Post, No. 50, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Connecticut, of Hartford, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Foreign Legions of New Haven, Hartford, Derby, Meriden, and Madison, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the granting of a bonus to ex-service men with the exception of those who are disabled and the dependents of soldiers killed in the war with Germany, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes. I give notice that I shall take an early opportunity to call up the bill for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

Mr. THOMAS. I present the views of the minority—Report No. 510, part 2—on the bill (H. R. 10918) to provide revenue and encourage domestic industries by the elimination, through the assessment of special duties, of unfair foreign competition, and for other purposes. The report bears the signature of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] and myself, and I ask that it be received and printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2800) authorizing the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians, in the State of Oregon, to submit claims to the Court of Claims (Rept. No. 544).

ACTIVITIES OF FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Mr. KING. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] I should like to inquire whether he has reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the resolution to which he called my attention yesterday?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am obliged to the Senator for referring to the matter. I ask the privilege of making that report now. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 309) directing the Postmaster General to furnish information in regard to alleged circularization of agriculturists in the United States, I report it without amendment.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 309) was read, as follows:

Whereas it has been reported that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has circularized hundreds of thousands of agriculturists in the United States, and submitted questionnaires to them relating to divers subjects: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what authority said Fourth Assistant Postmaster General had for his said action and what appropriation had theretofore been made to cover the expenses of such proceedings upon his part.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word in explanation of this resolution. Complaints were made to me that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General had sent out tens of thousands of circulars and questionnaires to the farmers of the United States. The statement was made that he was seeking to get information to enable him to engage in an experiment which I conceive to be outside of the domain or purview of the Post Office Department. My information is that there was no authority for his action, and no appropriation from which he could draw to carry on the circularization program upon which he had entered. If the information sought was desirable, then the Agricultural Department should have obtained it. There is a disposition upon the part of too many officials to indulge in fads and experiments, and to undertake matters not authorized by law. There should be a stop to this course. Executive officials are to execute the laws, not to make the laws. I desire to find out what authority the Post Office Department had to engage in the work referred to in the resolution. Let me say frankly it is my purpose to curb wherever possible the unauthorized activities of executive agencies. Many of the agencies and employees of the Government want to extend their authority and jurisdiction, and they use funds of the Government for improper purposes, and seek for information that they are not entitled to obtain or assume undertakings not authorized or desired.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that I can furnish him with the information he desires. I have it in my office.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator object to my getting it from the department?

Mr. DIAL. I would request the Senator to let the resolution go over for the present, as I desire to secure further information.

Mr. KING. I want the information to come from the official himself, and I should like it to come to the Senate directly, and not indirectly from the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DIAL. I object to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The resolution will go over.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4273) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 866); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 4274) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Ely, Nev.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 4275) to protect certain wild animals in Humboldt National Forest, in Nevada; to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

By Mr. GRONNA (for Mr. LA FOLLETTE):

A bill (S. 4276) for the relief of Poul Albert Jensen; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 4277) for the relief of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (by request):

A bill (S. 4278) to further amend the interstate-commerce act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4279) to regulate grazing conditions on national forests; to the Committee on Public Lands.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

H. R. 12460. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union;

H. R. 12824. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union; and

H. R. 13227. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims.

H. R. 13138. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended May 15, 1916, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FREDERIC J. HASKIN—GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on Friday, April 2, 1920, I made a statement in relation to the distribution of certain public documents and referred to Mr. Frederic J. Haskin. Mr. Haskin, in order that the Senate and the country may know the character of his business, would like me to read a letter I received from him in explanation. The letter is dated April 9, 1920, and reads as follows:

APRIL 9, 1920.

My attention has been called to your remarks on the floor of the Senate concerning the conduct of my business and the charge that it leads to a waste of Government literature.

I feel that you would not have made this criticism if you had possessed a more complete understanding of my operations, and I wish to offer a statement explaining them.

In addition to my work as a correspondent, I am the director of an information bureau, which is supported by over 100 representative newspapers for the free use of the public.

The service I render as a free agent is quite varied. I make investigations for editors, answer questions to subscribers, and arrange for the free distribution of educational literature, a great deal of which is not governmental.

My use of Government bulletins is usually under some such conditions as the following: There may be an epidemic of influenza, and it may be obviously advisable that the latest bulletin of the Public Health Service be widely distributed. There may be a coal strike which threatens to freeze the country and a consequent necessity of getting to the people a bulletin such as the Bureau of Mines publishes on the economic use of fuel. The garden season may be opening, and it may be evident that vegetables are going to be scarce, necessitating a wide distribution of the garden bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture.

In the case of any of these emergencies, or any similar one, I volunteer the services of my agency to help reach the public quickly. If a bulletin exists giving the necessary facts, I may offer to distribute it, or the governmental agency having it may ask me to distribute it.

You were in error when you informed the Senate that the advertising was done in my name, and that I offered for a 2-cent stamp to send any public document the reader might ask for. The advertising is done by the newspaper in its own name and at its own expense. Each advertisement refers only to the particular offering named therein. I never advertise any bulletin unless the supply is previously arranged for. The 2 cents is used to pay the return postage. If the inquirer sends too much postage, the excess is returned to him.

In this connection I will read what I stated:

Mr. Frederic J. Haskin, located on U Street, I think, is a newspaper correspondent and a representative of—I can not state how many papers in the United States. I suppose Senators have received a copy of their home paper and in the paper noticed inserted an advertisement of Mr. Frederic J. Haskin, in which it is stated that if the reader will clip the advertisement out of the paper and attach to it a 2-cent stamp and send it to Mr. Frederic J. Haskin he will send in return any public document that the sender may ask for.

I ask that this advertisement, taken from the paper just as it appeared, be printed in the RECORD to show who does the advertising and how.

The advertisement is as follows:

GARDEN BOOK FREE.

"I like to see 'em grow!"

That's what a man said when a friend asked him why he put in an hour every afternoon grubbing away in his back yard with a hoe. The man might also have truthfully replied that his garden gave him better vegetables for less money, and that chopping up the face of the earth with a hoe saves doctor's bills.

Grow a garden. Follow the directions in the official illustrated Garden Book, published by the United States Department of Agriculture. You can get this by writing the Detroit Journal Information Bureau, at Washington. Send for it to-day. It is free.

THE DETROIT JOURNAL INFORMATION BUREAU,
Frederic J. Haskin, Director, Washington, D. C.:

I inclose herewith two-cent stamp for return postage for a free copy of the Garden Book.

Name_____

Street address_____

City_____ State_____

Mr. SMOOT. The letter then proceeds:

No profit is made by anyone on any of my transactions. I receive no income except the salary paid me by the newspapers, and the newspapers have no return, except the good will of their subscribers and the satisfaction of promoting public welfare.

On this point I said:

I do not think Mr. Haskin charges anything for the documents. He requires, however, that a 2-cent stamp be sent to him before he will send any document. Of course, there are a lot of farm bulletins among them, which it never costs 2 cents to send, but I am not saying that Mr. Haskin is making money out of these documents, because I do not know it. However, I think it gives him a standing with a clientele of people in the United States by the free distribution of these documents, which he uses in order to secure the appointment as representative of newspapers from all parts of the country.

Then Mr. Haskin proceeds:

I note that you told the Senate that I procured 1,329,475 copies of Government publications in a little over a year, and that you found in the list as high as 82,715 copies of one document.

If you could have taken the time to have informed yourself more fully, you might have told the Senate that my participation in this distribution was usually at the request of a Cabinet officer or bureau chief, and that the assistance of the newspapers was invariably welcomed and appreciated by Government officials rather than opposed by them.

You might have told the Senate that the large quantity I used of one particular document was a bulletin on the treatment and prevention of influenza issued by the Public Health Service when the epidemic was raging. In this national emergency my newspapers responded to the request of Dr. Blue to advertise this bulletin.

Upon another occasion I sent out to my papers reproductions of letters from both Dr. Blue and Secretary Baker, asking for cooperation in the fight against the spread of venereal disease. In this instance, and in many others which might be cited, neither I nor my editors had any interest except to promote public welfare, there being many subjects more attractive in character, and not of governmental origin, which were at our disposal.

You are mistaken in the idea that my distribution of governmental literature is a trespass upon congressional privilege. On the contrary, it is an aid to it.

This is what I said in that regard:

Mr. President, these documents are printed for distribution by the departments and Senators and Representatives, and the intention originally was that they should be sent to the constituents of Senators and Representatives.

Mr. Haskin's letter proceeds:

Widespread publicity for a campaign for better babies or garden planting or fruit canning calls the attention of many people to the subject who otherwise would know nothing about it, or be so indifferent as not to act. Once these persons are made acquainted with the benefits they may receive from their Government, they are likely to remain in closer contact with it thereafter.

One certain outcome of the war, and the tremendous publicity given the various drives for financing, increased production, efficient management, etc., is that millions of citizens have learned how to cooperate more closely with their Government and benefit from its many activities. This condition naturally argues for an increased appropriation for the dissemination of educational literature, rather than a restriction of it such as you propose.

When the Government expends vast sums of public money for scientific research, which is of great practical value if its results can be put in the hands of people who can profit by it, surely that distribution by any agency that is proper and economical should not be restricted.

You have only to inquire to find that as a practitioner before the Government I am in good standing, and there is no question as to the economy of my service, because it is free.

My work does not interfere with the distribution of governmental literature by Members of Congress. They are recognized both by the departments and by me as the ones who have the first right to the distribution of this literature. But the Members of Congress have only limited facilities for advising the public what is available in the way of governmental literature. If several hundred thousand copies of a bulletin on corn culture have been printed, for example, because the Department of Agriculture believes that number should be distributed, and if only one-half of these are distributed through Members of Congress, it can scarcely be argued that any waste is involved in the distribution of the remainder through my service.

This is typical of my operations. I get my supplies, as a rule, only after all demands from Members of Congress have been satisfied. My work begins where theirs ends. I give circulation to an immense mass of printed matter which would otherwise not attain any circulation at all, and I put it in the hands of persons who would otherwise never have heard of it. Many Members of Congress have recognized the value of this work, and none, before you, has seen in it any trespass upon the routine methods of distribution, or has considered a free and widespread circulation of such valuable literature, in excess of what Congress can itself distribute, a waste of public money.

Very truly, yours,

FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

Mr. President, I now state that if I have the power I am going to stop the distribution of millions of Government publications that now go into the wastebaskets of the country. My mail of late has simply been clogged with letters sending to me samples of the waste of paper in the way of documents sent to them unsolicited, and the recipients had no interest whatever in the subject matter. In the future this practice will at least be curtailed, because now even the departments can not issue more than 50 copies to any individual or corporation without the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing.

I cast no reflection upon Mr. Haskin as a man or upon his business in any way. He has complied many times with direct requests of heads of the Government. All I want to do is to bring about, if possible, the saving of millions and hundreds of millions and billions of publications sent indiscriminately to the people of the United States who do not want them.

Mr. KING. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator how this will be stopped so long as Congress makes appropriations to the various departments and bureaus and Federal agencies which they may expend in publishing all sorts of trash and misinformation, as well as many foolish and alleged scientific documents, which pour forth from executive departments in a perennial stream?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that one way this is going to be enforced is that we are going to enforce the law which is upon the statute books to-day limiting the number of publications that can be printed by any one department. In the past they have paid no more attention to the law than if it was the whistling of the wind. The limit is 5,000 copies, but I know of documents where they have printed over a million copies.

The Senator is correct when he speaks of appropriations made; but take almost any of the deficiency appropriation bills and you will find appropriations covering deficiencies for printing and binding.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have been in receipt of many requests for copies of the report of the Commission on Classification. That is a report which interests everybody in the service of the United States. I was informed that only one copy was allowed to each Member of the Senate. It occurred to me that a document for which there is so great a demand should be made available for the public even if it was necessary to require the payment of a certain price. I should like to ask the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing what is the policy of the committee with respect to the distribution of the report of the Classification Commission?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator has been wrongly informed, in the first place, that each Senator is entitled to only one copy. Whenever a document is printed each Senator is allowed two copies of the document.

Then, in the next place, the commission itself has authority to print them. I do not know whether they spent all their money in paying salaries or not and did not print the necessary number of the reclassification report. However, I will simply say to the Senator that wherever there is a legitimate demand—and this is the first I have heard of the question—the Joint Committee on Printing has no idea of restricting it except within limits. This is the first time I have heard the question mooted.

Mr. PHELAN. May I ask what was the size of the edition of the report printed?

Mr. SMOOT. The usual number was printed.

Mr. PHELAN. Five thousand?

Mr. SMOOT. No; 1,464.

Mr. PHELAN. Do I understand that the document is available to those who desire to purchase it from the Superintendent of Documents?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it will have to be purchased. Of course, we are not going to print copies sufficient to give to every boy and girl and man and woman in the employ of the United States. That would take 775,000 copies. It is true that before the war we had less than 300,000 employees, but to-day we have 775,000. Any reasonable call, I will say to the Senator, is going to be complied with.

Mr. PHELAN. I am obliged to the Senator for the information.

PURCHASE OF FABRICS BY BUREAU OF STANDARDS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, while I am on my feet I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another matter.

I have before me a letter from the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Standards, signed by E. M. Michelsen, textile section of the Bureau of Standards, dated April 10, 1920, and addressed to a manufacturer. I wish to read this letter to the Senate, and then I want to make just a few comments upon it.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF STANDARDS,
Washington, April 10, 1920.

GENTLEMEN: The textile section of this bureau would like to establish an organization enabling members of the bureau staff to purchase staple fabrics for their personal use, and would be pleased to have your cooperation.

Our plan is as follows: On receipt of sufficient requests to make up one or more bolts, prices and 1 square yard samples will be obtained and tested in our laboratories. Consideration of quality, price, and delivery will enable us to place our orders, terms being cash on delivery.

We will in no way mention the name of the selling agent or manufacturer in connection with the testing or selling of the fabrics, unless requested to do so by the seller.

We wish to purchase fabrics of good quality only, and would be pleased to have you send us samples and prices on white madras shirting. We understand that you have mill ends which you sell, but if possible we would like to obtain the full pieces.

Very truly, yours,

E. M. MICHELSEN,
Textile Section.

Mr. President, if the Government of the United States is going into the business of purchasing of goods to be furnished to all of its employees, there ought to be an establishment where all of the employees may be treated alike and which will furnish the goods they want. This is only a sample of the letters that I have received.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator if the Government is going into that line of business, why should not the benefits be given to all the people in the United States? Why should they be limited to the employees of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is wisdom in the question asked by the Senator from North Dakota, but what I want to do at this particular moment is to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if all the bureaus and departments of the Government are going to undertake to purchase all kinds of goods from the manufacturers and distribute them at retail to the Government employees in the respective bureaus and departments it is going to cost the Government of the United States tens of millions of dollars.

In the first place, these letters are written upon the letterheads of the Department of Commerce. Not only is the time of the employees of the department taken up in writing the letters but in receiving the goods, in the examination of them, and, more than likely, in delivering the goods to each individual purchaser. It is going to cost the Government of the United States much more in dribbling these purchases out than it would if we had one place for all the employees to go and purchase the goods at cost.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield, first, to the Senator from North Dakota, and then I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has suggested that he desired to call these facts to the attention of the Senate. Will the Senator now go just a little further and call to the attention of the Senate the law authorizing the bureaus of the Government to go into the retail clothing business?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. E. M. Michelsen, of the textile section of the Bureau of Standards, will immediately answer and say that it is not the Bureau of Standards that is doing this, but that it is the employees of the Bureau of Standards. It is just such activities as this, however, that require the unusual number of employees in all of the departments. If they will attend to the business of the respective departments, we can, in a great number of instances, cut the number of employees in two and have the work done a great deal better than it is done to-day. Now I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KING. The letter that my colleague has just read would be construed by some as a proceeding somewhat smacking of blackmail. This is rather a harsh word; but, as I understand, the gentleman who writes this letter is at the head of a bureau or an agency of the Government that has to do with testing and examining textile fabrics produced in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. It is engaged in testing them in Government laboratories.

Mr. KING. If I understand the communication just read, the Bureau of Standards is a Government agency, is supported by the Government, and persons employed therein paid by the Government. The Government furnishes laboratories and other instrumentalities for the purpose of testing fabrics as well as other products and commodities. The stamp of approval by the Bureau of Standards upon any product is important to the manufacturer and vendor. The relations between the producer and the Bureau of Standards in a sense brings the employees of the bureau and the manufacturers into an antagonistic position; that is to say, the manufacturer and producer are desirous of obtaining a certificate from the Government that their products are of a high and superior grade. The employees of the bureau are there for the purpose of serving the public and administering in a fair and just manner the rules and regulations promulgated for their guidance. In a sense they are judges, or courts, to pronounce judgment upon the work and labor and products of others. It seems to me that it is a gross impropriety for employees of the Bureau of Standards to have commercial dealings with those whose products are submitted to be tested and examined and passed upon. As I interpret the letter just read, it would seem that it is in a sense a species of intimidation and extortion. The letter clearly declares that the employees of this Government agency want to form a combination to obtain goods at a low price. They state to the persons to whom the letter is directed that they will send orders and pay cash, and that the products of the manufacturer will be tested "in our laboratories." Of course, these employees have no laboratory. It would seem that the clear purpose of the writer was to secure for himself and others manufactured products at a very low price, and that an important factor in determining the price resulted from the fact that the proposed purchasers and the Government organization with which they were connected could help or hurt the manufacturer to whom they communicated. Can anyone doubt that the reception by the ordinary manufacturer of a letter such as the one before us would impel him to name an exceedingly low price, far below the market, for articles proposed to be purchased? He could not deal at arm's length in an independent way with the writer of the letter, or, at any rate, he could not deal with that freedom that would characterize his procedure if the proposition to purchase emanated from some wholesale dealer or broker. If my interpretation of this letter is correct, the author of the letter is not only guilty of a grave indiscretion but his conduct calls for investigation, and, if the facts are as the letter seems to indicate, his dismissal from the service should follow.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is another part of this letter which I do not like at all, and that is the part which reads:

We will in no way mention the name of the selling agent or manufacturer in connection with the testing or selling of the fabrics unless requested to do so by the seller.

What does that mean? It means, "If you will let us have these shirtings as requested, if you want us to advertise the fact, we will do so"; or, in other words, "If you will let us have these shirtings, perhaps at a price greatly below cost, you will get paid the price you quote us and receive in addition advertisement such as the Bureau of Standards will give you." That is wrong in principle; it is unjustifiable.

Mr. President, I hope that calling the attention of the Senate to this particular case will stop the practice in all of the departments of the Government engaged in this same class of work.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is quite an optimist this morning. I do not think it will stop it at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I only express the hope; but I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I am a little fearful that my hope will not be realized.

Mr. KING. If my colleague will yield to me, I desire to say that I do not think he will have done his full duty unless he communicates with the head of the organization from which this letter emanates and requests that an investigation be had. If the facts are as the letter indicates, the employee of the Government who wrote the letter ought to be summarily discharged from the service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have merely called attention to the letter which I have read. I have paid no particular attention to the others, for they were not so specific in their requests; yet I do know that a similar practice is going on in other departments of the Government; and I hope when it is called to the attention of the heads of the departments that the practice will cease.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9369, the Fuller pension bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether he expects to keep the bill which he has just called up before the Senate only during the usual morning hour, or whether he intends to hold it here during the day?

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope we will get through with it during the morning hour to-day. If we do not, the river and harbor bill really has the right of way, and if the Senator having that bill in charge insists on it he would be entitled to proceed after 2 o'clock. If the pension bill is not completed before that time, I hope to make it the unfinished business following the river and harbor bill; but until the river and harbor bill is disposed of, if this bill is not disposed of sooner, I shall try to call it up each morning after the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator that my reason for inquiring was that I expected to address the Senate this morning on the river and harbor bill. If the Senator is going on with this bill after 2 o'clock, of course I can make my remarks on the river and harbor bill at this time. I would prefer to do it, however, when the bill is formally before the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator would just as soon wait until 2 o'clock, would he not, and then discuss that matter when the river and harbor bill is really before the Senate?

Mr. REED. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 25, before the words "Civil War," it is proposed to insert the words "War with Mexico, the Spanish-American War, or the."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, how would it read then?

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. So that section 3 will read:

That from and after the approval of this act all persons whose names are on the pension roll, and who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, during the War with Mexico, Spanish-American War, or the Civil War, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, shall receive a pension at the rate of $72 per month; and that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $90 per month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood that that amendment was voted on last evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was here, and it was not voted on.

Mr. THOMAS. I supposed it was.

Mr. SMOOT. So did I.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was not voted on. The roll was called and failed to disclose the presence of a quorum.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, my information is that the RECORD shows that the Chair put the question, and the Chair announced that the "noes" seemed to have it, but went no further than that. Then the absence of a quorum was suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. And therefore I assume that the question is still open.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having this bill in charge the reason why the provision suggested by the Senator from Colorado was not included in the original bill. I am asking for information.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that is because we are including in this bill only those things which relate peculiarly to the soldiers of the Civil War. They are a much older class than the soldiers of the Spanish War and the soldiers of the late war. However, provision has been made for similar disabilities when incurred in service by the soldiers of the late war.

The Senator will easily understand, for instance, that the loss of an arm below the elbow in the case of a man 20 years of age will not be exactly the same impediment against his earning a living that it would be in the case of a man 80 years of age, because he can still earn a living. There is no question but that his earning capacity has been greatly reduced, but the man 80 years of age can not earn any living at all; and therefore we felt that it was better to deal with that question when the Spanish War veterans' bill should come before the Senate.

I call attention also to another matter—for instance, loss of leg at the hip joint. The first pension that was granted to soldiers of the Civil War for that disability was $15 a month, on June 6, 1866. That was increased to $24 from June 4, 1872, to $37.50 from March 3, 1879, to $45 from August 4, 1896, and to $55 from March 2, 1903. So it will be observed that we gave the soldiers of the Civil War nothing like this amount until they are given it in this bill at a very advanced age.

Of course, we will all agree that if they were all about the same age and in the same war, the same rules should apply without reference to their ages; but it was thought by the committee that we ought to deal with the soldiers of each war separately. At the present time the soldiers of the Spanish War are receiving the same amount for like injuries and loss of limb that soldiers of the Civil War, who are very much older, are receiving; but the committee felt that it was better to leave an increase for those of the Spanish War until the time when we should consider a bill relating to that war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I offered an amendment for the same purpose as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, but in a different way. It was to strike out the words "during the Civil War." That would make the bill applicable, if adopted, to those covered by and included in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado; so that if the amendment which I propose and which is also pending is adopted, section 3 will read as follows:

SEC. 3. That from and after the approval of this act all persons whose names are on the pension roll, and who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, shall receive a pension at the rate of $72 per month; and that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost one hand and one foot or been totally disabled in the same shall receive a pension at the rate of $90 per month.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Colorado or, better, that offered by me, ought to be adopted. I am going to ask the Secretary to read a copy of a letter which I received after I offered the amendment proposed by me. I do not give the name because I am sure the party who wrote it would prefer not to have his name submitted, but I will say for him that he is one of those who lost a leg in the Spanish-American War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1920.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I want to congratulate you on the fairness of your amendment to H. R. 9369, as reported out by the Senate Committee on Pensions.

The brutal discrimination of this measure as it came from the committee, it seems to me, ought to be apparent to everyone who takes the trouble to examine it. Your amendment very properly takes notice of the fact that the bill as reported to the Senate seeks to discriminate between men of identical disabilities, making a preferred class of one and allowing the other to go limping along in the struggle of life, getting on as best they can because few in numbers and therefore handicapped in enforcing any demands for relief.

I would like to call your attention to one noteworthy fact, and that is that never to this time in the history of pension legislation has there been enacted by Congress a law which discriminated between men who had lost arms or legs in the military or naval service of the United States.

While this and that law has been enacted in behalf of the Civil War and the Mexican War veterans suffering from partial disabilities, ignoring the men who served in the Spanish-American War and the Regular Establishment (meaning the Regular Army of peace times), the laws have always dealt evenly with men who had suffered the loss of hands or feet.

The present bill now seeks to depart from that rule and to increase the pension of the Civil War veteran and of some other classes who have lost legs and arms and to leave out of its benefits men of identical disabilities sustained in the Spanish-American War or in the Regular Establishment. Frankly, I think you will have to agree with me that the proposed legislation is an affront to every man who suffered such an injury in the Spanish War or the Regular Service. These pensioners are now receiving equal treatment, drawing their pensions under the same act, regardless of the time or character of their service.

Can it be that the committee which reported this bill reasons that the crutch operates more soothingly in the armpits of men who lost their legs in the Spanish-American War or in the Regular Establishment, or that the stumps of their maimed legs and arms are less likely to chafe than those of veterans of other service?

In the report accompanying this bill the Senate committee justifies the proposed pension increases to certain classes of veterans on the ground that the cost of living has mounted skyward in the last few years. For example, they cite the increase in the cost of ham from 15 cents a pound in 1913 to 55 cents in 1920. Can it be that this committee imagines that injured veterans of the Spanish-American War or the Regular Army are still buying ham for 15 cents a pound? If so, it might have been well for them to summon some crippled Spanish War veteran or Regular before them before reporting this bill. In any case, I hope this letter will set the members of the committee right on these points.

It is a notorious fact that men who were injured in the Regular Service or in the smaller wars have been grudgingly recognized by Congress, and, certainly, it is unfortunate that there should be such a flagrant demonstration of this tendency just at a time when preparations are being made to build a larger standing army.

Can it be that with the Great War over, the public mind is again reverting to that common contempt for the man who wears a uniform in time of peace? No one will deny that it has always been true—true in this country as well as in others. The bill which has been reported to the Senate is but the first sign of return to that peace-time state of mind which regards the Regular soldier as a necessary evil.

When Rudyard Kipling wrote the poem entitled "Tommy Atkins" he most faithfully portrayed the radically diverse moods of the public toward the regular soldier in peace and in war. He knew his subject when he wrote:

"Oh, it's Tommy this and Tommy that,
And Tommy go away;
But it's thank you, Mr. Atkins,
When the band begins to play."

The action of the Senate committee reflects a reversion, now that the war has been fought to a successful conclusion, to the spirit of the first two lines of the foregoing verse.

As one of the 600 or more veterans proscribed by this measure as unworthy, I thank you.

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I favor the pension bill as reported out of the committee and will vote for it, whether the amendment suggested by the Senator from Colorado or that suggested by myself is adopted or not. I do not believe I have voted against any general pension legislation since I have been a Member of the Senate.

I do not agree at all with my distinguished friends from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and Utah [Mr. KING] and some others who so bitterly oppose these pension bills. I feel that the Government of the United States is doing only justice to the veterans of all wars when they vote to them pensions and increase the pensions as the years go by and the veterans become enfeebled and helpless.

This bill recognizes only the veterans of the Civil War. I favor that. Why not recognize them all, Mr. President? In the Civil War, as has been stated here, there were 2,151,789 men who were under 21 years of age and there were 628,516 men over that age. That was all of the 31,443,321 of population of the United States in 1860 who went to the war and preserved the Union. The men who were willing to do that—and most of them were volunteers—ought to have their services recognized in some substantial way, even if it is necessary to go down into the pockets of some of the men who stayed at home and profiteered during the time the war was waging. There were many of military age and fitness who declined to participate in that war, Mr. President, and finally the draft was resorted to by Congress, as it was by the Southern Confederacy, in order to compel all within the military age to go to the front and bare their breasts to the bayonets of the enemy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I do not want to be captious at all. I do not think there is any objection particularly on the part of anybody to pensioning those who did bare their breasts to the enemy, who did actual military service, who were wounded or suffered disabilities or incurred disabilities which have incapacitated them for the duties of life. But the Senator certainly ought to distinguish between men of that character and the camp followers, and the thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of men who came into the service during the Civil War who were not within 100 miles or 1,000 miles of any battle field, who never saw the smoke of battle, who were exposed to no danger. Many of them, indeed, had a delightful jaunt for 30 to 90 days or 4 months.

Mr. THOMAS. Some were substitutes.

Mr. KING. Some were substitutes, as the Senator says. Those men are not to be put in the same category with soldiers who fought upon the battle field, who lost legs and arms, who were wounded, who incurred disabilities, and who suffered. Those men ought to be distinguished, it seems to me, from the multitude of children and grandchildren and uncles and aunts and widows to the third and fourth generation and nth power, thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of whom are now upon the pension rolls.

As a matter of fact, if the Senator will just pardon me one moment, the records show that upon the pension roll to-day there are more of the latter class than there are of men who were nominally and actually within the military and naval service of the Government. The figures are as follows:

The total number of survivors of the Civil War is 271,391; that is, those who were on the rolls February 6, 1920. I will modify that statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator correct that? I think that while the statement of the number is correct, that was the number on the rolls June 30, 1919.

Mr. KING. I stated that I would modify it. I will read the statement as I have received it from the Commissioner of Pensions. He states that the total on the Civil War pension rolls June 30, 1919, was 568,343; survivors, 271,391; widows, and so forth—"and so forth" will cover a large number of individuals and classes—296,952. Of course out of the survivors only a comparatively small number, my information is, actually were upon the battle field, actually bared their breasts to the bayonets of the enemy, to use the expression of the Senator.

I ask the Senator again, Does he not distinguish between those men who did serve their country upon the battle field, who were wounded, who did incur disabilities, and the aunts, the uncles, and the widows to the third and fourth degree, and the descendants and progeny and the alleged dependents in the ascending and the descending lines?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am in total disagreement with the Senator. This legislation must be general in its nature and character, and I stand for it. I care not whether it be popular or unpopular. If the Senator's view be taken as the correct one, it is an unpopular proposition, and I am on the unpopular side. If it is popular legislation and only advocated by politicians for selfish purposes, then I am fortunate in being on the popular side. That is immaterial to me, and I resent the imputation, no matter where it comes from, whether from this side of the Chamber or the other, that men who vote for these measures do it for political and selfish purposes. I do it as a matter of principle, and the men who are opposing these appropriations as a rule, Mr. President—I do not mean in the Senate, but I mean in the country at large—the men who are opposing such appropriations because it increases their taxation are not the men who have their little farms and homes with small incomes; they are not the men who earn moderate salaries, as we in the Senate do. They are the extremely rich and the men as a rule who profiteered during the civil and other wars, and who now object to large appropriations to pay to these men who saved and preserved the Union their just dues.

I stand for the pension policy, Mr. President, as a matter of principle. I am not only for this bill but I am going to vote for whatever is proper, reasonable, and right for the young men of this World War, whether they bared their breasts in conflict on the battle fields of France or whether they remained in the cantonments and camps of America, ready to go whenever their country said the time was appropriate for them to go. Let those pay for it who must. I am perfectly willing to give a part of my salary and income every year for this purpose, and so are the great mass of our people.

The same charge of political influence and motive is made, Mr. President, because some of us here in the Senate vote for appropriations to improve the rivers and harbors of this country. I have stood for those appropriations. My State has stood for them, and has shown its faith in work which goes to improve our country's waterways by contributing dollar for dollar for every cent that is appropriated to it by Congress for this purpose. My State will stand for this legislation, Mr. President, because the people of Oregon feel as I do, that we owe it to these old veterans of the Civil War to see that they shall not be in want in their old age. They stand, too, for paying the young men who were in this World War whatever is right and just.

The Senator says there were a lot of camp followers in the Civil War. Probably there were. If there were any camp followers, they were there for the purpose of making money, and they and their descendants, with millions pocketed by them and rung from the troops who were at the front, are now the men who kick, as a rule, against the payment of any taxes to meet the appropriations made by Congress.

There were killed and died of disease and wounds in the Civil War 400,000 men. The South had at least 1,500,000 men engaged, and their losses were proportionate to those of the North.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that the Pension Bureau is so organized now that practically every case of fraud has been eliminated and that a rigid examination has been had with reference to every case, so that mere camp followers and creatures of that kind are to all intents and purposes taken from the pension rolls?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think there is any question about that, and I am glad to have the Senator make the suggestion. The Senator served with me for a long time on the Military Affairs Committee, and the Senator knows there were many claims which came before the Military Affairs Committee where the committee felt that the War Department had been so strict in the enforcement of the law and in their investigations that they had excluded very many worthy men.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The operation of the Pension Bureau may be, as the Senator suggests, but those whose claims are rejected seldom fail—there may be some exceptions—to come to the Congress of the United States and there, by special bill, secure the pension just the same.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will pardon me for differing from him, I will tell him now that as chairman of that committee I have gone over the record many, many times, and where one was allowed there were ten disallowed by the committee or not acted on at all.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not referring to the Committee on Military Affairs. That is the committee having to do with bills for correcting records of service. I know that the vetoes of President Cleveland first exposed that situation, but the practice long ago has been abandoned—in fact, it did not survive President Cleveland—and the special pension bill has been the salvation of the soldier whose claim for pension was turned down by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator remember whether President Cleveland had a substitute in the service or not?

Mr. THOMAS. I think he had a substitute; but that is aside from the question. His substitute may have been pensioned. The other day I received a letter from a substitute asking me to introduce a special bill to secure a pension for him.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon a further interruption, I suppose there is no doubt about the fact that at one time the pension business of the country was run pretty loosely. I suppose there is no doubt that attorneys, who were then paid fees for getting pensions through, were very active, and they got results that were unjustifiable in many instances. The character of the gentlemen who engaged in that business as attorneys was not of the highest for the most part, but I think, from my observation and experience, that the pension rolls have been pretty thoroughly purged.

But, now speaking of private pension bills, I have introduced, as has every other Senator, many private pension bills. I never introduced one that did not seem to me to have some merit, and it has been a rare thing to get one of those bills approved. I have known a number of instances where it seemed to me that every principle of equity called for the enactment of the bill, but where the committee, under some rigid rule, rejected it.

May I be permitted to have the time of the Senator to add that the Civil War army is getting pretty old and the ranks are getting pretty thin? They are marching on into the great beyond very fast, and I do not believe we will add anything to the patriotism of our country by a niggardly policy.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in accord with the Senator from Missouri in that regard. I do not know that I would have said anything to-day, except that it is continually insisted here by a few of my colleagues, whom I esteem most highly, that those of us who favor these pension bills are doing so for political purposes. I do it, Mr. President, as a matter of principle. I have always done it. In the 10 years I have been in the Senate I do not remember ever voting against a general pension measure, because, although I was born and reared in the South, and my brother and other relatives in the South fought under the flag of the Southern Confederacy, I still think that we owe a debt of gratitude to the men who fought under the Stars and Stripes for the preservation of the Union that we can never fully pay. The men outside of the Senate who are now objecting to the increase of taxes that will be necessary to meet these appropriations owe the very fact that they are able to pay taxes to those men who labored and sacrificed all, and whose widows and children in many instances became dependent because those men either lost their lives or became permanently disabled.

The only objection I have to the bill is that it does not go far enough to include the Regular soldier in the section under consideration. There is a disposition to hold in disrepute in large measure the man who wears the uniform of his country, and there is no better evidence of that than the fact that the Regular soldier is discriminated against in this bill.

There are a great many men in the Regular Army who, both before and since the Spanish-American War, have become permanently disabled in the service, and they are just as much entitled, where their injuries came in the line of duty, to a pension as the men who actually became disabled as a result of a saber cut or a bullet in the Civil War or in any of the wars of our country.

I have watched our boys returning from France, and it has distressed me greatly to see magnificent divisions of Regulars from overseas landing in New York with little show of rejoicing. There was practically no one to meet them and they marched down the streets unheralded and without acclaim. There was not a braver body of men in the world than those Regulars who came over from France, and if I recall—I tried to find it this morning, but I failed to do it—there was only one unit mentioned by special name in Gen. Pershing's report, and that was a unit of Regulars. Why not recognize the man in the Regular Army, whether in the Civil War or since, whether in the Spanish-American War or since, or at any time, who has lost a limb and has become incapacitated to earn his own support and the support of his family because he was injured in the line of duty?

Mr. President, there were, in round numbers, 4,000,000 troops raised for the overseas war. Many of these boys were volunteers; many of them went over under the selective-service act; many of them could have claimed exemption, but did not do it. In other words, there were practically 3½ per cent of the population of the United States that went over in defense of civilization and to make the world safe for democracy. Can not the 96.5 per cent of the people of the United States go down in their pockets and reward these young men—call it a bonus or whatever you please—who were willing to offer up their lives upon the altar of their country?

Can not that thing be done? Can we not advocate such a policy without being charged with playing politics in order to gain the good will and favor of those young men? I deny the charge. It is wholly unworthy of Members of this Senate. Because we happen to differ from some of our colleagues on the principle involved here we, forsooth, must be charged with playing politics, although it has been the policy of our lives, some of us, to stand for just such legislation.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] will remember the fate of the retired volunteer officers' pay bill. The United States held out promises to those old men when they went into the service. Congress has never redeemed its promise to those men. We have reported the bill out from our committee more than once, but it always fails either here or in the House of Representatives. That debt ought to be recognized before the beneficiaries of it pass to the great beyond.

Mr. President, I have said more than I intended to say. Let some of the 95 per cent of the population who remained at home when the World War was being fought consent to do justice to the soldiers of that war. There were great fortunes made out of it. While our boys were reddening with their blood the plains of France and laying down their lives to preserve our institutions, the profiteer was at work here at home, and he ought to be compelled to pay something out of the fortune he made and achieved as a result of all the sacrifices that were made in order to make the present condition of the young soldiers better and happier.

I hope the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] will accept the amendment and let the Regular soldiers, if you please, share the benefits of the legislation. There are not very many of them. There have been in the Regular Establishment only 369 men who would come under that provision. There are only 167 of them who were engaged in the War with Spain, and only 11 of them in the war of 1917. Why not appropriate for them, and let Congress do justice to them all?

The strange thing about the present situation is that while we contribute to one class of our soldiers and sailors, we make the Regular pay his own way after he becomes incapacitated. The only institution in this Government that I know anything about that pays its way and asks nothing from Congress is the National Home for Soldiers here in Washington, to which the soldier contributes so much each month to take care of himself and his comrades when they become incapacitated. Even out of the small salary of $13 a month he received at one time, he used to have to turn a portion of it over for the purpose of maintaining an institution where he might some day go, but where he knew many of his old comrades must eventually find an asylum. Let us treat them all alike. I beg the Senator will accept these amendments, so that all may be treated justly and alike.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to consider just briefly the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and my reasons for saying that it should not be made a part of this particular bill. I listened with considerable interest to the letter which was read, written by a Spanish war veteran. This veteran seems to have a misconception entirely of the purpose of pension legislation. The main purpose of all pension legislation is to make good the loss occasioned by the service. In addition to this we grant a pension for the old and helpless, because of our gratitude for his war services.

This legislation is based, therefore, upon disability. The writer of the letter seems to fail to take into consideration that the bill now pending is based not only upon the loss of limb as a disability but advancing age as a disability. It will be admitted, of course, that if two soldiers in the Civil War lost a leg below the knee both should receive exactly the same pension.

That is true of the soldiers of the Spanish-American War and of the war of 1917; but the soldier who loses a portion of his leg, say, below the knee, and who is but 20 years of age, often can use an artificial limb, and can still partially earn his living; he is not totally disabled. There is no question but that the Government should deal most liberally with him in making good the loss, and even going beyond that, for a thousand inconveniences and sufferings that can never be compensated for by any pension; but the man who is 80 years of age, who has suffered a like physical disability, and who can not earn one penny, is not exactly in the same position. We have provided for an addition to the pensions of the soldiers of the Civil War at this time more particularly because they have reached an age at which their earning capacity has long since been passed. That is why we make a rule relative to the soldiers of the Civil War which we have not yet applied to the soldiers of the war of 1898, because the soldiers of the Civil War are from 30 to 40 years older than the soldiers of the latter war, and because their condition requires greater assistance on the part of the Government.

I wish the Senate further to remember that we have also reported from the Committee on Pensions, favorably, the Sells bill, which deals with the Spanish-American War veterans. I hope that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] will offer the amendment to that particular bill, rather than press it on this bill, for there is where it belongs.

I am not certain that I would not agree with them that it ought to be made a part of that bill; but I want to weigh it in connection with the age and condition of the soldiers of that war just as exactly as I weigh a like loss in connection with the age and physical condition of the old soldiers of the Civil War. The Sells bill is on the calendar of the Senate, and will come up in due course; but I think it appropriate to make a little allowance for the age of the old veterans of the Civil War, and that it is proper that we should consider the soldiers of that war in a class by themselves. I propose, so far as my vote can go and so far as my voice can go, to see that justice, and full justice, is done the soldiers of the War with Spain and the World War. I think, Mr. President, that the amendment ought not to be pressed on this particular bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota what is the status of the bill to which he has just referred?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is on the calendar.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is that bill for the benefit of the Spanish-American War veterans?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is entirely for their benefit; it pertains exclusively to the soldiers of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not read that bill, but may I ask the Senator if it contains any provision relative to the loss of limbs by soldiers?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; there is no provision in the bill relating to the loss of limbs by soldiers, but an amendment can be applied to that particular bill just as well as it can be added to the pending bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But in order to make an amendment apply to that bill there would have to be a whole section added to it, such as the one which is included in this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, it is just as easy to add a whole section as it is to change a word. The only question is as to where the provision properly belongs, and I think it properly belongs to the bill relating to the Spanish War soldiers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harrison	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Ball	Henderson	McKellar	Smoot
Calder	Hitchcock	McNary	Spencer
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Comer	Kellogg	Nugent	Swanson
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Thomas
Dial	Keyes	Page	Townsend
Dillingham	King	Phipps	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Reed	Underwood
Gerry	Knox	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Gronna	Lenroot	Simmons	Warren
Harris	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask if any other Senator wishes to speak on the pending bill at this time? One of the Senators has notified me that he desires to speak on the bill in the morning for a brief period, and if no other Senator wishes to speak on it this afternoon I will ask that the bill may go over until to-morrow, when I will call it up at the close of the morning business. In the meantime, the Senator from Washington can call up the river and harbor bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the pending bill, which has been under consideration, will be passed over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suggest the absence of a quorum, unless the Chair holds that the presence of a quorum has already been determined.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to rule that within two minutes of the appearance of a quorum it is not in order to call the roll for a quorum, but after the lapse of any reasonable time the Chair holds it might be called.

Mr. McCUMBER. I withdraw the suggestion.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

St. Jones River, Del.: The provisos attached to the items making appropriation for the improvement of St. Jones River, Del., in the river and harbor acts of June 25, 1910, and February 27, 1911, are hereby modified to read as follows: "Provided, That no part of said amount shall be expended for the excavation of any cut-off until a satisfactory title to the land required for that cut-off shall have been transferred to the United States, free of cost."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my recollection is that the Senator from Delaware was to have a conference with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] with respect to the amendment. I should like to ask whether the matter of difference between the Senator from Delaware and the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has been adjusted so that the amendment may be disposed of?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I have nothing to say on the amendment. I regret that the senior Senator from Utah is not present at this moment. I conversed with him for a little time this morning, and he said to me that he was obliged to leave to keep an engagement. I said I would see him later and discuss the question further, but he replied that in case I should not do so, he would make no objection, or something to that effect. So that I am quite sure, from the way he talked, that the senior Senator from Utah no longer has any objection to the amendment, although I wish he were here that he might state his position for himself.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator that we take a vote on the amendment, and if upon the return to the Chamber of the senior Senator from Utah he desires to reconsider the action taken, a motion to reconsider may be accepted as a matter of course.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the question be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be known as section 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. That as to the lands investigated, surveyed, or reported on under authority of a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, a full report of which is set out in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and wherein the recommendation is made that the title to said lands be acquired by the United States for their use in river improvement, the owners thereof may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to ascertain the value of said lands before their damage or destruction, and said court shall render judgment therefor: Provided, however, That in the trial of said suits said court shall permit any party who at any time since the damage or destruction of such lands owned or held title thereto or any interest therein, and who has become dispossessed thereof by reason of foreclosure proceedings, or otherwise compelled to sacrifice title thereto as a result of said injuries to appear as a party claimant by filing petition setting up their former interest therein, and said court shall consider the claims of all of said parties and render judgment for whatever amount said court considers equitably or justly due the respective parties.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this amendment was put on the river and harbor bill some years ago at the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I think myself it is a very serious matter, and I am not willing to accept it. I am willing to have the Senator from Mississippi present the facts with reference to it, and let the Senate pass upon it.

I will say that so far as I have been able to look up the matter, it involves the adjudication of claims for lands which the engineers recommend should be taken in connection with the Mississippi River levee improvement, and so forth, that in 1912 I think it was estimated would cost something over $6,000,000. How much the cost will be at this time I do not know.

I am willing to have the Senator present the matter to the Senate, but I do not feel that I can accept the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is an amendment, known as the Williams amendment, that was adopted by the Senate during the consideration of the river and harbor bill last year, and I am requested by my colleague to offer it in his absence.

Some years ago levees were constructed on the western side of the Mississippi River. On the eastern side there was a ridge practically in the form of a levee that protected the people behind that ridge; but along the route of the ridge on the eastern bank of the Mississippi there were openings where people had long lived and cultivated their crops. When the levee on the western side of the river was constructed, it threw the waters in times of overflow and high waters on the eastern side through these openings in this natural ridge and destroyed the property of these people.

It does not amount to a great deal, and so back some years ago, I think in 1912, this whole matter was referred by an act of Congress to the Army Board of Engineers to make an investigation, with their recommendations as to the damage and what Congress should do, and in their report they made their findings, with the suggestion that the matter go to the Court of Claims, and so forth. Therefore I have offered this amendment, which merely allows these people who have been damaged through the building of this levee on the western bank of the Mississippi River a day in court, so that they might file their claims with the Court of Claims and let the matter be heard there.

It seems to me that it is a very just matter. No opposition has been raised in the Senate before, I think, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, as I recollect, this amendment was adopted at one time by the Senate, but was never recommended by the Commerce Committee. I do not think it was ever considered by the Commerce Committee. As I recollect, it was put upon the bill as an amendment very late one evening upon the floor. If I am wrong about that, I should be very glad to be corrected; but certainly a matter of this importance, involving several million dollars, particularly in view of the present condition of the Treasury, ought not to be put on this bill in this way. At least, the Committee on Commerce should fully consider it; and it was never even presented, I think, to the committee in connection with this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. I ask purely for information. Is there anything in the record that would imply either a legal or a moral obligation on the part of the Government?

Mr. LENROOT. Absolutely nothing that I know of. It is merely a recommendation, as I understand, upon the part of the engineers, that this property be acquired. Congress is under no obligation, as I understand, to acquire the property.

Mr. KING. Are there any paramount utilitarian reasons that would warrant the acquisition of these lands by the Government?

Mr. LENROOT. None that I am aware of; but I will say to the Senator that I am not aware that any committee of Congress has ever investigated the merits of this question.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, here is the act of Congress which authorized this investigation. I find it in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session:

> WAR DEPARTMENT,
> OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS.
> Washington, November 30, 1912.
> From: The Chief of Engineers.
> To: The Secretary of War.
> Subject: Mississippi River east bank surveys.
> 1. There is submitted herewith, for transmission to Congress, report dated October 26, 1912, by the Mississippi River Commission, made in pursuance of the following provision in the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912:
>
> "The Mississippi River Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make an examination and survey of all the lands, subject to overflow from the Mississippi River, situate on the east bank of the river between Brunswick, Warren County, Miss., and Baton Rouge, La., and between Bessie, Lake County, Tenn., and Memphis, Tenn., for the purpose of ascertaining the location, quantity, character, and value of such lands, and for the purpose of ascertaining what portions of such lands, if any, it would be advisable to protect from overflow by levee construction, and the cost of such construction, and for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of acquiring such portions of said lands as it would not be advisable to protect from overflow by levee protection. The commission is further directed to prepare topographic maps of the lands so examined and surveyed, and to make its report on such examination and survey, with its recommendation thereon, to the Chief of Engineers before the 1st of November, 1912, and the Chief of Engineers shall transmit the said report to Congress on or before the first Monday of December, 1912. The sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of making and reporting the foregoing prescribed examination and survey."
> 2. Attention is invited to the provision requiring that this report should be submitted on or before the 1st Monday in December, 1912.
>
> H. TAYLOR,
> Lieut. Col., Corps of Engineers,
> Acting Chief of Engineers.

Then the report follows.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to say that I did not mean to be understood as saying that Congress had never authorized the investigation.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand.

Mr. LENROOT. But that, so far as I was aware, no committee of Congress has ever acted upon that matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is right in saying that the committee had not acted on it. This matter was brought up during the consideration of the bill last time, as I stated, by my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS], and there was some discussion at that time about it. He explained it briefly, as I have tried to explain it at this time. Although he had introduced his bill, and it was pending before the Commerce Committee of the Senate, I do not think they had had a hearing on the proposition.

These lands that are in dispute were overflowed by the Mississippi River, not at the instance of these individual owners at all. They had acquired them. They had lived there peacefully for years. They had not been overflowed by the Mississippi River. They could cultivate their crops, their children could go to school, they could have their schools and their churches there. They were not affected in the slightest by the overflow; but when it became necessary for the levee on the western bank to be constructed, naturally that raised the water and threw it back on these people.

It is not a large amount, and it would seem to me that since this happened away back yonder—this report has been filed since 1912—they should be permitted at least to go into the Court of Claims and present the matter, and let the court pass upon it. That is all that my amendment proposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this amendment apparently commits the Government to the payment of any judgment that the court may find. It says:

> The owners thereof may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to ascertain the value of said lands before their damage or destruction, and said court shall render judgment therefor.

There does not seem to be any question left for the court to determine as to the liability of the United States, but simply the question of ascertaining the amount of damage, and rendering judgment therefor. It does not seem to me, even if Congress should do anything with reference to this matter, that we should pass a provision of that character. It does seem to me that there ought to be some determination as to the liability of the United States for this damage.

I have not had an opportunity to look over this report. I find, however, that it closes in this way:

> In view of recent sales of lands in the basins, and prices that have been quoted from time to time, it is the opinion of the commission that an estimated value of $10 per acre may be regarded as the average price at which the lands whose protection is impracticable can be acquired. The total cost of such acquisition on that basis would amount to $6,226,210.

In other words, there seem to be about 622,000 acres of land involved, whose value was estimated in 1912 at $10 an acre. We have no idea as to what it is estimated at now. It might be $20 or $30 an acre, so that the claim might amount to thirteen or eighteen or twenty million dollars. This seems to be for lands that can not be protected from overflow by reason of the erection of levees. These levees on the Mississippi River are constructed primarily for the purpose of protecting the lands from overflow. In other words, they are constructed primarily for the especial benefit of the people whose lands are adjacent to the river. Of course, navigation is important. My recollection is that where the Government has appropriated $1, the people there have been required to put up, I think, $2, showing that the main thing to be accomplished by these levees—I think that is plain to everybody—is the protection of the lands from overflow.

It appears that here are some lands that can not be protected locally from overflow, and therefore, in the construction of these levees, the water is backed up over these lands. It seems to me that the Government ought not to have to stand all of the damage. The Government ought not to be liable for all of the damages, if damages are to be paid for. This damage should be taken care of, it strikes me, in proportion, at any rate, to the interests that are benefited by the construction of the levees. That is a matter that ought to be gone into, I think, very carefully before Congress passes a provision under which a court is to fix the judgment that is to bind the Government.

As the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested, this matter has not been considered by the committee. It was not presented to the committee, at any rate at this time, and I think it would be very unwise to force the provision on the bill, especially in the form in which it is now proposed.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, he understands that the levees, when constructed, are not constructed at the instance of people who have been damaged, because these people were in Mississippi, and the levees were constructed in Louisiana, on the western side of the river.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is probably true; but there ought to be some way by which the interests which were really protected by the construction of the levees should be responsible for a part of the damage. It does not seem to me that the United States ought to bear all of it, if it bears any part of it.

Mr. HARRISON. If this whole matter is referred to the Court of Claims, the Court of Claims will consider all those propositions, and any damage which the United States might be held liable for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think not; under the Senator's amendment, anyhow. The amendment reads:

That as to the lands investigated, surveyed, or reported on under authority of a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, a full report of which is set out in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and wherein the recommendation is made that the title to said lands be acquired by the United States for their use in river improvement, the owners thereof may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to ascertain the value of said lands before their damage or destruction, and said court shall render judgment therefor.

The only question to be submitted to the court is the value of the land.

Mr. HARRISON. These people have been held out of the money a long time. I do not know how they will ever get their money unless we can legislate in some way regarding the matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know that anybody is to blame for not having the matter brought to the attention of the committee and giving the committee an opportunity to investigate it and get all of the facts, and see what form a provision should take, if it was deemed wise to have a provision inserted. But the matter was not called to the attention of the committee, and the committee has not given it any consideration at all, at least at this session.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think the Commerce Committee had any hearings.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Commerce Committee had no hearings with reference to the river and harbor bill, except the engineers.

Mr. HARRISON. I so understood, because there were several matters I wanted to bring to the attention of the committee if it held hearings. I very much hope the amendment will be agreed to, and that it may be allowed to go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	New	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Nugent	Thomas
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Townsend
Dial	King	Ransdell	Trammell
Dillingham	Knox	Reed	Underwood
Gerry	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Gronna	Lodge	Simmons	Watson
Harris	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Harrison	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Henderson	McNary	Smoot
Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Spencer

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HALE and Mr. PITTMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. PAGE, Mr. CALDER, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WARREN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. That as to the lands investigated, surveyed, or reported on under authority of a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, a full report of which is set out in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and wherein the recommendation is made that the title to said lands be acquired by the United States for their use in river improvement, the owners thereof may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to ascertain the value of said lands before their damage or destruction, and said court shall render judgment therefor: Provided, however, That in the trial of said suits said court shall permit any party who at any time since the damage or destruction of such lands owned or held title thereto or any interest therein, and who has become dispossessed thereof by reason of foreclosure proceedings, or otherwise compelled to sacrifice title thereto as a result of said injuries to appear as a party claimant by filing petition setting up their former interest therein, and said court shall consider the claims of all of said parties and render judgment for whatever amount said court considers equitably or justly due the respective parties.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have a modification to suggest, because of the criticism of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. Has the Senator any objection to letting the amendment go over, in the hope that we may be able to get together on something that will be agreeable to him?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Senator can withdraw his amendment, and then offer it later.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is withdrawn. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is a committee amendment which has not been acted upon.

Mr. REED. The first committee amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; the committee amendment to strike out $12,000,000" and to insert "$20,000,000." I understood the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] had offered an amendment to raise the amount to $24,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I have offered an amendment to the committee amendment to raise it to $24,000,000.

Mr. REED. I wish the Senator would make his amendment to the amendment read $27,000,000 instead of $24,000,000. I could offer such an amendment, but under the parliamentary situation the pending amendment is an amendment to an amendment, and I would be barred from the opportunity of offering such an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator that, of course, if the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is defeated, then he could offer his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; but after you have defeated a $24,000,000 amendment there would be a good chance to pass a $27,000,000 amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just wanted to suggest that that course is possible.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Mississippi be willing to withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. It is perfectly agreeable to me, because of the parliamentary status, to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator from Mississippi, and I am much obliged to the chairman of the committee. I move to make it "$27,000,000" instead of "$24,000,000," as proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

[Mr. REED addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

On the conclusion of his speech,

Mr. REED said: Mr. President, I decline, of course, to go on under these circumstances. There are actually in the Chamber now five Senators. One of them is the chairman of the committee. Another is my colleague [Mr. SPENCER], and I know how he is going to vote. I refuse to be the chief actor in the prolongation of this particular farce, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the Senate adjourn.

On a division, the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Missouri whether he is going to proceed further to-night?

Mr. REED. Why, certainly I am not going to proceed further in the absence of the Senate. I do not think the chairman of the committee or anyone else has any right to ask the Senate to proceed under these circumstances. If the chairman is going to go on with this bill, he ought to get a quorum here, or he ought to allow us to adjourn.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to say that I am not any more enamored of talking to empty benches on a proposition of this kind than is the Senator from Missouri. There are a few facts that I had intended to call to the attention of the Senate, but I would rather undertake to persuade Senators to my way of belief than empty seats. I had some experience along this line several weeks ago, when a bill was before the Senate which provided for the inauguration of a plan involving an expenditure of over a billion and a half of dollars. I do not like it myself.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator likes it just as much as I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not complaining of the Senator from Washington, because he is one of the Senators who conceives it to be his duty to stay on the job.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there is any way by which we can get Senators here, I am perfectly willing to adopt it; and if the Senator will just make the suggestion we will do our best to get them here.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been informed that there is a greater attraction elsewhere this afternoon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am perfectly willing to have the Sergeant at Arms go to that attraction and bring the Senators here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that as a motion?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No. If Senators desire to have a quorum here, it can be procured.

Mr. POMERENE. I think under the circumstances I shall renew my motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate adjourn.

On a division, the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Spencer
Ball	Kellogg	New	Sterling
Brandegee	Kendrick	Overman	Swanson
Calder	Keyes	Page	Thomas
Capper	King	Phelan	Trammell
Chamberlain	Knox	Ransdell	Underwood
Comer	Lenroot	Reed	Warren
Curtis	Lodge	Sheppard
Dillingham	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Hale	McNary	Smoot

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is absent on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-seven Senators having answered to the roll call, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MOSES, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina entered the Chamber and answered to their names when called.

Mr. KIRBY, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. MYERS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators only having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is not present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. WOLCOTT entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. I submit the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on a certain amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Bureau of Efficiency, together with its books, papers, and records, furniture, equipment, and supplies, is hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of Congress; and its officers and employees are transferred in their present status without reappointment. The Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall hereafter be appointed jointly by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and may be removed from office by them. All other employees of the bureau, including a disbursing officer for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the bureau, shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. The Bureau of Efficiency is authorized to investigate any matters relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government whenever directed by either House of Congress or requested by the heads of such services and shall from time to time submit to Congress reports of its investigations with recommendations looking to greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of the public business. It shall make such special investigations and reports as may be required by either House of Congress or by any committee or subcommittee thereof of either House having jurisdiction over appropriations, or expenditures. Administrative officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of its duties, and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 53, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate recede from its amendment. There is but one amendment in controversy.

Mr. POMERENE. Let us know what that amendment proposes.

Mr. THOMAS. What is the amendment in controversy?

Mr. WARREN. It is the amendment relating to the Bureau of Efficiency. The House will not join us in caring for that as we wish to now, but expect us, and desire us for that matter, to cover it in some substantial way in the budget bill. The House Members seem to fear that to put it in the appropriation bill might leave us negligent in regard to the budget bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What division is that?

Mr. SMOOT. When the legislative appropriation bill was before the Senate I offered an amendment transferring the Bureau of Efficiency to the jurisdiction of Congress, so that Congress could have some agency whereby it could investigate estimates made by the different departments as to whether they were really needed or not. The House objects to this amendment and gives as a reason why that the budget bill is to be acted upon by the Senate in a very few days, and they want this provision or a similar one incorporated in the budget bill and made even stronger than the Senate amendment in the legislative apppropriation bill.

I took the position that it was very easy, if such a provision was incorporated in the budget bill, to repeal that part of the appropriation bill transferring the Bureau of Efficiency to the jurisdiction of Congress, but I am quite sure there was a feeling in the House that the budget bill might not pass at this session of Congress, and felt if this amendment was taken out of the legislative appropriation bill it would be an incentive on the part of the Senate to pass the budget bill, including the amendment.

I make that statement with no hesitancy from statements that I have had made to me by Members of the House.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I very much regret that the Senate conferees have receded from this amendment. I do not know, of course, what influence this action will have upon the House, and I have no observation to make, but the defeat of the amendment will result in preventing some Senators from getting certain information which they may want.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to be perfectly frank and say that every one of the House conferees on the legislative appropriation bill wanted to retain the provision in that bill, but the vote in the House was to the effect that the House desired to have it eliminated.

To the Senator from Ohio I wish to say that the general practice in the past has been that wherever a legislative item is put in an appropriation bill by the Senate and there is a disagreement between the two Houses, and the House, in which the bill originated, positively refuses to agree to the Senate amendment, the Senate generally recedes.

Mr. WARREN. May I say that that is especially the case where it is a matter of distinct legislation? Of course, we had it in conference the second time, and the House in the meantime had voted very largely against it. There is but one way to arrive at the composing of differences on appropriation bills in conference, and that is to follow certain, perhaps unwritten rules, but good rules nevertheless; and those rules are that if the House transgresses in putting in new legislation and we will not submit to it, they must eventually take it out; and, on the other hand, if we add legislation of that kind, under similar circumstances, and the House will not consent, we must take it out in order to arrive at a final conclusion.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] if the House voted against the acceptance of the amendment before the conferees had acted, or if they instructed their members of the conference committee not to agree to the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. The House members of the conference were virtually instructed not to agree to amendment No. 53 before a conference was held. Following that there was a vote taken upon it by the House, and it disagreed to the amendment and sent the conference report back for a further conference. A further conference was held, and at that conference the conferees on the part of the House reported back to the House the same provision, modified along the lines suggested by the Secretary of War, making but few changes in the wording of the provision agreed to by the Senate, and that was taken back to the House and the House disagreed to it.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a fact, is it not, that the budget bill, so called, has not yet been reported and placed on the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. It is on the calendar now.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it also on the calendar of bills reported to the House?

Mr. SMOOT. It has passed the House.

Mr. WARREN. It passed the House some 10 days ago.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate committee struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted a new budget plan. I think we can accomplish the same purpose by adding this provision to the budget bill.

I want to say frankly that my whole object in offering the amendment to the legislative appropriation bill was to save the Government of the United States not a million dollars, not $50,000,000, but hundreds of millions of dollars within the next few years. The fact is that estimates are made up by the departments of the Government and Congress is asked to appropriate money based upon those estimates, and when the Appropriation Committees of the House and Senate ask for any information as to why such estimates should be appropriated for, the same men who make up the estimates come before the committees and give them the only information obtainable.

Everybody knows that the members of the Appropriations Committee can not go into an investigation of all estimates submitted. The object of the provision in the legislative appropriation bill was to transfer the Bureau of Efficiency to the control of Congress, and let it direct the Bureau of Efficiency to make investigations as to whether the estimates for appropriations were too high. That was the object of the legislation. I am told by Members of the House that they are in favor of the plan, but thought if we included it in the legislative appropriation bill and then put a similar provision in the budget bill, it would appear like we were acting on legislation one day and repealing it the next day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask if it is intended that the different departments are to report to the Efficiency Bureau, and they are to make an investigation?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Efficiency Bureau has nothing whatever to do with any investigation unless the Commitee on Appropriations of the House or the Senate ask them to make investigation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Whenever the estimates are sent in from the department and there is any question, they are referred to the Bureau of Efficiency?

Mr. SMOOT. We ask the Bureau of Efficiency to make an investigation and report to Congress. They are responsible to Congress, and they are to report to Congress. Nobody can remove them unless they are removed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Do I understand that the Bureau of Efficiency, during the session of Congress and during a recess, familiarize themselves with the workings of the different departments?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Congress directs them to do so. If the Congress of the United States asks them to make an investigation of the duplication of work in the different departments of the Government, they make that investigation and report to Congress.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is one of the objects I had in view, because there has been so much complaint of duplication of work, and there is doubtless a very wasteful duplication in the different departments. I was wondering if the Bureau of Efficiency would have jurisdiction over that question or, at least, a recommending power as to how we might iron out those difficulties.

Mr. SMOOT. The Congress had jurisdiction, and has it now, but they would use the agency of the Efficiency Board to get the information. That is all that was contemplated by the amendment.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask my colleague if he intends to support the motion to recede? So far as I am concerned, I think if the provision is so meritorious we ought not to recede.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that under the circumstances I think it is best to recede. I have not, and I do not think any Senator has, any pride in how the legislation is secured. If the House wants it upon the budget bill, well and good; let it go there.

Mr. OVERMAN. The House defeated it twice. Why send it back again? They will defeat it the third time. If we can put it on the budget bill, we can possibly get it through.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and we have to have this appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I give in a few words the history of this matter, which was put in with, I think, the unanimous desire of the committee on the part of the Senate? The House rule is different from ours. In order to have a bill go to conference it has to be taken from the table by unanimous consent, and when that was asked for, in this case, some Members of the House expressed a desire that it might not be agreed to until it was brought back to the House for further examination and information. The House committee therefore felt bound to take it back. They were not instructed, as they sometimes are regarding an item, to repudiate it entirely. But they were instructed to bring it back.

As my colleague on the committee has said, the conferees on the other side were willing, with the amendments that were offered and agreed to, to stand by it. I do not think the matter of the budget bill was discussed very much on the floor, but it had been discussed in committee and had been talked about in the lobbies, and the conferees who worked with us were full of the idea.

Mr. SMOOT. It was referred to on the floor also.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; to some extent.

My idea, from what I have seen, from what I have read of the discussion on the floor, which was not so very extensive, and from the spirit of these men—and I have talked also to the chairman of the House committee, who was not a member of the conference—is that they agree that something ought to be done; and, in case of the failure of the passage of a budget bill, which they do not contemplate, or if the matter is not cared for in such a measure, I believe it can be provided for at some later time. However, now does not appear to be the appropriate time to press this matter further; in fact, it would avail us nothing to do so. Therefore I ask that the Senate recede from the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is to be regretted that no legislation will be enacted during the present session of Congress to promote efficiency and economy in the executive branches of the Government. It has been obvious for a long time to those who are familiar with executive departments, bureaus, and agencies of the Government that radical changes and important reforms were imperatively needed. The departments as a rule are operating under laws enacted years ago. Changed conditions have not brought modifications and changes in the statutes and regulations controlling executive officials. There should be a complete overhauling of the executive departments of the Government. There should be numerous transfers of bureaus and executive activities from the departments now controlling them to other departments. Under some departments there are executive agencies whose duties are entirely inconsistent with the purpose of the department which controls them. Duplication of work is found in every executive department of the Government. Inefficiency, waste, and extravagance have characterized the executive departments for 50 years. Needed reforms, reforms recognized as desirable, have not been made. Within some of the departments there are reactionary forces and elements which oppose efficiency and progress. There is a devotion by many of the employees of the Government to obsolete, defective, and absurd regulations and policies for which no defense can be offered.

I have given some little attention to the work of the executive departments of the Government and have conferred with hundreds of the employees therein. A great many splendid and progressive men and women holding positions in the departments have voluntarily come to see me and to protest against the extravagance and waste and inefficiency and duplication which are found within these departments. I know of bright young men and women who have severed their relations with the Government service because of the improper administrative methods and the fact that for weeks and months they had but little to do. My attention has been repeatedly called to the jealousies and contentions upon the part of the officials within departments and the disinclination of heads of bureaus and executive branches to work economies and bring about proper and legitimate and authorized reforms. It is a matter of common knowledge that there has been a determination upon the part of many holding positions of trust and responsibility in the departments to keep as many employees as possible. The war more than doubled the number of Federal employees within the District and it materially increased the number of employees of the Government in all parts of the country. It was understood that thousands and tens of thousands of employees should be separated from the service when the war ended, because there would be no necessity of longer retaining them. But months have gone by and there are still thousands of employees retained in the Government service who should have been released and returned to their homes long ago. There are within the Government service thousands of the finest men and women that can be found in our country. They deplore the duplication of work, the incompetency of officials and employees, the waste and extravagance and inefficiency. They have pride in their work and are ambitious to effectuate reforms and are sincerely desirous of faithfully serving their country.

Many of this class have conferred with me and have detailed numerous instances of the indefensible methods employed and policies adhered to in executive branches of the Government. The civil-service law and its administration have proven a shield and protection to inefficients and defectives and to the unambitious and those who were satisfied if they only could hold their positions. I have conferred with a number of men and women employed in the departments who have declared that when they sought to perform an honest day's work they would be remonstrated with by employees and urged to slacken their efforts because if they carried out their purposes and did their full duty it would result in the dismissal from the service of unnecessary employees. Other employees have protested because promotions too often were the result of long years of service rather than efficiency. Many Senators and Representatives during the past few years have denounced the conditions existing in the executive departments of the Government and have insisted that administrative reforms should be initiated, consolidations of agencies and bureaus brought about, and needed changes for the good of the service and the welfare of the people made. But Congress only has debated and criticized, and has failed to enact needed legislation.

Some time ago a bill was introduced having for its object the promotion of efficiency in executive departments, bureaus, boards, commissions, and agencies of the Federal Government. This bill was denounced by some employees and their agents. There is no question but what there are some who hold positions in the Government who are opposed to reform, to efficiency, and to economies. The bill to which I have just referred provided that the chief of the bureau should be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and that it should be the duty of the bureau over which the chief presided, in addition to the various duties imposed by law to "conduct a thorough and detailed examination of the personnel requirements of the various departments and department offices, to ascertain whether and to what extent any such department or department office has too large or too small a number of employees to enable it to perform its duties properly, and to determine what employees, if any, are so unfit or inefficient as to warrant their discharge or transfer to other duties."

It is not my purpose to discuss the bill or its provisions. The amendment which was offered to the measure now before us and which the conference committee has not accepted, was calculated, in my opinion, to promote efficiency, and it is to be regretted that the amendment or some other adequate provision was not accepted by the conferees. As I understand, the contention is that the Budget Committee, which is now considering important legislation, will deal with this subject.

Mr. President, members of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate as well as other Senators have repeatedly stated that there are thousands of Federal employees within the District of Columbia who should be separated from the service. I do not understand why, in view of the position of Senators, that they should continue to make appropriations providing for these unnecessary employees.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was not present, I think, when the legislative bill was under consideration. That bill provides for many less clerks than have hitherto been provided for; in fact, it made a greater reduction than was ever known in a similar bill. We are moving in that direction. Of course, this bill does not do away with the work of the Bureau of Efficiency. The proposal was to place that bureau entirely in the hands of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement made by the Senator from Wyoming, and understand the matter in controversy. I submit most respectfully, however, that efficiency and economy will be promoted if legislation shall be enacted creating a bureau, board, or commission responsible to the legislative branch of the Government. The present Bureau of Efficiency is hampered and has been obstructed in some instances in its efforts. It is an executive agency, not a legislative one. It is inferior in power and strength and in the number of its employees to the departments and to many of the bureaus and executive agencies of the Government. Some bureau chiefs and other employees of the Government resent any investigation as to their work by this or other executive agencies. There should not be, however, any such mental attitude upon the part of executive boards or agencies. There should be a hearty cooperation in promoting the public welfare and in securing reforms and the highest degree of efficiency and economy.

Unfortunately there has grown up a spirit in some branches of executive departments that is intolerant of any control or direction by the legislative branch of the Government. It is the history of all executive departments of all governments that they tend to crystallization, to bureaucratic and autocratic methods, to stagnation, and deadly and destructive monotony. Senators and Congressmen are almost daily confronted with evidences of departmental tyranny. Bureaus and executive agencies become static and immobile. They resist progressive measures and rational and needed reforms. There is a tendency to increase authority and to extend their powers and jurisdiction even to the extent of violating law and encroaching upon other branches of the Government. There are many executive officials who will resent any control by Congress of executive departments. They want to enact the laws, fix their own compensation, and determine their authority, jurisdiction, and power. Organized for a particular purpose, some executive agencies seek to expand and to usurp authority and power. It is not a question of partisanship that determines the conduct of those pursuing the course suggested. The party affiliations of employees, generally speaking, do not bring diversity of views in respect to authority and power and importance of executive officials and Federal executive agencies.

Mr. President, let me say in passing that in most countries of the world to-day the legislative branches of the government are the ones which speak the voice of the people. As liberalism and democracy spread throughout the world and legislative power is enlarged the executive authority is diminished. But it seems that in this Republic the executive agencies of the Government are assuming larger powers, usurping authority, encroaching upon the legislative branch of the Government, and attempting to establish a tyrannous and deadly bureaucracy and a dangerous and destructive paternalism. In Great Britain the executive power is shrinking and the authority of the House of Commons is increasing. As the people speak so Parliament acts, and its decrees bind the nation. Here executive departments and agencies seek to dominate Congress, dictate legislation, and control the functions and policies of the Republic. With the most brazen effrontery executive officers carry on extensive propaganda throughout the United States in the interests of legislation or policies which they think will promote their interests or aggrandize their organization.

Mr. President, I would condemn in my own party as I would in the Republican Party executive inefficiency or usurpation upon the part of executive officials. I might add, facetiously, that the Democratic Party knows better and it deserves more severe condemnation than would be bestowed upon the Republican Party. The Democratic Party is professedly the party of economy, the party of progress, of reform, of efficiency in its administrative policies; in a word, the Democratic Party calls for the highest efficiency and an economical administration of all public affairs. I believe, Mr. President, that if a law were passed creating an efficiency and economy bureau responsive to Congress its work would be productive of the highest good and result in an annual saving of tens of millions of dollars to the Government. I sincerely hope that at an early date this important subject will be considered by Congress and that suitable legislation will be enacted that will effectuate administrative reforms and coordinate and integrate Federal agencies of the Government and bring about economies in all branches of the public service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wyoming that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 53.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11892) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SWANSON. The river and harbor bill being now under consideration, I desire to offer an amendment to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is an amendment now pending.

Mr. SWANSON. Then I will ask that amendment may be considered after the pending amendment is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "$20,000,000" and insert "$27,000,000."

Mr. KING. I rise to inquire is that the total, or is it proposed to add another section to the bill carrying the amount indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The total amount carried by the bill, the Chair is advised, is $20,000,000. The amendment to the amendment proposes to increase the total to the amount stated by the Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee amendment has not been acted upon by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. I suggest that it might be wise to defer voting on the total until we have passed upon all the amendments.

Mr. REED. As I understand, all the amendments have been passed upon.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator from Virginia desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present at this time an amendment providing for a survey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts presents an amendment, which will lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. It simply provides for a survey, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the amendment presented by him be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, after line 1, it is proposed to insert:

Boston Harbor, Mass.: South Bay from point of Fort Point Channel, Federal Street Bridge, to Massachusetts Avenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment which I send to the desk. It merely provides for the survey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of an amendment similar in character to that just agreed to. Is there any objection?

Mr. POMERENE. I will reserve an objection until I hear what the amendment is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, between lines 22 and 23, it is proposed to insert "Warwick River, Va."

Mr. POMERENE. I object to that.

Mr. SWANSON. It merely provides for a survey.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand it merely provides for a survey, but there is a survey item on page 5, above where it is proposed that the amendment just offered shall come in, the action on which I desire to have reconsidered before we get through with this matter. I do not know anything about this proposition, but while I am on the subject I may say——

Mr. SMOOT. The river for which the Senator from Virginia desires a survey was discovered last week, was it not?

Mr. SWANSON. It is as important as any. Is the Senator from Ohio going to object to all survey items?

Mr. POMERENE. No, sir; but I am going to object to the one I have indicated until I know something more about it. I desire to make an observation in regard to one which was provided for here the other day, and I might just as well do so now. On page 5 there appears this amendment, proposed by the committee:

Northwest River, Va.-N. C.: With a view to securing a channel 6½ feet deep at mean low water, and 50 feet wide on the bottom on the bar at the mouth and over the shoal 2 miles above the mouth.

Do I understand that that amendment has been adopted?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has been adopted.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered.

Mr. SWANSON. I object.

Mr. SMOOT. I will suggest to the Senator from Ohio that when the bill gets into the Senate we can at least have a vote upon it.

Mr. POMERENE. There is a pending amendment, and, therefore, the motion to reconsider would probably not now be in order. I am going to ask, however, although I am afraid I may not be here, because of an engagement I have elsewhere, to reserve a vote upon this amendment in the Senate. Personally I have no information about this matter, but I have some information which I believe to be thoroughly reliable, and I think it is proper that I bring it to the attention of the Senate at the present time, so that if I am misinformed about it those who are interested will have a right to present that evidence to the Senate.

This on its face appears to be a survey for a navigable stream. My information about it is that it is not a navigable stream; that it never can be made a navigable stream; and that the project is one of private interest alone. If I am misinformed about that, those who were instrumental in having it brought here will have an opportunity to correct me; and I want to ask the Senator from Washington, at whose instance it was presented.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I introduced the amendment, and I should like the Senator to furnish me the information to which he has referred, so that I can send it to the people at home in order that they may reply to it.

Mr. POMERENE. I am just about to do that, and I want to say in advance that I acquit the Senator from Virginia of having any improper purpose in mind when this amendment was presented; but if my information is correct he has been grossly deceived.

The other day a gentleman came to my office and asked to see me. I had met him once before. He is a business man. His name is Mr. John Seip, of Chillicothe, Ohio. He brought to me a map of conditions in Virginia in this locality, and this particular amendment relates to a tract of swamp land containing 25,000 acres. Mr. John Seip some years ago had a part interest in it. It is now owned in part, if not entirely owned, by a gentleman from Camden, N. J. The fall of this little streamlet—it is not a river—is such that it would be absolutely impossible to make it navigable by an ordinary scow. Mr. John Seip tells me that he has no interest whatsoever in this land. He owns to the south of it, and some distance from it, 10,000 acres of similar swamp land. He bought it as an investment. He is draining it, improving it, and selling it out as a private enterprise; but it is no more a private enterprise than is the 25,000-acre tract owned by this New Jersey gentleman.

I asked Mr. Seip if he would be willing to put in writing the facts as he presented them to me. He said he would, and I have his written statement here, signed by himself. He tells me that he has no interest whatsoever in this legislation, save and except such as any other public-spirited citizen would have. And now, for the information of the Senate, I send this statement to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Mr. John Seip, of Chillicothe, Ohio, made the following statement:

The item on page 5 of H. R. 11892, Report No. 513, with reference to the dredging of Northwest River, in Virginia and North Carolina, to make a channel 6½ feet deep, 50-foot bottom, is intended altogether for the drainage of Pleasant Grove district in Norfolk County, Va., which is a private enterprise, and should be paid by private capital instead of at public expense.

The land in that district is a very rich black loam, and without drainage has no value, in fact, it is a liability as it lies. With the dredging out of Northwest River this land becomes exceedingly valuable for agricultural purposes.

The writer has no interest whatever in any land in that district, in fact, has no interest in any land in Virginia, but formerly owned a half interest in that portion of the land represented on the map as being owned by the Norva Land & Lumber Co. That land is now in the name of the Norfolk Farms Co., and is owned and controlled by David Baird, of Camden, N. J.

The river has no uses for navigation purposes; in fact, never has had and never can have. The river for the first 9 miles, running from west to east, has a fall too great ever to be used for navigation purposes.

Other property in that vicinity is being developed on a large scale at private expense, and all land embraced in the Pleasant Grove drainage district, amounting to about 25,000 acres, will be benefited by the dredging of the Northwest River and should be paid by the owners thereof.

JOHN SEIP.

APRIL 21, 1920.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this Northwest River, as I am informed, enters Tull Bay. It is due to those who are interested either to disprove these statements or to bring to the Senate such information as will justify this enterprise at public expense.

I want to repeat, I am satisfied that the Senator from Virginia knew nothing about these facts, if they are facts, and I believe them to be facts.

I think that is all I care to say on that subject at the present time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am not acquainted with this river. I ask the privilege of putting in the RECORD all the correspondence I had in connection with this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HICKORY, NORFOLK COUNTY, VA., March 26, 1920.

At a mass meeting held a Stewart's store, near Benefit, Norfolk County, at 10 a. m., March 26, 1920, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON, United States Senator from Virginia, is hereby requested to introduce an amendment to the rivers and harbors bill, if it is not too late, in effect as follows:

"SURVEY.

"Northwest River, Va.-N. C. From its mouth to as far upstream as the Norfolk Southern Railway bridge, so as to admit boats drawing 6½ feet of water and a width of not less than 45 feet.

"Resolved further, That Senators SIMMONS and OVERMAN of North Carolina be also requested to the same effect, and also that Hon. E. E. HOLLAND and JOHN H. SMALL be requested to look out for the matter in the House."

A. O. LYNCH, Secretary.

JNO. P. WALLACE, Jr., Chairman.

PORTSMOUTH, VA., March 26, 1920.

Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I attended a meeting as noted in the attached paper to-day and I was requested to forward it to you.

You will find that Senator Martin had an amendment passed as to the Northwest River survey in Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and also at second session, as to this stream a considerable distance up toward its source, but it was only recommended for approval as far upstream as the Norfolk Southern Railway bridge. While there has been two surveys and the Army Engineers' office has the data and could give an estimate of cost, the law requires, I am informed, that another survey will have to be authorized. I have before me House Document No. 198, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, which will give you all the information desired. Also there is another House document at second session, but I do not remember the number. However, the last report of the engineer was during war times, and the people concerned did not push the matter. But now, if it is not too late, the people in the southern part of Norfolk County would appreciate it if you would make an effort to amend the river and harbor bill. Instead of wording the amendment as stated in the attached resolution, I suggest that it would be better to word it as noted in the recommendation of Col. Jervey, Army Engineer, as follows in substance:

"Northwest River, Va.-N. C. Survey of bar at the mouth and of the shoal 2 miles above its mouth in order to determine the cost of dredging channel 6½ feet deep at mean low water and 50 feet wide on the bottom at these points for navigation," as you will see by his report the removal of the points mentioned will give navigation for 6½ feet to Norfolk Southern bridge.

The mouth of the Northwest River and some distance upstream is in North Carolina, but up in the vicinity of Northwest Railway Station is in Virginia, therefore it is suggested that the Members of the Senate in North Carolina and Mr. SMALL should be interested. Also attention of Mr. HOLLAND is called to this. I think Senator EDGE, if called to his attention, would assist you, as a friend of his—ex-Senator Baird, formerly Senator from New Jersey—owns a considerable acreage of land near this river some distance upstream. Senator Martin, I understand, when he got through the survey before had both of the New Jersey Senators to assist him.

If you will give this matter your attention I will thank you very much.

I am glad to see by the papers that Mrs. Swanson has improved in health.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

R. E. B. STEWART.

You will note that Hon. John G. Wallace, jr., member of house of delegates from Norfolk County, presided at the meeting.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise for information. Is an amendment pending, offered by the Senator from Virginia, to include this item in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is already in the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. It is already in the bill. I have reserved the right to take another vote upon that amendment when the bill comes into the Senate.

Is it the purpose of the Senator in charge of the bill to proceed further to-night? I intended to take up another subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 23, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, life of our life, spirit of our spirit, author of all good, our hearts go out in profound sympathy for the stricken people in the cyclone districts. Many are dead. More are injured and maimed for life.

Homes are destroyed. Hearts are broken. Their land is desolate. We thank Thee that loving hearts and helping hands have gone to the rescue. For what hurts one ,hurts all; what helps one, helps all, for Thou hast so bound us together in ties of kinship.

Increase our faith and confidence in the overruling of Thy providence for the eternal good of all.

That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That not one life shall be destroyed,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete.

In Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HON. CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from a New Orleans paper on Hon. CHAMP CLARK.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial concerning the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the New Orleans Item, Apr. 15, 1920.]

SPEAKER CHAMP CLARK THE STRONGEST NOMINEE FOR DEMOCRACY.

(By Marshall Ballard.)

Millions of Americans, regardless of party affiliation, felt at the time of the Baltimore convention that Speaker CHAMP CLARK was done a grave political injustice by being denied a nomination he had earned by his sweeping majorities in the primary voting and by his clear majorities in the convention itself.

The Speaker accepted the result of that convention as a philosopher, although political enemies, many of whom had betrayed both his friendship and their own pledges, immediately began trying to destroy any further public career for him. But he volunteered his immediate support to his victorious opponent, took the stump for him, and wrote letters to all Clark followers urging their loyal support of Wilson.

Ever a stanch and loyal party man, the Speaker accepted the situation with good grace, went about the work of building the party up, of holding it together, and of aiding in making it a proper vehicle for legislation on behalf of the people.

He differed openly from the administration on the Panama Canal tolls issue, a matter whereon he felt that the party's platform, mandate, and national interests dictated his course.

After the Baltimore convention friends had seriously urged on him that he accept a place on the Progressive ticket with Roosevelt, their idea being that as these two were personal friends, each with an immense personal following, they could therefore sweep the country.

Roosevelt had lost at Chicago and split his party. CLARK lost at Baltimore and loyally turned in to help save his party.

President Wilson was nominated on a one-term platform. As his first term neared its end Speaker CLARK'S friends wanted him to become a candidate for the nomination against Wilson. By that time many of the powerful politicians who had knifed or betrayed CLARK were at odds with Wilson. At a word of encouragement from Speaker CLARK, these men would have sought his nomination in the primaries.

The Speaker would not permit this. He felt that any such move would destroy any chance the President might have of reelection. Instead he pursued a course of loyal support of Wilson, sacrificed every possible moment of his time to the campaign, and aided as a factor in the reelection of the President.

War was impending when Mr. Wilson began his second term. The Democratic Party was in the minority in the House of Representatives. Such was the esteem in which the Speaker was held that he and his friends were able to muster a majority of the House in favor of a Democrat's candidacy and to organize the House for Democratic cooperation with the head of the Nation.

Following the declaration of war, the administration switched from a position against even the amount of military preparedness advocated by former Secretary of War Garrison to a position favoring conscription. Speaker CLARK took the view that armies could be gathered more quickly and organized more effectively on a volunteer basis. Many of his closest friends and advisers disagreed with this view, but the Speaker was convinced that he was right.

Having given his pledge to stand by his associates, he took the floor of the House and spoke against the pending conscription bill. He knew that in taking this stand he would concentrate violent and bitter criticism on himself.

His speech was suppressed, misrepresented, and garbled. Through these misquotations of the speech it was represented to the country as an attack on the President, on the war, and on the caliber of the armies which were to be formed under the universal service act. It is doubtful whether in the heat of war excitement one person in a hundred thousand who discussed the speech took the trouble to read its text.

The Speaker at the same time fought and helped kill the press-gag bill. No man ever led a fight for free speech under more trying circumstances.

Ambitious politicians, eager to curry favor with the administration by propaganda against the Speaker, later tried to defeat him for the minority leadership on the ground that they wanted House leadership that would be absolutely subservient to President Wilson. This move was made in the absence of the President from the country. It is not on record that it ever received encouragement from either the President or from anyone authorized to speak for him. For, contrary to propaganda constantly spread trying to make trouble between the President and the Democratic leader of the House, the relations between these two have been satisfactory. At any rate, Speaker CLARK'S friends cite the fact that the House and the Executive got along through these trying times equally as well as has the Senate and the Executive.

None of those friends maintain the theory that Congress should be without opinion and without expression or without difference with the Executive.

The function of a party leader in the House, whether his party is in the majority or the minority, is to keep the party together, to prevent needless friction with the executive branch of the Government, and to handle the legislation as effectively as possible in the interest of the country.

Strong men are not influenced unduly by patronage, politics, or friendship in the performance of their duties. Speaker CLARK, although the simplest and most unpretentious of men, has a high conception of the dignity and importance of the House of Representatives. He has been at all times unwilling to fall in with the conception that the duty of a party member is to vote, act, or follow blindly any influence other than that of his own conscience.

It is noteworthy that under his leadership the Democrats of the House have been largely harmonious and without bitter factions for the past 15 years.

In other words, with his lifetime of dealing with men, his long experience with legislation, and his own unquestioned reputation for judicial fair-mindedness, for conciliation and adjustment, he has been able to aid in the creation of real teamwork in his party in the House.

Although the Speaker despises the demagogue and demagoguery and is plain-spoken and blunt to a degree, and although he is without the small political and theatrical arts which are generally supposed to make for popularity, he has achieved an almost unique standing among the membership of the House with his own party; and although he is famed as a Democratic regular and party man, it is doubtful if any man who has occupied his position has been personally more highly respected and more popular with the Members of the opposition party.

That personal and political popularity extends in turn to the masses of the voters of the country.

Missouri, always a close State politically, has recently swung into the Republican column. Speaker CLARK'S district has been for years one of the closest politically in the State. Yet there, as everywhere he has contested for votes, the element of confidence exists among those who know him, who have followed his unremitting years of work, who know his record. In his own district he has pulled through many Republican landslides and shown strength enough to poll a safe majority of votes for over 20 years.

Just now Democratic political leaders are attempting to test the sentiment of the voters and to decide on a man who would make a successful campaign and who would satisfy the needs of the country as an executive.

There is a sober realization of the fact that in spite of the party's great and brilliant record in many particulars, there is a reaction against many things done and attempted. The most of these were rendered necessary by war. There is a desire for sane and substantial progress; there is a desire for economy running current with a desire for relief from many of the burdens and restrictions which war has placed on the business and life of the people.

Some Democrats diagnose the needs of the future as a need of a return to old-time Democratic simplicity in government. They do not feel that unknown and untried men, faddists, or innovators are desirable at the head of the Government during the next four years. They want a man who has performed long enough in the public service to be known. They want a candidate whose personality will harmonize with the party, add strength to it where it may be weak, and hold and consolidate the position it has gained through eight years of legislation, much of it radical and progressive. He must aid it in shaping up, pruning down, and improving that part of the legislation which has been created through the emergency of war. Much of this is no longer needed for the peace-time purposes of a peace-loving democracy.

Although it is customary for those who bring unknown or untried men out as candidates to surround them with an air of mystery and to attribute to them supernatural powers or qualifications, there are many to-day who believe that a known man would make the best appeal to the voters. Stunt doers, spectacular performers, and mystery men do not appeal as strongly as they did during the hysteria of war.

Contact with legislation and with legislators extending over a period of years enables a President to deal harmoniously with Congress. Many years of study of all the machinery employed by the Government and of all of its legislation enables a man to avoid mistakes and to accomplish results.

There is nothing theatrical or mysterious about Speaker CLARK. He is better known as a legislator and as a leader of a great element of his party than is any man in America. He has many friends and few enemies of a type who would do him harm before the voters of the country. As a candidate, as a vote getter for the Democratic Party, he is to-day the most logical choice for that party among those who seek its preferment and success at the polls.

The Newberry trial in Michigan was not needed to make the American people feel that enormous primary campaign expenditures are undesirable. Speaker CLARK in contesting for the Democratic nomination at Baltimore refused to allow his managers to seek campaign funds from those who might possibly seek legislation. Less than $50,000 in all was contributed to his campaign fund. The deficit he made up largely from his earnings as a writer and lecturer.

Over four times this amount was spent in behalf of President Wilson's campaign. All other candidates collected and spent far more than CLARK.

Had he been willing to leave his duties in Washington and the country, had he been willing to authorize his managers to seek the financial support of those moneyed men and great influences who furnish the material for campaigns, he would have been President of the United States for four if not eight years. No one can read the chapter on the Baltimore convention in his recently printed book without realizing this fact.

In spite of the many favorite sons' booms existing at present, and in spite of the great merits of many of those mentioned for the nomination, the cold fact remains that no one discussed to-day has the general eligibility for getting electoral votes for the party in November that ex-Speaker CLARK has.

The same qualities which made a great body of Democrats turn to him as their leader eight years ago have an even stronger appeal to-day, for he has shown in eight years of added party and patriotic service that he can serve as well as command and that he is neither elated in victory nor downcast in adversity.

Throughout these years the simple and rugged Americanism of the man has shown forth. The great interests which contribute gigantic campaign funds and propaganda bureaus in behalf of candidates have interests of an international character which is not common to the interests of the masses of the American people. In combination they can force nominations on political parties, but they can not force elections. As a rule they try to place a Republican President in office, but try to insure themselves by either nominating an impossible Democrat or by destroying the chances of nominating a Democrat of standing with the masses.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1353) for the relief of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 13387) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 12775) making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. NEW, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. THOMAS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2442. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church, by patent in fee, certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation; and

S. 806. An act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians against the United States.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 21 they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 11578. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BROWNING.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House set aside Sunday, May 16, 1920, for addresses on the life, character, and public services of the late Representative BROWNING.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that Sunday, May 16, be set apart for memorial exercises for his late colleague, Mr. BROWNING. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the time for these memorial services on Sundays ought to be fixed either at 10 o'clock in the morning or 2 o'clock in the afternoon, because when we meet at 12 o'clock it makes everybody late for dinner. If they began at 10 o'clock, we would be through before noon. I have nothing to present now on this subject, although I am going to introduce a rule, and I want to notify the House of that fact.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House at this time for one hour on the subject of financing the soldiers' bonus.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold that request until after I present a conference report on the legislative bill.

The SPEAKER. There is already a special order for to-day, that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] may address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. As soon as the business on the Speaker's table is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Then I ask that at the conclusion of his address I may address the House for one hour on the subject of financing the soldiers' bonus.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to object, but I shall have to do so. There is a rule coming in for the consideration of a bill that ought to be passed to-day, and that, together with the consideration of the conference report on the legislative bill, will consume most of the day. If the gentleman desires to address the House at the conclusion of the consideration of the Crow Indian bill under the special rule, there will be no objection, and I do not know but what he could secure half an hour in connection with the consideration of that bill. There is to be some general debate.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. The rule provides, as drawn, that that debate shall be confined to the bill; but I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that that rule to which the gentleman refers was reported wholly because the leadership of the House found itself without anything else to present to the House to-day and that there is no great urgency for its passage?

Mr. MONDELL. That is not altogether true; but I will say to my friend if we have time to consider the Crow bill and also listen to the gentleman from Illinois for an hour I am sure we will be glad to do it, but if the gentleman from Illinois speaks immediately after the gentleman from Oklahoma speaks we will take up the Crow bill late in the afternoon.

Mr. GARNER. I presume it is the gentleman's purpose to go on with the Private Calendar to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. That was the intention.

Mr. GARNER. Have you got a program already arranged for Saturday?

Mr. MONDELL. A good many of the brethren seem to be quite desirous of wending their way homeward to primaries and other important occasions on Saturday.

Mr. GARNER. I merely asked the gentleman the question, anticipating his answer. I think it is evident on its face that the time can be had during this week to discuss almost any subject that the minority or the majority may want to discuss.

Mr. MONDELL. I think so.

Mr. GARNER. It would not keep gentlemen from going home Friday night if we merely wanted to come back here Saturday and have some general debate. I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois desires to make that arrangement or not.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I would not like to do that.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that would hardly be fair to the gentleman from Illinois, to have it understood that all we would do Saturday would be to have some general debate, because while many gentlemen would no doubt be glad to listen to the gentleman from Illinois, if no vote is to come up on Saturday there are likely to be a good many gentlemen absent. It should not take a very considerable time to dispose of the Crow bill.

Mr. GARNER. Suppose you allow an hour before you start in on the Crow bill, because the rule on that bill provides that the debate must be confined to a discussion of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there objection on that side to modifying the Crow rule?

Mr. GARRETT. I think there will be none. That would restore it to what it was originally. As the proposition was first laid before the committee there was provision for two hours' debate, an hour on a side, to be confined to the bill, but upon the suggestion of the majority members of the Committee on Indian Affairs that time was cut down to an hour.

Mr. MONDELL. May I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he modify the Crow rule so that the general debate shall occupy an hour and a half, and that an hour be given to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY], and then 15 minutes on a side in addition to that for general debate.

Mr. POU. The rule would also have to be modified in respect to the provision which requires the debate to be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. That can be done.

Mr. POU. With that amendment I do not think there would be any objection to it.

Mr. GARNER. There is really no controversy about the Crow bill, is there?

Mr. MONDELL. Not that I know of.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. None at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggest, inasmuch as there seems to be a general consent, that the rule be modified as indicated.

Mr. GARRETT. I think that would be a satisfactory arrangement. Let there be an hour and a half of general debate, with the understanding that it shall not be confined to the bill, and with the understanding that one hour of that shall be given to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY]. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], I believe, desires 10 minutes on the rule.

Mr. POU. That can be eliminated by asking unanimous consent of the House to address the House for eight minutes, which I do.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, are we to have any debate on the rule?

Mr. POU. There will be no debate on the rule as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SNELL. Suppose we do not present the rule, but ask unanimous consent for consideration of the bill.

Mr. POU. There will be no objection on this side.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman in charge of the rule ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the Crow bill, with the arrangement for debate that has been suggested, to follow the consideration of the conference report on the legislative bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we could have passed the Crow bill while they have been talking about this thing. Nobody is going to fight it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the conference report on the legislative bill is disposed of it may be in order to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to take up the Crow Indian bill, S. 2890; that there be an hour and a half general debate, of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] shall have 1 hour, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] 10 minutes, and the balance for debate on the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. That will not interfere with the remarks of my colleague, Mr. HOWARD?

Mr. SNELL. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that after the consideration of the report on the legislative bill it shall be in order to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Crow Indian bill; that there shall be 1 hour and 30 minutes of general debate, of which 1 hour shall be allotted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY], 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], and the other 20 minutes on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEVELOPMENT OF OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] is recognized under the special order for 20 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, 31 years ago to-day in the great Southwest several thousand sturdy pioneers were at this very moment of that day engaged in a mad race for homes in a most virgin part of this country. That, sir, marked the beginning of what is to-day one of the greatest States of this Union. That race for homes marked the start of the construction of the great State of Oklahoma. That fertile country which was inhabited in the morning by the occasional cowboy and the coyote at eventide of that same day boasted of cities of thousands and a total population running well-nigh to the hundred-thousand mark. The selection of "Oklahoma" for this great State's name could not be improved upon—Oklahoma being of Indian origin, and meaning "Happy home of the red man."

Recently in this House the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, in speaking of Oklahoma, said:

> Of the many things I have done in my 26 years of service in the House, there are many upon which I look back with pride and pleasure. One of these is that for years I did my best to bestow the boon of statehood upon Oklahoma. Two of the most pleasant weeks of my life were spent in that beautiful land hunting and fishing. I drove over it in a spring wagon and viewed the landscape o'er with ever-increasing delight. Anybody could tell that it would some day be a great agricultural State, but the chances are that in that far-away day even the most imaginative and enthusiastic of boomers never dreamed what a rich and mighty commonwealth she would become within two decades, with fair prospects of becoming one of the greatest and wealthiest States of the Union. Neither Jules Verne nor any other novelist ever wrote a tale so fetching as the history of Oklahoma. Her population is composed of the very cream of the peoples of the older States—the young, the vigorous, the adventurous, the daring.

In that statement the honored gentleman from Missouri stated a truth of development which is the marvel of the world and paid a compliment to our people which we Oklahomans appreciate very highly.

And it is to enlarge upon that statement and to tell more minutely of the development of that Commonwealth that I have sought to address you on this anniversary of the laying of its foundation. In the past to people who have not studied Oklahoma there has been some amazement expressed at her rapid development, but too many, I fear, have looked upon her as a nonimportant Commonwealth, located in an arid or semiarid region, rich in natural resources but barren to a great extent as to the greatest of all assets—that of agriculture and agricultural enterprise.

You have heard of our great oil wells, from which to-day there is being produced a large per cent of the crude petroleum of the world; you have been told of the great deposits of lead and zinc and other minerals produced within her borders; some of you probably know that during war time probably more of the lead used in the manufacture of ammunition was produced in the district I represent in this Congress than in any other part of the country. Some of you may have been told that within her borders are located the greatest deposits of rock asphalt in the entire country, and that to-day it is being developed and is to become a very important factor in the building of hard-surfaced roads throughout this country. But I dare say that few of you and few of your constituents realize that the agricultural development of Oklahoma has kept pace, and that last year she stood tenth among the States of the Union in the matter of the value of her agricultural production, and it is of this that I want to address my remarks for a few moments.

Recently the State board of agriculture of Oklahoma, through its president, took an invoice and made some comparisons relative to Oklahoma's agricultural possibilities and development which, even to Oklahomans, was amazing. This invoice disclosed the fact that Oklahoma's prosperity is not dependent chiefly on corn, wheat, and oats, as in the corn belt, nor on cotton, as in the far South, nor yet on hay and potatoes, as in the East. Corn is over 50 per cent of the total crop value in some States; wheat is over 50 per cent in still others. A failure in any one of these crops in these States is very disastrous. Oklahoma's leading crop is only 36 per cent of the total crop value of the State. Hence failure in one or two crops affects us less seriously. We not only grow the leading field crops of most sections, but for many of them our farmers get more dollars per acre than the average of either the United States or of the State that leads in production of the crop. The price of an acre of Oklahoma's average plowland is shown to be half that of the United States, although the acre income from crops exceeds the average of the whole United States. [Applause.] Thus the farmers of Oklahoma have made the remarkable record of producing more dollars an acre from the 12 leading crops than the estimated price of the land on which these crops grew.

WEALTH MADE ON CHEAP LANDS.

To illustrate and analyze by way of comparison, we find that the highest-priced plowland in America is throughout the State of Iowa, which State has an average price of $169 for average plowland, $129 for poor plowland, and $196 per acre for good plowland, showing an average price per acre for plowland for that State of $164.50, with an average production last year of $49.92 per acre. Oklahoma, with a plowland value of $38 per acre for average plowland, $24 per acre for poor plowland, and $51 per acre for good plowland, or an average for all plowland per acre of $38, showed an earning average in her 12 leading crops of $39.50 per acre.

Thus, Oklahoma farmers received last year from crops alone a gross income of $1.50 an acre more than the estimated price of the land. The average price of plowland for Oklahoma in 1907 was $22.49 an acre, while in 1919 it was $38 per acre. The increase has been 70 per cent in 10 years, or an annual increase of 7 per cent. This is showing splendid results on the investment, even though the profits from farm operations be not counted. Oklahoma farmers received from 12 field crops $3.65 an acre more than the average of the United States for the same crops. Yet the price of average plowland in Oklahoma is barely half that of the average value of plowland throughout the United States. Average plowland in Iowa is nearly four and one-half times that in Oklahoma, yet Iowa's leading field crops produced only $2.70 an acre, or 7 per cent more than Oklahoma's 12 leading crops. It may also be surprising to you to know that Oklahoma produced more broom corn than all other States combined during last year.

Likewise, a comparison of Oklahoma's agricultural record in 1919 with that of her neighbor, the great State of Missouri, is very favorable to the State of Oklahoma. The two States are practically the same size, and they grow practically the same crops. Missouri is 100 years old, while Oklahoma's first settlement was made 31 years ago. Missouri's average plowland is listed as nearly twice that of Oklahoma's. It devotes nearly one and one-half million acres more plowland to growing its 12 leading field crops than Oklahoma devotes to her 12 leading field crops. Yet Oklahoma farmers received $7.38 an acre more for these crops than did Missouri farmers receive for theirs. And on their large acreage in cultivation Missouri's total crop value, including cotton seed, was $551,056,000. Oklahoma's total was $547,758,000. These figures give Oklahoma tenth place among the States in total value of crops.

The farmers of Oklahoma have used every method and means at their command to bring out such successful results as I have pointed out. The average income to Oklahoma farmers last year from farm products was $3,600. In addition to this, their tables were supplied with home-grown fruit and vegetables, milk and butter, poultry and eggs, ham and bacon, and occasionally a tender steak or a roast from a fat yearling. These farmers paid no gas or light bills; no house rent; no street car fares; many bought no fuel; they have daily mail delivery. Many have rural phones and do their visiting and shopping in autos. They enjoy the year-around outdoor life, with the health-giving sunshine and pure air of Oklahoma.

STATE DEVELOPMENT CLEARLY SHOWN.

A comparison of crop production for 1919 with that of 1907, the year Oklahoma was made a State, indicates fairly well the development of the State. It happens that the two years were very similar in weather conditions, and the yield per acre of various crops differs but little. Even allowing for differences in prices for crops in the two years, a large balance in favor of 1919 remains. This indicates new land brought into cultivation, and there is yet a large amount of raw land to be brought under the plow. The value of the four leading crops in 1907 was $114,958,000. In 1919 these same crops sold for $424,923,000. In 1907 the live stock of Oklahoma brought, in round figures, $116,998,000, while the live stock in 1919 brought $214,181,000. Or, in other words, the four leading crops in 1919 have a value that is 370 per cent, or nearly four times that of 1907. The live-stock value for 1919 was 183 per cent, or nearly twice that of 1907.

Farm hands in Oklahoma were paid a monthly wage of $60.60 in 1919. This, according to the Government statistics, is $4.31 more than the average of the United States. It is more than is paid in the Corn Belt States and exceeds their average by $5.88. It is more than is paid in any other of the 16 States that comprise the South Atlantic and the South Central groups, and is $15.35, or 35 per cent more than the average wages paid in these States. Only seven States in the United States paid higher harvest wages than Oklahoma.

The question naturally arises, What has brought this about? To those who know the State intimately the record is not at all surprising. Oklahoma is over 400 miles long from east to west, extending from the foothills of the Rockies in Colorado to the Ozark Mountains of Arkansas. Its elevation slopes from 4,000 to 400 feet. It has many kinds of soils and the precipitation varies from 55 inches on the eastern border to 20 inches on the western border. It overlaps the grain and live-stock regions of the North and the cotton regions of the South. It is the meeting place and overlapping grounds of all crops, all conditions, all peoples. From each region have come pioneer men and women to seek homes in a new and growing country. Naturally time is required to succeed in farming where conditions are strange. Progress for some years is necessarily slow. Yet the interchanging of ideas as naturally results from such a condition is very beneficial, and under the stimulus of war production and high prices Oklahoma farmers exerted themselves to unusual efforts. Often one or more of the great variety of crops is a partial failure. It so happened that in 1919 every one of the many different field, orchard, or garden crops of the State produced a fair yield. Thus Oklahoma had the combination of an unusual incentive for every farmer to produce the greatest possible yield, with a season favorable to every crop grown in the State and high prices were obtained for everything.

While such a combination of favorable conditions can not be expected as a regular thing, yet it shows the latest possibilities for financial success in farming Oklahoma soil. Development in the future is very apt to continue even more rapidly than in the past.

A brief summary discloses the following facts:

Oklahoma crops for the year 1919 were worth $547,758,000.

Value of Oklahoma live stock for 1919 was $214,181,000.

Oklahoma now ranks tenth among the States in the value of all crops.

The average income of the 200,000 families on Oklahoma's farms for 1919 exceeded $3,600.

Last year's acre value of Oklahoma's 12 leading field crops exceeded the estimated acre price of its average plow land.

Last year's acre value of Oklahoma's 12 leading field crops exceeded the average of the United States for the same crops.

For each of nine leading field crops the acre income for Oklahoma last year exceeded the average of the United States for the same crops.

Oklahoma received more dollars per acre from each of nine leading field crops for 1919 than was received by the various States that lead in total production of these crops.

The crop value in 1919 was nearly four times the crop value in statehood year, 1907.

The live-stock value was nearly twice the live-stock value in statehood year, 1907.

Our farmers paid for farm help one-third more per month than the average paid in the 16 States comprising the South Atlantic and the South Central groups.

Half the farms are under oil lease, and from these leases last year landowners received $52,000,000.

Oklahoma landowners received last year from crops, royalties, and live stock the total sum of $840,939,000.

Mr. Speaker, this is only a brief and hurried outline of the developments of Oklahoma. Oklahoma has taken her place as one of the great States of the Union; her hills and valleys are dotted with schools and churches, where the children of these sturdy pioneers are being educated and where we worship God according to the dictates of our own beliefs. Her citizens are comprised of the very best blood from the East, from the West, from the North, and from the South, and to others who desire to make Oklahoma their home they extend a friendly and welcoming hand. [Applause.] They are not jealous of their blessings and prosperity, and those who journey there will find a wide field before them, where their efforts will be crowned with success if they but persevere. For does not the very name "Oklahoma" assure to them contentment and prosperity—Oklahoma, the land of "happy homes"? [Applause.]

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on a certain amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Bureau of Efficiency, together with its books, papers, and records, furniture, equipment, and supplies, is hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of Congress; and its officers and employees are transferred in their present status without reappointment. The Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall hereafter be appointed jointly by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and may be removed from office by them. All other employees of the bureau, including a disbursing officer for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the bureau, shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. The Bureau of Efficiency is authorized to investigate any matters relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government whenever directed by either House of Congress or requested by the heads of such services and shall from time to time submit to Congress reports of its investigations with recommendations looking to greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of the public business. It shall make such special investigations and reports as may be required by either House of Congress or by any committee or subcommittee thereof of either House having jurisdiction over appropriations and expenditures. Administrative officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of its duties, and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate amendment No. 53 to the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees as to the said amendment:

On No. 53: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, transferring the Bureau of Efficiency from the executive branch of the Government to the jurisdiction of Congress and modifies the Senate amendment in the following manner: Provides that the chief of the bureau may be removed from office by joint action of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House instead of by concurrent resolution; limits the investigations of the bureau relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the administrative services of the Government to those which may be directed by either House of Congress or those which may be requested by the heads of such administrative services; limits the special investigations and reports which may be required by either House or any committee thereof to those requested by committees having jurisdiction over appropriations or expenditures and extends the authority for requesting such investigations to any subcommittee of either House having jurisdiction of appropriations and expenditures.

WM. R. WOOD,
E. H. WASON,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the conferees, I desire to make a brief statement with reference to our action. It is not the purpose or desire of the conferees to do anything contrary to the wishes of this House. We were instructed to further disagree to the proposal in the legislative bill by way of a Senate amendment for the transfer of the Bureau of Efficiency to the jurisdiction of Congress. We did that, and as a result of a further disagreement an amendment was proposed. That amendment has been reported by the Clerk. It is in substance the amendment that was suggested by the War Department. We took away from that amendment the manner in which the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency might be removed. The amendment provides that he may be appointed by the joint action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate. In its original form he could only be removed by a joint resolution. That we amended, and now it reads "may be removed by the same authority that made the appointment."

It also provides that the Bureau of Efficiency may be put in motion by any of the activities of the Government, by direct action of Congress through its instruction, through the request of any committee on appropriations or expenditures, or through the request of any subcommittee of the committees I have mentioned.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman aware of the fight which is now and has been going on for some time made upon the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency by Mr. Luther C. Stewart and his affiliated organization of Government employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I know something about that fight, but I desire in this connection to say that the very opposition that is being offered to this proposal ought to be the best possible argument why it should be adopted. I think we ought to have a bureau of efficiency independent of the claims or demands of any clique or class, men who are bound to do their duty as they understand it under their oaths, owing obedience to no one save the Congress of the United States, who will be responsible for their creation and continuance in office.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman did not permit me to finish my statement. The chief of the Bureau of Efficiency to amount to anything, as I am sure the gentleman from Indiana will agree, will incur the hostility of various parties from time to time. That is true, is it not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely true.

Mr. BLANTON. Beyond any question he will incur the hostility and the animosity of employees; and does the gentleman think it wise to leave it to just two people to remove him?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think there would be any danger in lodging this authority in the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. I have sufficient confidence in the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House at the present moment to think that they would not yield to any influence that would be detrimental to the good of the service, and I have enough confidence in those who will occupy those offices in the future to feel the same way in respect to them. The way in which this proposal came to us it would take very nearly the same machinery and the same trouble to remove this officer as it would to impeach a public officer.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has no more confidence in the Speaker of this House and the President of the Senate than I have, yet the gentleman would not leave it to those two officials to remove the heads of bureaus or Cabinet officers without any other hearing than their own initiative.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would say in answer to that that the Director of the Bureau of Efficiency would be an officer of the House and he would be responsive to the House, and I think the agreement of the conferees on that proposition is very good.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understand that this is left to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. Does that mean the Vice President of the United States?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It means the Vice President, if there be a Vice President.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman state how many employees there are now employed in this Bureau of Efficiency?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know exactly how many there are. There are quite a number. The fact is that the force is not sufficient at the present moment to meet the demands. I happen to be in a position to know that there are demands from some of these departments at this time for this Bureau of Efficiency, and that they can not comply with those demands because they have not sufficient force at the present to do all they are called upon to do.

Mr. MILLER. Is the status of each of these employees now fixed under the civil service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. As I understand it, they are not fixed by the civil service.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. In answer to the question, I would state that the employees of this department, aside from those men who actually do the work, the expert accountants, the employees used by this bureau are, many of them, in the departments which they are investigating. This is for the manifest purpose, first, of not having a permanent and unnecessary pay roll, and, second, because by working the employees in the departments they are able to impress upon them the forms and economies which they desire to have put in practice.

Mr. MILLER. We are taking on no new employees?

Mr. SISSON. No; no new employees, and no increase of salaries.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The amendment provides that the present employees shall be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Congress. I am informed, and I think I am not misstating the facts, that the vast majority of the membership of this House is in favor of this Bureau of Efficiency being responsive to the Congress, and that the Congress should have to do with putting it in motion and directing its course, so that the bureau may act as an independent agent. As has been suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], the very activity of the Bureau of Efficiency incurs displeasure sometimes by reason of its going crosswise to the practices established in the various bureaus of the Government or with the ideas of those on the outside. We all know that there is necessity for efficiency; that there is room for very great improvement in every bureau in the city of Washington. The only objection I have heard offered, and I think the only tenable objection that may be made—and I can not see that that is well taken—is that if this Bureau of Efficiency is transferred to Congress, as is proposed, it will have a deterring effect on the possible passage of a budget system. As I stated the other day, I am heartily in favor of the establishment of a budget system. We all know how much it is needed. I do contend, however, that the establishment of this Bureau of Efficiency will in no-wise interfere with the establishment of the budget system. It will all the more demonstrate the necessity of the budget system.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman state the scope of the activities of this Bureau of Efficiency?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It was meant under its creation that this Bureau of Efficiency should be what it is called—a Bureau of Efficiency—and that they might go into these different departments at the solicitation of the heads of the bureaus and of the departments and assist them in getting greater efficiency, not only as to method but as to execution.

Mr. HUSTED. Where did the employees of this bureau get the training and experience that would enable them to go into the departments here and straighten them out?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are selected by reason of their peculiar fitness for that character of work. This Bureau of Efficiency has been in existence in some form or other, as I understand it, since 1913, and they have in their employ now some very efficient men. They have done some very, very valuable service, which all will admit who know anything about the scope of their work, but the bureau is so handicapped by reason of obstacles thrown in its way that its work has been very much obstructed. We all know that our system of doing business here is archaic, that there is not a business establishment in the Nation that could last any time if it employed the same methods for the conduct of its business that are employed in the District of Columbia, but this course has been followed here so long, and they have become so used to it, that any suggested change or advice toward a change is bitterly resented by some of the departments. There are many exceptions to this, however. The Post Office Department is the best business department in the city of Washington to-day [applause], and it was made so by reason of Postmaster General Burleson inviting this Bureau of Efficiency into that department and having it make a complete revolution and renovation. Likewise, in the Treasury Department great reforms have been brought about by reason of the activity of this bureau, with the cooperation of the Secretary of the Treasury. They are now working there, and I am gratified to say to you that by reason of the establishment of modern methods in the dispatch and conduct of the business of that department, since the close of the war, through this Bureau of Efficiency, in one division alone they have been able to reduce their clerical force by more than 500. If the same cooperation was had in all of these other branches of the Government, there might be no need of this proposition.

But unfortunately outside of the Government activity there is an activity that is bent on destroying efficiency, that has no sympathy whatever with the introduction of efficiency in any of these departments. They would like to destroy, if you please, not only the man who is at the head of the present Bureau of Efficiency, but they would like to destroy the entire system itself, preferring that all engaged in Government work serve the smallest period of time and get the greatest amount of return for it. Now, as I was stating a while ago, the only opposition we have heard to this proposal in this House is that it will have a bad effect upon the possibility of the passage of the so-called budget system. I am willing to agree, if the gentlemen who are friendly to the budget system will agree, that in the event that this proposal is adopted and a budget system is enacted into law during the present Congress or at any other Congress, embodying, if you please, the same machinery or in substance the same that will do the work—that is all we are after, the result—that there will be no objection made from any quarter to a clause repealing this law. Now, it strikes me that is a fair proposition, and I think that it would be proper for the reason that we do not want duplication of effort even in the efficiency business. We have duplication of effort in all these departments and we are trying to get rid of it through the instrumentality of this Bureau of Efficiency; so in the event a budget system is adopted, and I hope it will be before this Congress ends or even before we recess, there could be very easily inserted in that measure a clause repealing this law, and in the event that by reason of some unfortunate circumstances the passage of the budget system be delayed until the next session of Congress, why this activity can go on, and there is necessity for its going on every hour, for by reason of its not being permitted to operate fully there are thousands and millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money that is being needlessly and uselessly wasted. Now, I have said all I desire to say. I have brought to you all the information that your committee has on this subject with the recommendation that this report be adopted for the reasons I have tried to offer.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret to be compelled to oppose the conference report, but I do not believe that this conference report should be adopted, and for many very excellent reasons. The gentlemen will remember that when this committee brought in their conference report providing for an agreement on all of the items in controversy save this one their report was adopted and with regard to this particular item the House unanimously advised the conferees to disagree to the Senate amendment. The conferees have seen fit to agree to the Senate amendment somewhat modified. I do not desire to criticize the conferees for that action. They have, I am sure, exercised their best judgment by doing what in their opinion should be done. I am sorry I can not agree with them. Gentlemen may not believe that the fate of the budget and the budget system depends on our action relative to this matter, but I am firmly convinced that while the adoption of this amendment will not necessarily and of itself prevent the adoption of wise and proper budget legislation, I very greatly fear that the adoption of this amendment in any form will place a serious obstacle in the way of thoroughgoing budget legislation. Whether that was the intent of anyone interested in the matter I do not know, and I do not pretend to say, but that, in my opinion, will be its effect. It strikes me that at a time when the entire matter of the budget is still under consideration by the Congress and still in an unfinished state it is not logical that we shall adopt as an amendment on an appropriation bill partial legislation on that subject. What is proposed to do here, what would be done under the Bureau of Efficiency if this legislation were adopted, would, of course, be done under a budget system, or should be, but if we make this provision at this time for these efficiency examinations it is an excuse for not adopting a budget system or that we adopt a budget system that is not complete, rounded out, full-fledged, and workable along all lines. It may be that the gentlemen of the conference are of the opinion that they were justified in accepting the Senate amendment, notwithstanding the attitude of the House, with the changes and modifications that have been made.

In my opinion those changes have not helped the amendment, but have weakened it. If we are to have a thoroughgoing system of efficiency examinations under the control of the Congress in connection with a budget system, they should be provided for in connection with the budget law, and they should be broad and carry sufficient authority for all investigations proper to be made and necessary to be made.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. Now, the amendment as adopted will not render possible the regular continuous attention to the disbursements of the executive officers which there should be, and under the amendment as it has been modified these examinations could only be made when ordered by committees or subcommittees. They would have to do only with certain transactions of the departments. They would not give us those general, all-embracing, thoroughgoing examinations as to the character of expenditures that we should have. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think if the gentleman will study the amendment we have made and the original proposal he will find that there is not any activity but what may be investigated, and that the functions of the Bureau of Efficiency when put in motion are so comprehensive that not only Congress but every committee and subcommittee, either on expenditures or appropriations, as well as the heads of all these various activities, can have those matters investigated.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure the gentleman desires to have full investigation, but I do not believe the amendment as it is now before us would accomplish that result. It is not so satisfactory as the amendment which the House agreed unanimously to reject. I have been one of those who believe that one of the most important features of the budget system is the independent audit and the examination of expenditures by authority of Congress which would be carried on in connection with an independent audit. I think that is a more important feature of the budget system than the submitting of estimates by the Executive because if the Congress is at all times armed and fortified with information secured by its agents relative to the activities of the various bureaus and departments we then can meet all the arguments, meet all of the suggestions put forward by the departments, with arguments and suggestions coming from our own agents who are as fully informed or even better informed than the representatives of the departments who appear before the appropriating committees.

There is nothing we need so badly as to have at the elbow of the chairmen of appropriation committees men thoroughly informed with regard to the transactions, the activities, and expenditures of the departments, and that information can only be secured in connection with an independent audit and an efficiency system that will be part of it. And all of that should be and will be provided for in the budget. Now it is proposed, before the Senate has passed the budget bill, long before it has gone to conference, while it is still in a formative state, to adopt as a part of an appropriation bill, contrary to the usual rule, a provision that has to do with the general budget scheme. It is not wise. It is not sound legislation, and it is not safe. If we are really devoted to the adoption of a thoroughgoing budget system, the only way to meet the situation is, I regret to say, to vote down the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. And if that is done, my purpose, if no one else does it, is to again make the motion to nonconcur in the Senate amendment. I realize the embarrassment of our conferees. They meet with Senate conferees who are very earnest about this matter, who may have some pride of authorship, who may be more insistent upon the legislation than they would otherwise be because they have been somewhat criticized here and elsewhere with regard to it. I have no doubt but that our conferees met with stern insistence upon the part of the gentlemen they conferred with in regard to this provision; and it was probably, as they saw it, rather essential in the maintenance of a proper spirit of compromise between the two bodies to agree temporarily and for the time being to this amendment as modified. It should not embarrass them if the House still adheres to the view it has once expressed. It may make it easier for gentlemen elsewhere to now agree to the view which the House has taken, a view which the House under legislative practice has the right to insist upon—the rule that the body that proposes legislation on an appropriation bill must give way if the other House is insistent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] if he desires some time.

Mr. GOOD. I am opposed to the conference report, but if there is no argument advanced more than has been advanced, I do not care for time. If there is additional argument, I shall be glad to use some time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no choice as to when I shall speak. I imagine the membership of the House will not be carried away like a jury, with the last speech.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman I was not present and did not hear all of the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], and in order to answer all the argument I would like to know what the argument is in regard to it.

Mr. SISSON. Having agreed to this conference report, I agree with the gentleman from Indiana that we would be entitled technically to close the argument.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SISSON. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, your conference committee brought this item back to the House, and at the time it was brought back to the House it did not suit the conferees of the House. But we amended it, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] told you, so that this Bureau of Efficiency comes absolutely under the control of the Houses of Congress. I see no objection to that method of selection. Arguments have been made from various sources as to the activity of this bureau. Your committee agreed to these amendments, that this bureau should function when requested by either branch of Congress, by any committee of Congress, or any subcommittee of Congress having jurisdiction of the matter. The departments desired also that they may use this Bureau of Efficiency, and they asked that the amendment contain the language "and when requested by the head of a department," showing that the heads of the departments realize the good that this bureau has been doing.

I know there has been a good deal of criticism of this bureau. And let me tell my Democratic friends as well as my Republican friends if there was not some severe criticism of this Bureau of Efficiency I would be everlastingly against it. If this Bureau of Efficiency is efficient, if this Bureau of Efficiency is down in a department where the bureau chief and the chief clerk are not conducting the business of the bureau efficiently and this Bureau of Efficiency criticizes them and bring their report back to Congress, you naturally make the bureau chief and chief clerk angry with you. And I want to say that while the Bureau of Efficiency has not worked any miracles, those of you who have been on the legislative committee, those of you who have had to deal with these departments must admit, if you are fair, that they have done a great deal of good. Even the chairman of the committee will not say that they have not accomplished a great deal of good. But let me appeal to this House now, to the Agricultural Committee, the Military Affairs Committee, the Naval Affairs Committee, any of you gentlemen that have to make up these appropriation bills, are you not confined absolutely to such estimates as the department send up to you? You may send for certain gentlemen and they come before you, but you get only such information as those men holding these positions want to give you. Now, the subcommittee of which I am a member has to deal with more departments, has to deal with more bureau chiefs, with more clerks than all other committees of the House, and I know of the need of having some information other than that which comes directly from the bureau itself.

If I want to know how many clerks they need in The Adjutant General's office, I would like to have some expert investigation of that department. I would want that expert information obtainable at any time I needed it. Then when I sent for clerks or bureau chiefs in The Adjutant General's office I would want to be able to ask any one of them why he does not do the business in this particular way and save the services of so many clerks.

Let me give you a sample illustration of how a vast amount of money already could have been saved. It looks so simple that we wonder that anybody else had not thought of it. The Adjutant General was called upon to make a record of every soldier of the late war in the United States Army. As I said the other day, Gen. Harris is an accomplished officer, and all the members of this committee are his friends. We also required by law that he should make a complete record of the soldiers for the States. He put a lot of clerks to work on that record. This Bureau of Efficiency simply suggested to him, "Why have you not a machine to make both cards at the same time by using a carbon process?"

But by doing that, except for a little lost motion in putting in your carbons, you could save nearly 50 per cent on clerk hire alone. I might go into details to show many of the suggestions of this bureau that saved money, but I will refrain on this occasion for lack of sufficient time. I believe in efficiency. If you believe that Congress has the right to have accurate information, so that it can intelligently control these matters; if you believe that the Congress should have the information so that it can direct these activities, you will not deny that Mr. Taft did a good thing when he organized this Bureau of Efficiency, even though it has not done all that was expected. If that has proven advantageous heretofore, you will realize that it will be worth infinitely more if you have Congress to directly control the activities of these men. Your conference committee having agreed to this, we feel that we have done our duty by the House, because the Senate yielded to us on these matters where objections had been made.

The distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the leader of the majority in this House, said in so many words that Congress needed this information. Where is he going to get it? Oh, he intimates we will get it from the bureau that is to be established in connection with this new budget system. In the first place, you do not know whether you are going to have a new budget system established or not; if you do not get the budget system, you certainly need this. Your conferees are assured that the Senate conferees favor the budget system. They so said; and they said, in order to meet the objections of the House, that they themselves would personally do everything they could in the Senate to put this arm of the service into the budget bill, so that there could be no conflict and no duplication.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has probably investigated the work of the budget as it is outlined in the bill which passed the House and is familiar with it?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. That has a budget bureau in it?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Would you put two in that?

Mr. SISSON. No; I certainly would not. But you do not know just in what shape your budget is going to be in. You know what budget the House has agreed to now, and if we get this now and the budget bill passes at this session of Congress, in the name of God will it not be easy to put this item in that bill? Then you will have done no harm. If you do not get your budget bill you are just where you started.

Now, I do know personally the great need for this sort of an item under our control and direction, and if you do not have it you can not get the information that you need. I would like to have the head of this bureau, as soon as this session of Congress adjourns, with the direction of the chairman of the subcommittee, to go and make an investigation of several of these departments, and I would like for the chairman of the committee, with the sanction of the subcommittee, to give him the order to do it, and have the head of the bureau come back to the committee in December and report, so that we might know what they needed and what work they are doing; and then if we had that information, if there is a great difference of opinion, we can do as we did with Gen. Harris, when we had Gen. Harris and his corps come and sit on one side and the Bureau of Efficiency sit on the other side of a table and let the matter be tried out before the committee. No harm can come from that. Only great good can come from it. I entertain no fears of it, because I believe that the Senators were telling the truth when they told us that we could inform the House that nothing was further from their intention than in any way to endanger or embarrass the budget legislation, and that is the only reason that anybody has assigned here as to why this provision should not become law.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Assuming that the budget legislation is in the right direction, and assuming that the Bureau of Efficiency functions in the right direction, does not the gentleman concur in the view that we ought to widen out the work and correct the defects in departmental conditions that everybody admits exist?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. I agree with the gentleman; and in doing that, Congress can have some accurate information developed, so that when we do legislate we can legislate wisely and efficiently.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Another question. The gentleman will remember that last February that view was expressed on both sides of the House?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And the statement was made that a resolution would be brought in to provide for a survey of departmental conditions and such action as might be thought necessary. A resolution was introduced, but nothing has happened, although we had the promise that the resolution would be definitely supported.

Mr. SISSON. I do not recollect the details of it, but we did have a promise that a review of all the departments would be made with a view to bringing about more economy.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. To what bureau or Government establishment does this Bureau of Efficiency now make report as to the conduct of a department?

Mr. SISSON. They make a statement now, say, for the Treasury Department, in case they take up an investigation there. Suppose an investigation is made of the Treasurer's office. They make their report and recommendations to the Treasurer, who adopts it or not, as he sees proper. If Congress asked them to make an investigation of any department, they would make the investigation and report to us. So that I think the conferees have acted wisely in agreeing to the amendment. I hope the House will not vote down this whole conference report.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I had occasion a few days ago, when this amendment was before the House, to express my opinion in regard to it. I do not want to do anything more on this occasion than to emphasize what I had to say then. I regret very much, entertaining the views that I do and which I expressed on that occasion, that I can not support this conference report. I regret it because I hold the gentlemen who represented the House in the conference in high personal esteem, and I know that those gentlemen would not have reported it had they not felt that it was to the interest of the public service. But, Mr. Speaker, as I view this amendment, it threatens to interfere with the passage of the budget legislation, and for that reason I am opposed to it. There is no doubt in my mind but that if this amendment is adopted those who are opposed to budget legislation will use it as one of the arguments why a fully rounded budget measure should not be enacted, as was sought to be done in the bill which passed the House. We can not have complete and proper budget legislation unless Congress has the control of its expenditures, and that is what the bill which passed the House last October sought to do.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In a moment. Now, let me read to you just what was carried in that bill. It provided for a comptroller general, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and that he should not be removed except by a vote of both Houses of Congress.

It provided, among other things—

That the comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds, and shall make to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the accounting department, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures. He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures. The comptroller general shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as the committee may request. The comptroller general shall specially report to the Congress every expenditure or contract made by any head of a department in any year in excess of the appropriation to such department and in violation of law.

Now, that bill went to the Senate last October, and very recently the Senate committee having jurisdiction over it has submitted a report recommending a different bill; but if you will examine it on page 31, section 27, you will find practically the same provision. So that we may be certain that if budget legislation passes at this session it will contain some such provision as I have read; and I submit, gentlemen, that this amendment relating to the Bureau of Efficiency covers substantially the same thing. Now, certainly if we are interested in a budget system, one of whose principal features is to cut out duplications in the service, we do not want to put ourselves in the attitude here at this moment of providing for duplication by enacting a law providing that the Bureau of Efficiency shall do something that the budget bill will require another agency to perform. I do not question the value of the work being performed by the Bureau of Efficiency. I would be glad to see it made a part of the organization created under the budget bill. But this amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill. It should be considered in connection with the budget legislation now pending in the Senate. For that reason I hope that this report will not be adopted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think I want more than five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, it must be remembered that the conference report has been adopted. The only thing in dispute is this one item. The conferees were not able to agree to eliminate it in accordance with the expressed wish of the House.

I have a great deal of sympathy with House conferees on appropriation bills, and I do not want what I have to say to be considered in any way as a reflection upon the splendid work that the House conferees have done with regard to the legislative bill.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] speaks of the need of efficiency bureaus and an efficiency arm of the Government. I agree with him. I agree that the Bureau of Efficiency has done a great deal of good work. There is need for a bureau of efficiency that can be more independent than the present bureau can be without fear of removal. What the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has just said is the thing that is in my mind regarding efficiency. We rightly criticize the departments for duplication in the Government service. We have had pointed out to us numerous instances of such duplication. There is a public health service in almost every one of the executive departments. These duplications abound in the departments, and we are demanding that they be eliminated; and it was because of the demand in the Congress and in the country that there shall be an elimination of all the duplications that we have put the budget bill through the House. That budget bill provides for an efficiency bureau in the office of the comptroller general. We criticize the executive departments for duplication, and now by the proposed legislation here we seek to set up a duplication right in the Congress itself.

Mr. SISSON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SISSON. I stated that the Senate conferees assured the House conferees that if that bill should become a law they would immediately repeal this provision in this bill.

Mr. GOOD. And in that connection let me remind the gentleman, who has been on a number of conferences, that when we go to the Senate on a conference and ask for a provision that changes existing law, the Senate conferees will never agree to it. Six months ago to-morrow we passed through the House a bill for a budget, and this amendment is the only action taken by the Senate of the United States on that subject except to appoint a committee which has only a few days ago made a report. You say you will not have budgetary legislation. If the demand of this House is, as I believe it is, for budgetary legislation at this session of Congress, you will have an opportunity to adopt the budget bill again as a part of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and there will be no appropriation bill without budgetary legislation. But let us not duplicate the service right here in the House. There is too much of that in the executive departments. Let us keep our skirts clear; and I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] that I am willing to go far enough to have the Bureau of Efficiency transferred over entirely as a bureau in the office of the comptroller general of the United States. The bill itself provides for an efficiency arm of the Congress, and I think goes far enough, but I have no objection to a transfer. It should have it. I shall work with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] to bring that about, but let us not lay at our doors the same criticism that we and the public have laid at the doors of the executive departments.

To vote down this conference report does not mean to defeat the conference report with regard to the appropriations. That has been adopted. The only thing now is whether the House, standing by its guns, will refuse to let three Senators of the United States dictate to the House what kind of budgetary legislation we shall have. [Applause.] I am not in favor of it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question being taken, the conference report was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House still further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 53.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House still further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 53.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] ask for a further conference?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House ask for a further conference with the Senate.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were 46 ayes and 1 no.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further disagree to the entire language found in Senate amendment 53 or to any substitute that provides for the Bureau of Efficiency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House be instructed to disagree to the entire language of Senate amendment 53 or to any language that provides for a Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I really do not see any further object of a conference. This bill went back to conference and the conferees have done the very best they could with the Senate conferees who insisted on this amendment. We made an effort to eliminate these differences which have been argued on the floor. The House having voted the conference report down on account of this one item, there is not much necessity for any further conference. If the gentleman proposes to take it out of conference, there is one thing that he can do, and that is to make a motion to adhere. If the House has made up its mind to adhere, and if he makes the motion and the bill goes back to the Senate, they can let the bill fail.

Mr. GOOD. We have not reached that parliamentary stage of procedure when a motion to adhere is in order. The bill went back on a motion to insist. The next act is for the House to further insist, and after that action has been taken then the motion to adhere is in order.

Mr. SISSON. I do not agree with the gentleman that that is absolutely the rule. As a matter of courtesy it might be as the gentleman suggests, but the House would have a right to move to adhere in the first place.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is a question of legislation pure and simple. There has never been a conference, so far as I know, in which there was a disagreement on matters of legislation on an appropriation bill between the two Houses that the House proposing the legislation did not and was not compelled under the rule to yield to the other House. So I do not believe that the gentleman will have much trouble when we get back into conference.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, on inquiry I think there will be no question but that the conferees will be able to bring back an agreement, and I therefore withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. WASON, and Mr. SISSON.

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12775, the Army reorganization bill, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army reorganization bill, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, has the bill been printed with the Senate amendment?

Mr. KAHN. I am so informed. There is but one Senate amendment.

Mr. WALSH. And that is an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause. Has it been printed in that form?

Mr. KAHN. It has been printed.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows whether or not a part of that Senate amendment consists of a provision that aliens who have been in the country one year may upon taking four months' training become eligible for immediate naturalization?

Mr. KAHN. I am informed that there is some such provision in the bill. I want to say to the gentleman that there is also a similar bill pending on the House Calendar reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that this is similar language to that bill?

Mr. KAHN. I have not been able to compare the two.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. If I have the floor.

Mr. BEE. Has the Army reorganization bill attached to it a bill for the revision of the court-martial proceedings proposed by Senator CHAMBERLAIN?

Mr. KAHN. I am informed that that is attached to the bill.

Mr. BEE. That is in the reorganization bill that we are asked to send to the conference?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. KAHN, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. MCKENZIE, Mr. DENT, and Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman from California if a conference on this bill was requested by the Senate?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. So it will come back to the House first?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter I have received from The Adjutant General upon the question of the military rolls, which was considered when we had the Army appropriation bill before the House; also, a letter from the Acting Chief of Engineers regarding the clerks required by the respective bureaus, which clerks and employees were provided for in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are you adding new clerks?

Mr. KAHN. No; I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the gentleman from Indiana made a point of order on some language that was in the bill, which point of order was sustained, and these officers want to explain why they went to the Military Committee for this appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to follow:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 21, 1920.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. KAHN: My attention has been called to the statement made on the floor of the House and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 14th and 15th instant, pages 5676–5679 and 5688–5691, to the effect that I had requested the Committee on Military Affairs to appropriate or reappropriate money for work in The Adjutant General's office that was covered by the legislative, executive, and judicial bill now in conference. It was asserted that if the provision reported by the Committee on Military Affairs becomes a law, The Adjutant General's office would have for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, about $600,000 more than The Adjutant General stated he would require in his hearing on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. There was a clear intimation, if not a direct accusation, that The Adjutant General had intentionally deceived the Committee on Military Affairs or the Appropriations Committee, or both.

The following is an extract from my statement before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which is printed on pages 1751–1752 of the hearing on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill:

"The work of The Adjutant General's office may be divided into three broad classes—that connected with the existing Military Establishment, that connected with the demobilized Army, and that connected with the selective-service records and the furnishing of statements of service to adjutant generals of States. The work will be discussed on these lines:

CLASS A. EXISTING MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

"At the present time there are, in round numbers, 1,100 clerks in The Adjutant General's office engaged upon work connected with the present Military Establishment. This number will, it is hoped, be reduced during the next month or so to about 1,000, or 417 in addition to the number (583) provided for on the statutory roll. A further reduction in this force for the remainder of the fiscal year or for the fiscal year 1921 can not be made without causing an arrearage of work that will seriously interfere with the administration of the Army. * * *

* * * * * * * * *

"One thousand may therefore be taken as the minimum number of clerks required for the active Army during the next fiscal year. This is less than twice the number of clerks (583) in The Adjutant General's Department during the fiscal year 1917, when the strength of the Regular Army was approximately 100,000.

CLASS B. DEMOBILIZED ARMY WORK.

"There are at present about 1,290 clerks on the additional roll engaged on work connected with the demobilized army, and it is not believed that any force less than that now engaged upon the work of reporting to the War Risk Bureau, the Auditor for the War Department, the Director of Finance, to other Government agencies, and the public generally would be sufficient to properly perform that work. * * *

* * * * * * *

"The work of that character is not likely to decrease, but, on the contrary, it will probably increase as legislative or other action affecting the former soldiers is taken.

CLASS C. SELECTIVE-SERVICE RECORDS AND FURNISHING OF STATEMENTS OF SERVICE TO ADJUTANT GENERALS OF STATES.

"There are at present about 1,500 clerks employed on work connected with the selective-service records and the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutant generals of the several States. These clerks are being paid from an appropriation of $3,500,000 provided by the act of Congress approved July 11, 1919. This appropriation is sufficient to complete the work specifically provided for in that act and no additional appropriation will be asked for this work. * * *"

With reference to the appropriation that will be required for The Adjutant General's office during the fiscal year 1921, I stated (p. 1758):

"The total appropriation for the additional roll necessary for The Adjutant General's office during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, is $2,094,970, or $355,301 less than the amount ($2,450,271) necessary to properly conduct the pressing public business during the current year. The statutory roll estimate is the same for both years."

The sum needed for the additional roll was arrived at in the following manner:

CLASS A. EXISTING MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

417 clerks	$444,100

(This is in addition to the 583 clerks on the statutory roll.)

CLASS B.—DEMOBILIZED ARMY—WORK CONNECTED WITH FURNISHING REPORTS TO THE WAR RISK BUREAU, AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT, DIRECTOR OF FINANCE, AND OTHER CURRENT WORK CONNECTED WITH THE DEMOBILIZED ARMY.

1,290 clerks	$1,572,000
119 subclerical employees at	78,870
	2,094,970

This shows clearly that my estimate of $2,094,970 did not include funds for work connected with the selective-service records and the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutant generals of the several States.

With reference to the preparation of statements of service for the adjutant generals of States, I stated (p. 1752):

"* * * In order to complete this work before July 1, 1920, it will be necessary to increase our force by about 1,100 clerks. The chairman of your committee suggested at a hearing on January 2 that it would be far more economical and better in every way for Congress to make the unexpended balance of that appropriation available during the next fiscal year. I informed the Secretary of War of the suggestion and he heartily agreed with the chairman of the committee, and the Secretary directed me to confine my efforts in the future to increasing my force by the employment of only such clerks as may be released from other bureaus of the War Department or other departments in this city."

Having discontinued my efforts to complete the work during the fiscal year at the suggestion of the chairman of the Appropriation Committee, it did not occur to me that that committee would offer any objection to the reappropriation of the unexpended balance of the $3,500,000 appropriated for this specific work and the work connected with the draft records. As to whether this reappropriation should be made by the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Military Affairs it would be presumptuous on the part of a layman to express an opinion. The original appropriation was carried in the Army appropriation act, and for that reason I made my request for the reappropriation of this money to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In the discussions on the floor of the House a member of the Appropriations Committee quoted the following from my statement before the subcommittee on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill:

"The estimates for the office were revised by a War Department board convened for the purpose of considering the financial needs of the various bureaus of the department. That board allotted to this office $1,345,000 for the additional roll on the assumption that $750,000 of the $3,500,000 appropriated for the care and custody of the selective-service records and for the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutant generals of States would be made available for the payment of salaries of the additional roll during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. This sum will not be available for that purpose. But for this erroneous assumption it is presumed that the $2,094,970 needed by the office would have been approved by the board, as the sum of $1,345,000 tentatively allotted and the $750,000 before referred to is $2,094,970, the amount necessary to properly conduct the business of the office."

The purpose of that statement of mine was to show the committee why the estimate of the Secretary of War as to the needs of The Adjutant General's office for the next fiscal year was less than my own estimate. The War Department board referred to called upon me for a statement showing the amount that I would spend for the employment of clerks from the special appropriation, $3,500,000. From my reply that I would require $2,750,000 for that purpose the board erroneously assumed that there would be an unexpended balance of this appropriation of $750,000. This $750,000 was required for the payment of delayed claims from draft boards; employment of mechanics and laborers in the unpacking and setting up the filing cases; for the purchase of new filing cases and equipment; for the employment of engineers, firemen, watchmen, messengers, and other nonclerical help; and for repairs and alterations to the building containing the selective-service records.

The experience of the preceding year, and particularly the last three months, convinces me that the $1,850,000 carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the use of this office will be insufficient to properly conduct the work connected with the existing Military Establishment (previously designed class A work) and the work of reporting from the records of the demobilized Army (designated class B); and consequently there will be no money from this appropriation available for the care and custody of the selective-service records and the furnishing of statements of service to the adjutants general (designated class C work). Unless the unexpended balance of the $3,500,000 is reappropriated and made available it will be impossible to complete the work last mentioned.

Trusting that this explanation will convince you that I did not deceive intentionally or unintentionally either the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations, I am,

Very truly, yours,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 20, 1920.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. KAHN: 1. It has been brought to my attention that the proviso carried in last year's Army appropriation act authorizing the use of field funds carried under the various military appropriations for the employment of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, etc., in the office of the Chief of Engineers was stricken from the Army appropriation act as passed by the House on a point of order made by Mr. WOOD.

2. Having noted the strong objections made to this action by yourself and Mr. ANTHONY, I wish to further substantiate your statements by correcting an impression Mr. WOOD had that these employees were provided for elsewhere in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. Mr. WOOD also stated as follows:

"Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and it is providing for an appropriation to pay expenses of skilled draftsmen and civil engineers and other services in the office of the Chief of Engineers, which is for the defraying of clerical expenses in the District of Columbia, the office of the Chief of Engineers being in the District of Columbia."

In the first place, Mr. WOOD was in error in stating that this proviso is new legislation, for it has been carried in Army appropriation bills heretofore. He is further in error in stating that it was in the nature of an appropriation of funds to pay expenses, for it is not in any sense an appropriation item, but merely an authorization to use field funds within the District of Columbia for the sole reason that the work to be done can only be done effectively within the District on account of the necessity of frequent conferences with the various heads of the Army bureaus on all matters of development work upon which these employees are engaged.

3. Mr. WOOD further stated as follows:

"Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and the legislative appropriation committee gave them a great amount of money for this same service. There is no question but that the point of order is well taken, because it is for clerical services."

Mr. WOOD was in error in this statement in that no funds have been appropriated in the legislative, executive, and judicial act to take care of this work, although representation was made before the Appropriations Committee that this should be done.

4. A letter has been written by me to Senator WADSWORTH calling attention to these facts and requesting that this item be restored to the bill, and I would be much obliged if a similar statement be furnished by you to Mr. WADSWORTH as to the necessity of this action, for under the restriction placed upon the Chief of Engineers by the omission of this proviso it will be absolutely impossible for him to effectively carry out the development work essential for the Army's welfare.

Very respectfully,

H. TAYLOR,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, Acting Chief of Engineers.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS OF CROW INDIANS.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I was requested to take charge of the consideration of the bill S. 2890, and was informed that a special rule would be brought in under which to proceed. I am now advised that the rule will not be reported, but that by unanimous consent the bill is to be considered. Am I correct in that?

The SPEAKER. It was agreed by unanimous consent that it should be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider that bill, and the gentleman is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2890) to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, what is the understanding with respect to the time for debate?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, 1 hour and 40 minutes was allowed for general debate. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. BLANTON, there were—ayes 102, noes 0.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2890. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 284, nays 0, answered "present" 2, not voting 141, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] will take the chair. [Applause.]

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bill S. 2890, with Mr. CRAGO in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2890, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 2890. An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Under the unanimous-consent agreement there is to be 1 hour and 40 minutes of general debate.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that under the unanimous-consent agreement the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is entitled to the floor for one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, as stated, the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to one hour, and the gentleman is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to advise me when I have consumed 45 minutes of my time. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read in my time the article from this morning's Washington Post which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the article to which the gentleman refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

YANK RELIEF BILL UP FOR VOTE MAY 3—$1.25 FOR EACH DAY'S SERVICE, EXCLUDING TWO MONTHS, G. O. P. PLAN.

After a conference yesterday, Republican leaders in the House said soldier relief legislation would be taken up in the House May 3 under a suspension of the rules, with debate limited to 40 minutes, and permission refused for the offering of either amendments or substitutes.

Yesterday's conference was said by the leaders to have showed that the "insurgent" Republicans, who have called a party conference for to-night because of dissatisfaction over certain features of the proposed bill, could not block the original plan.

The Ways and Means Committee is expected to report a composite bill to the House next week providing for cash compensation at $1.25 for each day's service, excluding the first two months.

Telegrams were sent yesterday to all absent Republicans directing them to be present on May 3 and urging as many as possible to return for the conference to-night. Although much opposition is expected to develop in the conference over the proposal to raise necessary revenues through a gross sales tax, leaders expressed the belief that the plan would be approved.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print without reading at this point in my speech the news item which appeared this morning in the Washington Herald in reference to the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading the news item to which he referred. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

DEMAND BONUS TO INCLUDE ALL—DEMOCRATS WANT EVERY PERSON CONNECTED WITH SERVICE TO SHARE—MAY TAKE IN WOMEN—WOULD PAY REGULAR ARMY MEN, OFFICERS, AND EVEN THE YEOMEN (F).

Extension of the benefits of soldier-aid legislation to all men and women who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the war will be demanded by Democrats in the House, Representative GARNER, of Texas, Democratic whip, declared yesterday.

The Democrats also will fight for the plan of raising the revenue by heavy levies on war profits, instead of a tax of one-half of 1 per cent on all sales, he said.

GARNER asserted that the Democrats are opposed unalterably to the program of Republicans on the House Ways and Means Committee which would limit aid to about 3,000,000 of the 4,800,000 service men.

Apparently the Democrats are virtually solid behind the plan of Representative HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, to raise the bonus revenue by big taxes on war profiteers.

Republican leaders of the House have agreed to call up soldier-aid legislation on May 3. Plans are to push it through under a suspension of the rules, so as to prevent amendments to the Republican plan of raising the necessary funds by a sales tax.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, three years ago this great Republic mobilized for war. For the first time in the history of nations one of the world's great nations pledged all its resources for war. And then there came the call to arms, the tramp, tramp of the boys marching down to examining boards in the county seats of this land, 10,000,000 strong, while the world looked on and wondered. For the first time in the history of nations a nation of the white race had within its boundaries 10,000,000 men between the ages of 21 and 30—10,000,000 fighting men. We were without a merchant navy with which to transport our armies across the seas, but we built one; and to-day upon the seas of the world, as the result of the mobilization of our resources, the flag floats over a thousand merchant ships. We ranked third, they said, upon the seas in the number of our fighting ships. To-day, as the result of the quick mobilization of our resources, these great floating steel forts of ours constitute the greatest war Navy on the seven seas. We were without officers, but we educated them, and they headed our armies and rendered upon the field of battle the magnificent service that officers of American troops have rendered in all our wars. We were a peaceful Nation given over to commerce, but we mobilized our factories, we worked men in three shifts, and it was not long until the lighted windows in 10,000 factories across the land flashed back a greeting to the lights on the midnight express as it speeded across the continent. In the history of the world no nation ever mobilized as we did in order to take our position among the nations on the battle front in the war for civilization. And then the boys commenced to cross the seas. Experts on troop movement crossing the sea had said that 500,000 troops could not be transported across the Atlantic in three years of time. In less than two years we sent 2,000,000 trained soldiers to the battle front in France, and in less than two years there were 2,000,000 more under training in our great military training cities, which sprang up as if by magic over night. These boys were carried safely across the seas in great islands of ships, surrounded by the fighting ships of our own Nation and by the fighting ships of the allied nations, and they were carried safely—all of them. The god of battles seemed to be with us, and I can almost imagine that out on the danger line where our fighting ships sailed there floated through the air the pale ghosts of the heroes of all our wars. And I can imagine that as these armies of ours approached the shores of France there came out to meet them and to guarantee to them safe conduct through the danger zone the pale ghosts of the armies of Lafayette. They landed at the ports of France and marched rapidly toward the front.

While this troop movement was proceeding, on the farms of the West we were producing foodstuffs for our armies, foodstuffs for the demands of our allies, foodstuffs for the people of the countries which had been devastated by war. The god of battles fought on our side. It was not long until, if the planet Mars is inhabited, and if they have there telescopes no stronger than ours, and if they had looked down in this direction, they could have seen the color come and go in the wheat fields of Illinois, of Missouri, of Oklahoma, of Nebraska, and the other great wheat States of ours. We produced record crops in this period of the Nation's sacrifice and mobilization, crops in abundance, greater than we had ever produced before even on these fertile farms of ours. And then the boys commenced to reach the front, and as we feverishly read in the daily papers the news from the war zone of northern France, anxiously we looked for the death list of the boys who fought in the greatest battles ever staged in the history of the world. With boundless pride we heard from them at Belleau Wood, at Chateau-Thierry, and in the wood of the Marine brigade.

And then, in the month of October, 1918, there commenced the great Argonne offensive, and we knew where these boys of ours were. They were in the line, and the Germans knew where they were, and opposite them in the line they placed the shock troops of the German Empire, the trained veteran soldiers of the greatest military nation the world ever saw; they placed opposite these untrained boys of ours the Prussian Guard, devoted to all its traditions—the Prussian Guard, which in the century of its existence never retreated before an equal or even superior force. After the great shock came, the Germans commenced to move slowly back, and then with white, trembling lips they passed the word down the long German lines, "The Americans are in the line; the Americans are in the line. They have met the Prussian Guard. The Americans have defeated the Prussian Guard." [Applause.] And then the retreat of the great armies of the greatest military nation the world ever saw became a rout, which ended only with the armistice of November 11, 1918.

The boys are home again, back from the stirring incidents and scenes of awful battle. They have returned to their places in the great army of industry in this land. They are the anchor to windward of this Nation at the present hour, when it is threatened with new danger, when communism raises here in our midst its hideous head. We sent them to war without asking their consent. Members of this House sat here in their seats and voted for the measure which compelled these boys to go to war. A million of them volunteered. Many of them were rejected on account of physical defects. But at the request of the membership of both branches of the National Congress these boys participated in this awful war 3,000 miles away across the seas and saved the civilization of the world. [Applause.]

To-day they have formulated their requests, and they have submitted them to the membership of both branches of the National Congress. They have asked the men in the Congress of the United States, who gave them no option, who took them away from the peaceful pursuits in which they were engaged, not for a bonus—I deny that any brave soldier who ever wore the uniform of this country has asked this Nation for a gift—they have asked you to compensate them in a slight measure for the financial losses they sustained. [Applause.] They have asked you out of the abundance of the Nation's resources to give to them the mere pittance of $1 a day—or a little more than that if the money is to be used for the purchase of homes and for the purchase of farms or for procuring an education—for the number of days they served in the armies of their country. And during that period of time—they call our attention to the fact—those who remained at home were making money; those who remained at home were receiving salaries greater than were ever paid before in industry in this land. Those who remained at home and pursued their ordinary business avocations made returns fabulous in amounts. During the period of this war we developed in this country 23,000 new war millionaires. During the period of this war we developed in this country 69,000 men whose income in 1914 exceeded $20,000 a year, and whose income during the war years had developed to such an extent that their income was $3,000,000,000 more than it was during the three prewar years. During this period, when these boys were at the front, the corporations of this country made during the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and during the year 1920, which was really a war year—corporations of this country made, and in their tax returns they admit they made, $3,800,000,000 more than they did in the same number of prewar years. In other words, the excess-war income of corporations—and they were making enough before then, making more than they ever made in the history of this Nation—the excess of the war incomes of the corporations of this land over an equal number of prewar years was $3,800,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. For one question.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is that net income of which you are speaking?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes, sir; in order that there may be no mistake about it, I quote the exact language of the Government actuary:

> Mr. McCoy estimates that the aggregate net income of all corporations for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 in excess of four times the average net income for the prewar period plus the income, excess profits, and war profits taxes paid during 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, is $3,800,000,000. If you exclude from this computation corporations whose average net income for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 do not exceed $100,000, the excess income is not more than $2,000,000,000.

During the three prewar years I have mentioned the corporations of this land whose average yearly income before the war exceeded $100,000, and that is a corporation which is not entitled to much sympathy, at the present time, when it comes to levying taxes, earned an excess war income aggregating $2,000,000,000.

I remember that after our declaration of war the great Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, which is charged with the duty of preparing revenue bills, met, and during the awful months of that war the members of this committee were in continuous session, in session almost daily, and often they worked late in the night. With a feeling of pride I recall that in the hour of the Nation's danger, in the hour when our financial resources were strained as they had never been before, we forgot partisanship. The Democrats were in a majority, a sufficient working majority of this House, and could have carried through any of their propositions. But we discarded that kind of partisanship. For the first time in the history of the work of that great committee we invited the minority members—at that time the Republicans were in the minority in this House—we invited minority members to consult with us and to participate with us in the preparation of these great war bills. We had the benefit of their counsel and the benefit of their advice, many suggestions made by the Republican members of that committee found their way into the laws of the land—the laws which made it possible to win this war—and every one of these great war measures, the greatest ever reported out of this body, the greatest ever enacted into law in the history of the world, came out with the unanimous support and with the unanimous report of the members of that great committee.

There never was a dissenting vote in the committee on any one of these war measures. If any member of the minority objected to any of the features, and we never knew they did until we commence to hear from them now on the hustings in this land, they did not make it known there in the committee. They agreed with all the other members of the committee. And if they had made it known there, and if their objection was tenable, and if a majority of the committee had been able to agree with them, if a majority of the Republicans, even, had agreed with them, that item would never have gone into any one of those bills. I make that statement without the slightest fear of successful contradiction.

The war is not over yet. An armistice has merely been declared. In the nations of the world war still continues. No man can tell how soon we will be engulfed again in these world struggles with these new world issues. The membership of this House has changed. The majority sits on that side of the aisle, not where it sat during the years of the war. And already, with the approach of the campaign, the majority as represented on the great Ways and Means Committee, forgetting the generosity of the Democratic majority during the war, anxious only to seize a mean, small partisan advantage, have excluded from their deliberations the Democratic members of that committee, and are to-day engaged in framing the most important war bill, because that is what it is, that has ever been presented since this war started, since we became involved, a bill to comply with the request of 4,500,000 of our brave soldiers, and they propose now to say to these young men—and nearly all of them will be voting this fall—they propose to say to these young men, "A Democratic Congress sent you to the war, but a Republican Congress has framed this bill for your relief. A Republican Congress is giving you now the equalized pay that you have requested. The Democrats have had nothing to do with it. We have excluded them from our committee rooms."

So they proceeded to draft a bill, and Republican Members have been summoned from far and near to respond to the party whip and the party mandate and make it possible for the Republican Party to fool 4,500,000 young men, and to say to them, "We gave you this bonus."

On behalf of those young men I repudiate the insult tendered by the Republican majority in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I deny that they can be fooled by any such mean, poor, little tactics as those on the part of the Republican majority. Oh, you can not help it. In these days of danger here, danger to our institutions and danger abroad, the cloven foot appears as it always has in the history of your party, and as it always will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You are in a position to-day, after the meeting of your steering committee yesterday—the resuts of which were announced in the papers this morning—you are in the position, and unblushingly you occupy it, of saying to the 4,500,000 brave soldiers and sailors, brave boys who can see into these things as clearly as you can, "The Republican Party in the approaching elections are offering you $1.25 a day for your votes this fall."

Do you suppose when they find out the nature of that bribe, when they know that you who sit here——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentlemen from Illinois to order. It is an insult to the membership of the House on both sides. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Republican majority of the Committee on Ways and Means have not offered an insult to anybody, and the gentleman from Illinois well knows it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No; I do not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I want to say to the gentleman that I do not want to offend the gentleman at all. I do not want to do it. I will only state the facts, then, and the country can draw its own conclusions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will not comment on them. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If it hurts the feelings of gentlemen on that side—and many of you are my friends—I may say that I hope many of you, perhaps the majority of you, do not agree with the conclusions reached by your steering committee and by the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means. I say that when Democrats are not permitted to participate in these deliberations you can not expect, no matter if you subconsciously want to do it, to have the 4,500,000 brave boys fail to see through such a subterfuge as that as the elections approach.

Let me tell you what you have done: If we are to believe the statements you have given out to the morning papers, you propose to collect this tax, this bonus, by resorting to a general sales tax, the character of tax which has not been extensively imposed in the world since the feudal ages, the character of tax which no nation in the world attempts to any degree to impose at the present time except unfortunate, misgoverned Mexico and the small populations of the Philippine Islands.

It is here you find your precedents. I know you gentlemen; I understand your methods. You will put some cushions in this bill. You will put something in there that taxes to a slight degree, perhaps, tobacco, or the stock exchanges in our cities, or you may make a slight increase in some portion of the income tax. But you are going to yield to the demands of Wall Street. You are going to yield to the demands of the millionaire war profiteers of this country and impose the sales tax they want imposed, because they think that when imposed once we will never be able to get rid of it, because they want to escape some portion of the taxes on the immense incomes they are enjoying at the present time. A tax on sales means an increase in the cost of living. A tax on sales such as you propose, if it is a tax on turnovers, means an increase in the cost of living of 25 per cent. A tax on the ultimate retailers will be a resort to the merchant sales taxes of the feudal ages, when armed soldiers of feudal thieves and barons were able to terrorize the merchants of those unfortunate countries and to impose the burden of taxes upon them and maintain in that way their great military establishments. It is the merchant tax you propose—condemned by Adam Smith, condemned by Roescher, condemned by every political economist who has ever written in the last hundred years—you, in your anxiety to protect the rich of this land, have resorted to the old merchant tax of the feudal ages.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, without reading, I ask permission to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD the criticisms of the great economic writers of the world for the last 50 years on this character of a tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the data he has mentioned. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is it that the gentleman proposes to insert in the RECORD?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I intend to insert in the RECORD extracts from Roescher, Adam Smith, J. P. Hobson, and statistical writers of the present day in the magazines of Europe, discussing the kind of tax which the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means expect to impose upon the citizens of this country.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. About how much space will it probably cover?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Perhaps less than a page of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman insert the page number of the magazines and the books for the benefit of the House?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; I will be glad to do it.

At this point I desire to dwell briefly upon the constitutionality of the taxation plan I desire to submit to the House for its determination. The objection has been made that you can not tax incomes that have been already taxed under the Constitution of the United States; that the proposition I am suggesting is unconstitutional for the reason that it is retroactive. In reply to this I merely desire to call attention to the case of Stockdale v. Insurance Companies (20 Wall., 323, 331) and the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in that case in passing on this very question. I read from the opinion:

> The right of Congress to have imposed this tax by a new statute, although the measure of it was governed by the income of the past year, can not be doubted; much less can it be doubted that it could impose such a tax on the income of the current year, though part of that year had elapsed when the statute was passed. The joint resolution of July 4, 1864, imposed a tax of 5 per cent upon all income of the previous year, although one tax on it had already been paid, and no one doubted the validity of the tax or attempted to resist it.

The above case is cited briefly and approvingly in the case of Brushaber v. United States Pacific Railroad (240 U. S., 2).

Income-tax laws are frequently retroactive. The income-tax profits of our tariff act of 1913 were retroactive. They imposed taxes from December, 1913, to December, 1914, and thereafter but they were also retroactive and covered the period from March 1, 1913, to December, 1913, and this bill became a law on October 3, 1913. The retroactive operation of this law was challenged in the case to which I have last called attention. The courts held that we could have made the taxes retroactive and extended them back to the time the sixteenth amendment became operative.

These statutes are constitutional. Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken L. & I. Co. (18 How., 272, 282); Nichols v. United States (7 Wall., 122); and other cases cited—page 5, Union Pacific Railroad case (240 U. S.).

The so-called retroactive feature is not objectionable. Previous statutes had like provisions; Twelfth Statute, pages 292, 473, 474; Thirteenth Statute, pages 223, 281, 283, 417; and other statutes cited page 8, Union Pacific Railroad case.

The text of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution is this:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

The statute was enacted October 3, 1913, and provided for a general yearly income tax from December to December of each year. Exceptionally, however, it fixed a first period embracing only the time from March 1 to December 31, 1913, and this limited retroactivity is assailed as repugnant to the due-process clause of the fifth amendment and as inconsistent with the sixteenth amendment itself. But the date of the retroactivity did not extend beyond the time when the amendment was operative, and there can be no dispute that there was power by virtue of the amendment during that period to levy the tax, without apportionment, and so far as the limitations of the Constitution in other respects are concerned, the contention is not open. Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad (240 U. S., p. 20).

Other nations in the world propose to levy war taxes more drastic than anything we expect to present to this House. I desire to call attention in this connection to the memoranda by the board of inland revenue in England, which in its studies suggested that taxes be levied not only on "war incomes" but on "war-created wealth," exempting $20,000.

Paragraph 57 of the report to which I am calling attention discusses this subject and presents the viewpoint of this important and conservative board. In paragraph 13 of the report this board calls attention particularly to war profits which favorably situated traders accumulated during the war by charging exorbitant prices for commodities sold to the Government or fellow citizens. They also suggest, in paragraph 15, that the increased wealth of individuals on account of the war should be taxed, not only the wealth which resulted from excessive profits but the increased money value of the assets which they owned prior to the war due to the anticipation of earning power in the future. In paragraph 26 the board of inland revenue announces that they view as practical a consideration of the aggregate wealth of individuals at the present time as compared with prewar wealth, and suggests a graduated levy upon the balance of the increase shown.

In paragraph 24 of this report they approvingly call attention to the propositions laid down by Mr. J. A. Hobson, the great English economist, in his new book on Taxation in the New State. This is the latest contribution on this important subject, and Mr. Hobson is one of the world's acknowledged conservative authorities. The proposition of Mr. Hobson, to which, in paragraph 24, the board of inland revenue approvingly calls attention, is a proposition to the effect that increases of wealth during the war have an exceptional "ability to pay," and that this ability increases as the ratio of the increase grows. In his book Mr. Hobson says "the increase has come into the hands of its owners as the result of fortuitous circumstances or even of culpable practices." He advocates the exemption of small proportionate increases.

In commenting upon this section of Mr. Hobson's book, they say that "it is upon such lines as these that a practicable duty would appear to be capable of construction."

I call attention also in this connection to what some of the leading writers on economic subjects are saying in the columns of conservative English magazines. Of course, in this country there are few magazines and newspapers which are not controlled by the interests, and no attention is given in the columns of these interest-controlled publications of ours to the discussion of the new methods of taxation which must come to the relief of a bankrupt world in the crisis which confronts all the nations, including our own.

The Statist of November 8, 1919, contains this frank statement: "Putting all hypocrisy and special pleading aside, it is absolutely necessary that a special taxation be laid upon the rich," and the statement I have just read is quoted approvingly in the English Review of December, 1919. In an article by A. Emil Davies, L. C. C., on "Capital levy and superlevy," in the English Review of December, 1919, page 542, Mr. Davies says (and I take the liberty of somewhat abridging his remarks):

> While a levy on accumulated war profits would not produce sufficient to extinguish the war debt, yet properly worked such a levy would produce a very large sum.
> It is proper to tax one man more than another because he happens to be cleverer or has better judgment, such judgment being based upon the belief that the war would benefit certain industries. (Id., p. 542.)
>
> It is folly to abuse people for making large profits. Anyone would do it. But a belated war profits levy would redress the economic evils of the present system, which have been accentuated by the war. (Id., p. 544.)
>
> I prophesy that the agitation against war fortunes, which is the root of the profound discontent operating in the minds of the industrial population in the country, will result sooner or later in a special levy upon accumulated war fortunes and in a general levy upon capital over a certain amount per head for the purpose of bringing about a drastic reduction of the national debt. (Id., p. 544.)
>
> If nothing of this nature is done I prophesy so serious a financial breakdown that the present governing class will give up their job in despair, leaving it to a labor or, possibly, a revolutionary government to tackle a situation that may well be almost irremediable. (Id., p. 551.)
>
> The recent labor disturbances are merely the first of a series of struggles whereby the rich on the one hand and the mass of the workers on the other are endeavoring to place the burden of the war upon each other. (Id., p. 551.)
>
> On paper, the wealth of the Nation has increased from round about fourteen thousand millions in 1913 to about twenty thousand millions. (Id., p. 552.)
> Most of that paper confers a lien over a great part of the labor of the workers of the country and is held by a comparatively small section of the community. Until at least one-half of that paper is wiped out, deflated, we shall have neither industrial peace nor increased production. (Id., p. 552.)

I studied political economy at Amherst College, Massachusetts, in a conservative New England town set down in a beautiful valley in the very center of that great industrial State, and I am sure that the professors in that institution, surrounded by the influences with which they were and are surrounded, presented to their students a textbook which was conservative. We were required to study the leading textbook in those days on political economy, and perhaps the leading textbook now, Roescher's Political Economy.

Without comment at this time, I desire to read some brief extracts from that distinguished author. I may comment on them hereafter in my speech. I read them now for the purpose of indicating how dangerous a proposition it is to adopt a system of taxes which makes more of the very rich and more of the very poor, and which destroys the great middle class in the Nation.

The element of danger and destruction is when "a whole nation falls into the hands of a few rich men and numberless proletarians." (Roescher's Political Economy.)

This most often happens as an "off-spring of a degenerated democracy." (Id.)

When this happens there comes a "disappearance of the great middle class." (Id.)

"Get rich," they cry to the famishing poor. (Id.)

In this sort of a democracy "capital takes the place of men and is valued more than men." (Id.)

All colossal fortunes are made at the expense of others—either with the assistance of the State powers or by speculation in the fluctuation of values. (Id.)

So great and one sided a difference is, for men too far removed from one another for real mutual love, doubtless one of the greatest of moral temptations. (Id.)

It is as easy a matter for the hopelessly poor to hate the law as it is for the overrich to despise it. (Id.)

At one time six men owned the entire Roman Provinces of Africa and Nero ruthlessly executed all of them, taking possession of their properties. (Id.)

I will not be making a mistake, I am sure, if at the present time I read from Adam Smith's book, entitled "Causes of the Wealth of Nations," inasmuch as the Republican majority of this House, if they follow the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, propose to return to the tax on merchants which was in force in the dark days of the Middle Ages. I read from Adam Smith:

During the barbarous times of feudal anarchy merchants, like all the other inhabitants of burghs, were considered a little better than emancipated bondsmen whose persons were despised and whose gains were envied. (P. 598.)

In those ignorant times it was not understood that the profits of merchants are a subject not taxable directly, or that the final payment of all such taxes must fall with a considerable overcharge upon the consumers. (Id., p. 598.)

Heavy taxes upon commodities which are real necessaries of life must increase the expense of the sober and industrious poor and must consequently raise more or less the wages of their labor. (Id., p. 694.)

It must always be remembered, however, that it is the luxurious and not the necessary expense of the inferior ranks of people that ought ever to be taxed. (Id., p. 706.)

Now, I want to tell you why they exclude the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee from the consideration of this bill. We stand for the fourfold propositions of the American Legion, just as they have expressed themselves before the committee. We are anxious to put those propositions into workable shape, to provide suitable administrative sections so that they can be carried into effect. There is no difference between the Republican members and the Democratic members of the committee in that, except that the Republican members of the committee, in violation of the wishes of the American Legion and these other soldiers' organizations, propose to exclude officers and nurses and yeomanettes and field clerks who occupied positions of danger from participation in this bonus. We are in favor of including them just as these soldiers' organizations have suggested. [Applause.]

In that particular we stand firmly upon the demands made by the boys, because we think the time has come for the boys to command in this land. They and their friends who are demanding this bonus would make up the enormous number of 25,000,000 citizens of the United States, if we could make a complete and careful inventory. This is their country. They have fought to save it. They have expressed to us their desires, and to the Democrats on that committee that expression from these boys comes now as a command.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desired to be informed when he had used 45 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Thank you. I am sorry my time is so nearly up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], who had been yielded 10 minutes under the unanimous-consent agreement, yields back that time and states that the gentleman from Illinois may use it if he cares to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; I will be glad to have it. [Applause.] We propose to tax war profits to meet this request of the boys. [Applause.] The request of the boys comes to us as a command. It does not impress you gentlemen in that way. As I express the views of the minority on that committee that this request comes to us as a command I notice that some of you gentlemen on the Republican side laugh and sneer. You are welcome to all you can get out of that. The tax you propose increases the cost of living. You propose to do that. The boys and their immediate families and friends will pay themselves one-fourth of the amount of their bonus. In other words, under this selfish desire manifested here in this House to protect war fortunes you propose to give them, you say, $1.25 a day with one hand, and then with the other hand you propose violently to take away from them 25 per cent of that amount. That is the proposition against which we rebel, because we insist on an opportunity for this House to vote upon the question as to whether or not you ought to finance this soldiers' adjusted compensation out of the poor of the land or out of those who built up colossal fortunes during the war. You refuse to permit that to come to a vote in this House.

Your plan is this: On suspension day, which is May 3 next, to obtain recognition from the Speaker—and you can do that—to move to consider this great bill under suspension of the rules. The people of the country ought to know that this plan means that there will be no opportunity to amend the bill in any part, which, in secret caucus, the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee are this afternoon preparing. We agreed, before you excluded the Democrats, upon the essential provisions of the bill. You knew we would not agree with you on the character of the taxes you propose, and for over a week the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, behind locked doors, alone have been figuring out how to impose this obnoxious sales tax in such a manner that war profiteers, whether individuals or corporations, will escape entirely from its burdens. When the matter comes on for a vote, under that plan and under the rules of this House, the vote must be on the combined motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. After those who are opposed to your methods of taxation and your plan to protect war millionaires have been permitted to do nothing but discuss the matter, and to discuss the matter only 20 minutes, but after discussing it, no matter how long they discuss it, they can not under the rules vote to strike out your obnoxious sales-tax proposition and to insert therein a proposition to tax war profiteers. The only way to defeat the discreditable program you have adopted is to defeat the entire bill and then in the sanity which follows attempt to try to present the bill again, giving those of us an opportunity, on both sides of this Chamber, who are opposed to your antiquated, out-of-date sales-tax method, to propose to substitute for it a tax on war profiteers, and perhaps other sane, proper, unoppressive, up-to-date methods of levying taxes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; I will be glad to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Can the gentleman give the assurance that it will be possible for those of us on this side of the House who believe in taxing war profits to agree with the gentlemen on your side of the House who believe in taxing war profits—and there are many on your side who do not believe in it—can the gentleman give any assurance that we can agree on a motion to recommit, or to have a substitute that will tax war profits?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will say that if the majority of the Ways and Means Committee will permit us to vote on that proposition, we will agree with those on that side who are courageous enough to do the right thing. [Applause.] I want to say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who is my friend—I believe in handing flowers to men while they live—I want to say to him that he represents on this floor, as you and you and you do not, the real desires of the soldiers of this land [applause], because in the hour of danger he left his safe place here far from German guns and took his place among the boys of his State at the front. [Applause.] He bared his bosom to the bullets of the foe; and a young man who is courageous enough to do that, I predict, will not bow to a party mandate and assist in imposing upon the soldiers of this land and their friends the obligation of paying one-fourth of the bonus you are pretending to hand to them. [Applause.] And there are seven other men in this body if I remember correctly—they sit on both sides of this Hall—every one of whom left his safe place here and actively participated in the World War. They were all within military age, and they all wore the uniform of their country. They all crossed the seas and faced the bullets of the foe. I will be surprised if any of them, brave as all of them were, will yield to a party mandate and refuse to give this House the opportunity of determining one thing, and one thing alone, and that is whether we will tax the wage earners of this land, and the soldiers of this land, to pay this soldiers' compensation, or whether we will tax these corporations of $100,000 profits and over, who made war profits of $2,000,000,000 during the last three years, or the 69,000 men, 23,000 of them new war millionaires, who made of war profits alone $3,000,000,000 during the years of this war.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman agrees with me that there is but one great question involved in this law?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And that is the method that we shall use in raising the money.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; that is my position.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And the gentleman agrees that if there could be presented to this House just that one concrete thing, we could agree on both sides of the House that we could accept the judgment of the Ways and Means Committee with reference to the other features of the bill. Is that true?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. On behalf of the minority of this House, I will say that is true. [Applause.] There may be men, of course, on both sides of the House who will vote against the entire proposition.

I want to say to those men in this House who fought in this war that the time has come for you to help the other soldiers, and that you ought to demand of this millionaire steering committee which controls the destinies of this House that they cease their efforts to protect the war profiteers of this land by tenderly avoiding the necessity of taking away from them for this purpose any war incomes. [Applause.] And in order that the country may know who these gentlemen are who have framed up this proposition, who have controlled the policies of that side until now—I do not know whether they will control them any more or not—these are their names: THOMAS B. DUNN, of New York. [Applause on Republican side.] I hope you gentlemen will all applaud as I read them, because I shall have something to say about them when I get through. [Laughter.] MARTIN B. MADDEN, of Illinois. I see you have quit applauding. SAMUEL E. WINSLOW, of Massachusetts. [Applause on Republican side.] Thank you. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, of Ohio. [Applause on Republican side.] I am delighted to note the acclaim with which you gentlemen hail the very mention of the names of this millionaire steering committee who are carefully steering the affairs of this Congress [applause] so that these corporations which made $2,000,000,000 of excess war profits and these 69,000 men who made $3,000,000,000 of excess war profits will be tenderly cared for and will not be compelled by this House to give up any of their war earnings. [Applause.]

These gentlemen whose names I have read are reputed to be millionaires, every one of them, and they have never been heard to deny it. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

On this side we follow the leadership of a great man who came from the ranks. In spite of the adverse action of a prior Democratic national convention, he towers to-day high upon the horizon of the Nation. [Applause.] We follow the leadership of a man whose career in this House has been longer than the career of almost any other Member of this House. He is my nearest congressional neighbor; we live just 35 miles apart. I know something about him. I knew him when he was a young lawyer making more money than he makes now. I knew him when he owned broad acres of fertile land and had his share of this world's goods; but after all these years of honest service for his country, if he will sit down and inventory his effects, he will find that he has not as much as he had when he entered this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. All of us on this side of the House agree to the things the gentleman has said with reference to the Democratic leader.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I do not know whether all of you do or not, but those do who have good judgment. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Can the gentleman assure us that the minority leader will agree to this proposition and join with us in the proposal of what should be taxed?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield, I assure the gentleman from South Dakota that every Democrat will vote for the proposition just urged by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY]. We will all line up. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman's committee and party were in the majority when these gentlemen were making these billions that he speaks of, and we needed billions then to run the Government. Why did he not take them when they were making it rather than to borrow the money?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. We did, and you helped us make the bills; we took all the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee would permit us to take. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the gentleman states that they made an excess of two or three billions. Why not take it at the time they were making it?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I am attempting to put nothing in the RECORD that has not been corroborated by the actuaries.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman mean to say that they made $2,000,000,000 in excess, over and above the taxes that they paid?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No; I have read the exact language of the Government actuary; the figures are not my figures. Taxes heretofore paid are not included.

Mr. PLATT. Then it is all nonsense.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. It is not nonsense, but it is nonsense to attempt to protect them from any further taxes. I would not leave anything of excess war profits if I had my way [applause on the Democratic side], and I would be in perfect harmony with what other nations of the world propose to do.

Of course, you would expect no other answer than what has just been made by the Democratic leader on this side. We follow also that other leader, poorer now than when he entered the House, who had enough courage to violate the advice of his physician and come to this House and speak in defense of the Constitution of the United States as forcefully as he always speaks, and who was carried from this building stricken by paralysis at the conclusion of his speech, carried on a stretcher, and who to-day is confined to his room in this city—the Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, of North Carolina. God speed his recovery, and may the time be not far distant when, completely restored to health, he will take his place again in this House. [Applause.] I am speaking to-day as the next ranking member on that committee in his place on this floor, but if he were here to-day he would rise in his place as our great leader has just risen and would agree with him on this proposition. You follow the leadership of this committee of distinguished gentlemen, gentlemen of high personal character, these gentlemen with millions of money to whom I have just called attention. You, or the majority of you, have so far followed them blindly.

I want to say to these four gentlemen who control you and your votes—and I make this challenge—if you gentlemen on this steering committee and you Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee—and there are three Republican millionaires on that committee, too—I make this challenge, that if you will tell what your income was in 1914 and will authorize a disinterested committee to investigate the returns up in the Treasury Department and will tell us what your income was during the war, we can tell whether you are war beneficiaries or not; and on behalf of myself, on behalf of the leader of this House, the gentleman from Missouri, on behalf of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and on behalf of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, I promise that if you accept this challenge we will do likewise. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And it may be when the results are compared and presented in the newspapers of this land, possibly then the soldiers and their friends will know why you propose on the 3d day of May to force the taxing features you have drafted down the throats of the people of this country if you can, without an opportunity to amend and after only 40 minutes' debate, and after we have only had 20 minutes on this side, and without an opportunity to lay any burdens, no matter how light they may be, on the war beneficiaries, on the war corporations who are so tenderly protected by the Republican leaders in this House. If you want to go into the approaching campaign with such a record as that, we accept the challenge. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I charge that you know you can not get this bill through with these obnoxious provisions in it on the 3d day of May. You hope to be able to whip enough Republicans into line to show that more Republicans voted for it than Democrats, and then you intend to drop this bill until after the elections, so that you can go out and say, "These are the Democrats who voted against this proposition to protect the war beneficiaries of this land," except that you will not phrase it in that way, "and these are the few Republicans who voted that way." Therefore you think the soldiers of this land can tell from that what they ought to do. You have hold of a proposition in your method of taxation which is so hot that you would like to let go of it, if you could, but you do not know how to do it, and in this manner you propose to kill the bill and you hope to escape the responsibility of killing it.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. For a very brief question.

Mr. TINCHER. I have in my hand H. R. 13156, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY]. I want to ask him if that is his idea of the way to raise the money to pay this bonus—his own bill introduced on March 19, 1920?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. That is one of my ideas.

Mr. TINCHER. That is the plan that the gentleman is advocating now that the House should adopt?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I am not now advocating that plan in its entirety.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman introduced this bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I introduced that bill, and it is a better bill than any Republican Member of this House has introduced.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman know of anyone who has introduced the plan which he is advocating to-day?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; part of it is included in that bill, and the proposition to tax also war corporations is in the bill introduced by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who is one of the Republican leaders of this House.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to study the gentleman's plan.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will tell you what it is, and the gentleman can make a study of it with great profit to himself.

Mr. TINCHER. I have the gentleman's bill here.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. My plan is to levy a tax upon those 69,000 war beneficiaries who received over $3,000,000,000 in war profits, and upon those corporations who received over $2,000,000,000 in war profits above their normal profits. I want to tax them. I want to be permitted by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to have the opportunity upon the part of the Democrats of the House and the Republicans who are opposed to a sales tax to present here, if we can agree on it, and we can agree, a proposition compelling war beneficiaries among the corporations and the individuals of the land to contribute what they ought in good conscience to contribute to this great fund.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No; I can not yield further. I do not care if you put into your bill a tax upon certain luxuries, nor upon stock exchanges or things of that kind. You can put those in, if you want to; but what I want is the opportunity for free legislation in this House, the opportunity to present other suggestions than the proposition of tenderly protecting the war millionaires and the wealth of this country.

It is not necessary to disguise the situation. There is a contest on in this country to-day and throughout the world to find out who is going to bear the brunt of these stupendous war debts. Wealth, on the one hand, is seeking to avoid that burden, and through the sales tax of the Middle Ages and the merchant taxes of 700 years ago it is seeking to impose that burden upon the people of the land. They are endeavoring here to get through a scheme of taxes which will tax for this patriotic fund the man whose income is only $500 a year just as much as the man whose income is $1,000,000 a year. That is what you are proposing to do and that is what we want to prevent, if we can, and if we can pursuade enough of you gentlemen to be fair enough to desert these millionaire committees of yours and vote down these obnoxious propositions on the 3d day of May, when the Republican millionaire steering committee tries to cram them down the throats of the farmers and the laboring men of this land, then we will be able to meet again after that sort of a discipline these Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means around the council board, and we will be able at least to get them to consent and to get this millionaire steering committee of yours to consent after they have been so disciplined to permit us to submit here to this House the opportunity of determining, as the makers of the Constitution thought you ought to determine in this House, the character of taxes you want.

There is not anything new about the tax proposed in my bill, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], and I am sorry I could not yield to him longer, for I do not want to be discourteous to any gentleman. This fight that I have described is going on all over the world. There is a fight in this country now to increase the number of the rich, to increase the number of the very poor, and to wipe out of existence the great middle class, to make a nation of a few rich men and of a numberless proletarian class, and that is the condition which has confronted every great nation in the history of the world just before its dissolution. That is the condition this steering committee of yours is hurrying up in this country of ours by resorting to this method of taxation. They realize the danger now in England. In England in the month of October last the House of Commons appointed a special committee, which they called a committee to tax war wealth, and that special committee delegated at once to the board of inland revenue of England the task of making preliminary studies. The board of inland revenue made its preliminary study and made its report late in November. The board of inland revenue found in its report that war wealth can be taxed, and that war wealth should be taxed, and in that report, which you may now find at the bookstores in this country and at all of the bookstores in England, they make 48 suggestions as to methods of approaching this tax. They quote approvingly the work of F. A. Hobson, the greatest economic writer of the day, who has just issued from the press in London a new book on economic questions, which he calls "Taxation in the New State." He approves taxing war fortunes. In England they can do that; in this country we can not. In England, if they follow the suggestions contained in these preliminary studies, and they are still working on the proposition there and have not determined yet what to do, they will tax even war increases of wealth, reaching the increase in value of property on account of its supposed increased earning capacity due to the war.

In France they are still discussing not a tax on war incomes alone but they are discussing there a tax upon capital, and writers on economic subjects are insisting that if the problems of the present are to be solved they must be solved by resorting to a system of taxes new in the history of the world. You gentlemen are not up to the economic thought of the present day; you cling to the theories of long ago. You do not realize, so far are you behind the times, that you stand to-day in a new world, a world which faces bankruptcy, and we will follow the other nations rapidly along that course if your method of increasing millionaires and increasing the numberless proletarian class of this land is to prevail.

But the time has come in this body for constructive statesmanship——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Would the gentleman from Illinois not agree with me that in order effectually to answer the argument put forth by the gentleman it will be necessary for anyone replying to him to show the relative merit of the consumption or sales tax?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes, indeed it would. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am glad I am able to agree with my courageous young friend——

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I understand the gentleman is proposing——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will say to the gentleman I would yield indefinitely if they would give me indefinite time.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not true that these men who may have made great profits during the war have already paid into the Treasury 60 per cent of their income and have invested the remaining 40 per cent in enlarging their plants? Are we to understand that you propose to compel them to turn this property into money and pay it into the Treasury. Would this not be confiscation? In what other way can you get the money?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. How are you going to get it? On the assumption they have already invested their excess profits, how are you going to get the money?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Those are war profits——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I am very anxious to answer questions, and I will ask unanimous consent to proceed for 20 minutes longer, and I will agree to answer all questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will occupy that time in answering questions and will be glad to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time was fixed by unanimous consent at 1 hour and 40 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The time was fixed in the House by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes, however, it would be in order for a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Certainly; there is no question about it, if gentlemen on the Republican side really want to hear my answers to their questions.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly it would not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I regret that I have no more time.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an agreement with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] with regard to the use of the 30 minutes of time now remaining. I will ask the gentleman if he desires that he be yielded half of that time?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. RHODES. Then I will state, Mr. Chairman, that one-half of the 30 minutes is to be controlled by myself and the remaining 15 minutes by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. RHODES. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for the five minutes yielded me.

The CHAIRMAN. That is unnecessary, unless some one objects.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the thought occurred to me while the gentleman from Illinois was speaking, in whom I have the greatest confidence as a financier, that he has introduced a bill to raise this money to pay the bonus, and I sent to the document room and got a copy of the bill that the gentleman himself has introduced, and I supposed that he would say that was the measure he favored, as it was introduced March 19, after he had sat in the Ways and Means Committee personally, not with closed doors, and heard testimony of the soldier boys who, as he terms it, demand this legislation. I supposed that I could depend upon that as his idea of raising this revenue, but for some reason he will not accept it. Why? Because it is along the same line as the speech he has just delivered in this House. It was not made for a law; it was made to catch votes. It provides a system of taxation on the man who paid the income tax during the war that would bankrupt every retail merchant in America who paid an income tax during the war. I agree with the gentleman that we should reach these millionaires who made the $2,000,000,000. I condemn the administration that permitted them to filch from the American public during the war, and I will vote for a measure taking that money from them. We have hundreds of places to put it without paying it in a soldier bonus, but that will not afford an excuse for being against the soldiers that did not demand but asked for a bonus. We will still be in session and you can try out your 69,000 war profiteers fostered by your administration who were permitted to filch from the American public as they have done.

We can still pass laws to cover many deficiencies that exist now by reason of your mismanagement and still pass laws directing billions of dollars to pay those deficiencies. I say to the gentleman that he, as the now acting ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, to a new Member of Congress stands in poor light in saying to me that I can not rely upon his plan which was introduced as late as March 19 for taxing the war profiteers. There is a lot of talk about this, and there is a lot of buncombe about your advocating a plan of taxes for war profiteers. Put your plan in writing. There is nothing in the world to hold the Democratic minority of the Ways and Means Committee from doing what you contemplated doing in March. Reduce your plan to writing for raising this or any other revenue and put it in the form of a bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I have but five minutes, and I believe the gentleman declined to yield to me when he had 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yielded to every gentleman, I think, on that side.

Mr. TINCHER. Here is a tax law introduced by the gentleman that proposes to go back and take the income tax returns of 1917, 1918, and 1919—take 50 per cent of the profits made by anyone in excess of $20,000 away from him; no exceptions, except those whose incomes were large in 1914.

Your bill would not reach the really rich man, but would catch the medium business man.

Your bill makes no provision for a man who lost as much in 1919 as he made in 1917 and 1918 combined.

Your bill makes no effort to care for the retail merchant that must stand a loss whenever the articles on his shelves go down in price, as we all know they must go down.

I want to make this suggestion: I studied this bill when it was introduced. Why? Because that bill as a law would bankrupt every man in the United States engaged in the enterprise of producing live stock, and who paid an income tax those years. In my district there is not a live-stock man but that piece of punk legislation, introduced for the purpose of catching flies, if enacted into law, would render bankrupt. I am just a little tired of hearing that kind of stuff and sitting still and not replying, and so I asked for this time of five minutes to refer to this bill offered by the gentleman, who took an hour and a half to defend his own plan, and then did not do it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman ought to give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] an opportunity to repudiate his bill.

Mr. TINCHER. He did practically repudiate it while speaking when I asked him about it.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RIDDICK], the author of the bill.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Chairman, S. 2890 as amended by the House Indian Committee is substantially the bill I introduced as H. R. 9709. It provides for the allotment of lands and other property belonging to the Crow Indian Tribe in Montana.

The Crow Indian Reservation is in the southeastern part of Montana. It is a small empire in extent, being nearly four times the size of the State of Rhode Island. It is a historic spot, the scene of Custer's last stand. It is a beautiful country with snow-capped mountains, picturesque valleys, and rolling plains. Its soil is fertile and it is well watered with mountain streams. Its grasses are so plentiful and so nutritious that the cattle which feed there are reported to be the finest grass-fed cattle that reach the Chicago market. This vast and rich territory, comprising nearly 2,000,000 acres, is occupied and owned in common by the 300 Indian families who reside there. There are about 1,700 of these Indians, all told, including adults and children.

In addition to owning this land in common there is also a tribal herd of cattle numbering more than 15,000 head. There is money in the bank belonging to this tribe of Indians amounting to over a quarter of a million dollars.

These Indians are held as wards of the United States Government, and their business is looked after for them under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the Department of the Interior.

Although this tribe of Indians is possessed of great wealth, if one would visit this reservation one would see little evidence of prosperity or comfort. The Indians, most of them, live in poorly constructed shacks. They spend a great deal of their time in idleness or play, there being little individual incentive to go to work, and the population is decreasing.

A great many of these Indians are competent to look after their own personal and business affairs. They have had the privilege of years of schooling and of commingling with their white brothers in cities and towns and among neighboring ranches.

Some of these Indians have great wealth in their own right. Some are among the best-educated Indians in the country. The Indians are all dissatisfied with the present arrangement. For many years they have held frequent council meetings and have decided that they want to each own his own property in his own right. They do not want to longer be wards of the Government. They desire full citizenship and to stand on their own resources as soon as they are able to do so.

The simple purpose of this bill is to equitably divide this land and this other property, held in common by the tribe, and to give to each Indian his individual share, and to determine what Indians are fully capable of administering their own affairs. The bill provides that those who are competent shall be placed upon their own resources and be given all their property and all the rights and privileges of citizenship under proper safeguards. It also provides for those not yet fully competent, and that these may as rapidly as possible be made independent of the guardianship exercised over them by the United States Government, and be given that individual responsibility which is the ultimate achievement aimed at in the proper settlement of what is known as the Indian problem. This has been the wise and consistent policy of Congress in the past.

In the opinion of the Indian Committee, which recommends the passage of this bill, the Crow Indians have now reached a position where the ownership of their land and their property can be safely intrusted to them.

Exhaustive hearings have been given on this bill, both by the Senate Indian Committee and by the House Indian Committee.

Delegates of the Crow Indian tribe have been present at these committee meetings and are now here in Washington, and are unanimous in expressing the earnest desire that the Congress shall pass this bill in its present form as promptly as possible.

Ex-Secretary Lane, who was Secretary of the Interior when the hearings were begun upon this measure, asked that a certain amendment recommended by him should be incorporated in the bill, and with this change recommended its passage. This amendment recommended by Secretary Lane is one of the committee amendments now incorporated in the bill. Every member of the Indian Committee favors the passage of this bill. The Indian Department has cooperated with the Indian Committees of both the Senate and the House and the Crow delegates from the Crow council, and all have agreed upon the bill in its present form and recommend its passage.

Necessarily certain safeguards must be made for the mutual protection of the Indians of all degrees of competency, and to these provisions there has been given careful thought in the preparation of this bill. In the division of property which is now held in common ownership every individual Indian will receive more than a thousand acres of land. Each Indian family will receive an average of about 50 head of cattle, and each family will have an average credit in the bank of about $1,000.

Of the 1,000 or more acres that will be allotted to each Indian there is a provision that 320 acres of his land shall not be sold for a period of 25 years. With the additional money that will go to these Indians from the rental or sale of their surplus lands all competent Indians may undertake the management of their own affairs under the most favorable circumstances.

One interesting provision in the bill is that such inherited Indian land as is held in trust by the United States Government on this reservation shall be sold to ex-service men who will make their residence upon the land on payments extending over 20 years' time.

There are 18 sections in the bill.

Section 1 indicates what lands shall be allotted and the procedure of making the division. About 400,000 acres of mountainous grazing land is reserved from allotment for grazing land for the tribal herd. The balance is all to be allotted.

Section 2 provides for individual development in that no sale of lands by an Indian shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior to any person who owns 640 acres or more. Any sale to such a person, either directly or indirectly, shall be void and the purchaser deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine or imprisonment, or both.

Sections 3 and 4 provide for the Secretary of the Interior to make a complete official roll of the members of the tribe and protect the Indians against fraudulent allotment.

Section 5 reserves unallotted lands now being used for agency, school, cemetery, religious, and recreation purposes.

Section 6 reserves all oil and mineral rights for the benefit of the tribe for 25 years, and provides for the leasing of such land.

Section 7 appropriates $50,000 of the Indians' money to cover the cost of making surveys and allotments and to meet other expenses.

Section 8 protects the Indian tribal funds, amounting to nearly $2,000,000, that have been expended for irrigation, by providing that the irrigation cost, which averages about $23 per acre, shall stand as a first lien against the 73,000 acres which are included in the several projects. This section also provides that no new irrigation projects shall be begun without the consent of the tribal council.

Section 9 provides that all laws of the United States prohibiting the sale of liquor in Indian territory shall continue operative in this territory.

Section 10 reserves unallotted the water-power sites for the benefit of the tribe. The committee amendment to this section, made by striking out the language in lines 5 and 6, on page 11, is made on the written request of ex-Secretary Franklin K. Lane, who wrote the chairman of the House Indian Committee, under date of October 24, 1919, that with this amendment he recommended the enactment of this bill.

Section 11 provides for an equitable division among the individual Indians of the tribal herd of cattle and for the protection and division of trust money belonging to the tribe. It also provides for the setting aside out of tribal funds of $100,000 for the support of the agency school, $50,000 for the permanent support of the agency hospital, and $50,000 to be placed in a revolving fund to be used to furnish seed, animals, machinery, and so forth, when needed by individual Indians.

Section 12 provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint a commission of three members. Two of the members are to be Indians to be selected by the Indians themselves and one is to be a representative of the Interior Department.

Section 13 provides that every member of the Crow Tribe shall designate as a homestead 640 acres of his land, and 320 acres of this homestead, including that part of the land upon which his buildings are located, he can not sell for 25 years.

Section 14 provides for the grouping of allotments so that members of a family may own their land in one body.

Section 15 provides that ex-service men who will actually settle on this land may purchase inherited Indian land held in trust by the United States on annual payments covering a 20-year period.

Section 16 grants to the State of Montana sections 16 and 36 in every township for school purposes, and provides for an appropriation to pay the Indians $5 an acre for such land.

Section 17 provides for the establishment and sale of town sites within the reservation.

Section 18 provides for an appropriation of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of tribal funds to pay the expense of Indian councils in looking after the affairs of the tribe.

This bill is prepared and is recommended by the Indian Committee and by the Indian Department in the belief that it is in the best interests of the Indians themselves and fully protects their interests in every particular.

Frank Yarlott, an educated Indian, who was sent to Washington to speak for his tribe, makes the following statement regarding this measure:

As the bill now stands, it has the unqualified indorsement of the entire tribe.

To the educated Indians who have closely watched events this seems the best solution to the long vexed "Indian problem." This means the gradual influx of white settlers, with whom the Indians will become acquainted and gradually absorb their methods of farming and cattle raising. They will come to understand the white temperament gradually and be friends.

It is the hope and desire of the Indians that their white friends will support this bill, as there was perfect harmony between the Indian Committee, the Office of Indian Affairs, and the Crow delegation. They are also anxious for the development of the reservation and believe this plan is best for all concerned.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been very carefully considered by the Indian Committee of the Senate, where extensive hearings were had, where the Indians were represented and the department was represented, and it passed the Senate and was referred to the House Committee on Indian Affairs, where it has been very carefully considered. And with certain amendments recommended by the House committee, it is unanimous in recommending the passage of the bill. The details of it have been carefully explained by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RIDDICK], and I shall not consume the time of the House in the further discusssion of it unless it be under the five-minute rule, when we take it up for consideration.

I will employ the remainder of my time in discussing another subject. I am going to discuss the proposed amendment to the Constitution empowering the President of the United States to veto separate items in an appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment to the Constitution gives the President power to veto separate items of appropriation bills. Much consideration has been given to the reduction in public expenditures by this session of Congress. Estimates have been cut down and amendments lowering amounts appropriated in various items have been added. Everyone appreciates the necessity of reducing expenses wherever possible without crippling the public service. We must economize all along the line, beginning first with our personal expenditures and extending through town, county, State, and national affairs. I heartily approve the organization of every club that has for its purpose the reduction in the cost of living. Every cent spent unnecessarily and not for investment or production contributes to the high cost of living. The time has come when Congress must set the example for economizing.

The House passed a bill—H. R. 9783—on October 20, 1919, providing for a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts. That was six months ago. The country is demanding action upon this measure. The responsibility for inaction is upon the Senate and not upon the House. We have done our duty. I gave my hearty support to the bill when it was before the House for consideration. At the same time I invited the attention of the House to a proposed amendment to the Constitution, which would permit the President of the United States to veto separate items in any appropriation bill, that I had introduced and that had been referred to the House Judiciary Committee. I made some remarks upon this resolution at the time the budget bill was being considered. I have taken occasion to call it to the attention of the Members of the House at different times since.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember the admonition given us by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that if we ever expected to have a budget passed at this session we must put it on the next appropriation bill and insist on its going through on that measure?

Mr. HASTINGS. I heard some discussion of that, I believe, from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when some conference report on an appropriation bill was up for consideration some few days ago.

I think this proposed amendment is of the very greatest importance. I want to take up a little time of the House to impress upon you the necessity for passing this proposed amendment. It will not interfere with the budget system, but it will supplement it. There has been much criticism throughout the country against so-called "logrolling" among Members of Congress. It is frequently asserted that Members from various States secure places on committees for the purpose of getting appropriations for their particular districts or States, and that some appropriations are secured that are not justified or that could be postponed. We hear much of so-called "pork barrel" legislation. We have a good many omnibus appropriation bills. When a bill passes the House and the Senate and is sent to the President, he must either approve or disapprove the entire measure. He is not at liberty to veto any separate item. I am very much interested in public expenditures and want to do everything that will effectively limit them. Having that in view, I introduced the proposed amendment to the Constitution (H. J. Res. 238):

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

Amend section 7, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States by adding the following paragraph at the end of said section:

"Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate making appropriations of money embracing distinct items shall before it becomes a law be presented to the President of the United States; if he approves, he shall sign it, but if he disapproves the bill or any item or appropriation therein contained, he shall communicate such disapproval, with his reasons therefor, to the House in which the bill shall have originated. All items not disapproved shall have the force and effect of law according to the original provision of the bill. Any item or items so disapproved shall be void, unless repassed by a two-thirds vote, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in section 7, Article I, in reference to other bills."

We have a similar provision in the constitution of the State of Oklahoma. The governor is at liberty not only to veto but reduce the amount of any item in an appropriation bill. It has been suggested that this proposed amendment be changed so as to permit the President not only to veto any separate item but to reduce any item. I think that this suggestion should be followed.

Knowing that a number of the States have adopted new constitutions within the past few years, and desiring to get as much information as possible on the subject, since the introduction of the proposed amendment I wrote a letter to the governor of each State, advising that Congress was considering budget legislation. I inquired of them as to whether or not their State had a budget system and such an amendment authorizing the governor to veto separate items of appropriation bills, and whether it had been beneficial and had resulted in a saving. I found that quite a number of the States have such a provision in their constitution. Without exception, every governor replying, where there is such a provision in force, commended it.

This is a matter of such moment that I feel justified in putting into the RECORD some of the replies received from the various governors. All of them are short. They will be useful not only to Members of the House but to people throughout the country who are giving this subject serious consideration.

The reply from the governor of Arizona is a typical one. He is permitted to veto separate items in appropriation bills, but is not permitted to reduce any item, which emphasizes the suggestion heretofore made to amend the proposed constitutional amendment so as to permit the President to reduce as well as to veto items in appropriation bills. The governor's letter reads as follows:

STATE HOUSE, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Phoenix, Ariz., December 10, 1920.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: Referring to your letter of the 4th instant in regard to the veto of items in the appropriation bills in Arizona, I cite you to Article V, section 7, of the constitution of the State of Arizona, which contains the authority similar to that in your proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

It has been the experience of Arizona that this has tended toward the keeping down of expenditures by the State legislature where it is necessary to specify the appropriations by items. It is not unusual, however, to put through "lump" appropriations in a manner that makes it necessary for the executive to approve some expenditures against his will rather than to veto other items that are just and necessary.

At the last session of the legislature a budget bill was passed, copy of which is inclosed herewith, and under this law a detailed classification of all expenditures is necessary in requesting appropriations, and this will better enable the executive to exercise his judgment in passing on and either vetoing or approving the various items.

Sincerely, yours,

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL,
Governor of Arizona.

The State of Arizona has passed a bill providing for a budget system, and the governor indicates in his reply that the authority to veto separate items will be more helpful, now that the budget bill has been passed.

The State of Alabama has no such provision in its constitution, but recently a budget system has been provided, which is strongly commended by the governor, as follows:

STATE OF ALABAMA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Montgomery, December 6, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: Your letter of the 4th instant has been received. There are no provisions in the constitution of Alabama for a budget. However, the present legislature, at its January session, enacted a law creating a budget commission, copy of which I inclose herewith.

At the adjourned session in July the budget plan was put to a test, and it worked out to our entire satisfaction. In compliance with the terms of the law, a budget was prepared and presented to the legislature for its consideration at the adjourned session, with the result that no appropriations were made in excess of the amounts contained in the budgets, and with the further result, of course, that the appropriations were held within the income of the State as estimated by the budget commission. Provisions for a budget system will undoubtedly be incorporated by amendment to our constitution or in the writing of a new constitution at a not far distant date.

I believe the budget system is worth hundreds of thousands of dollars per year to the State of Alabama, and I believe a budget system for the United States would be worth hundreds of millions per year to the Government.

Very truly, yours,

THOS. E. KILBY,
Governor.

The State of Arkansas has such a provision in its constitution, but the governor has no authority to reduce any item.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, STATE OF ARKANSAS,
Little Rock, December 8, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
National House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: By reference to section 17, article 6, of the constitution of Arkansas, you will find the following language:

"The governor shall have power to disapprove any item or items of any bills making appropriations of money embracing distinct items; and the part or parts of the bills approved shall be the law, and the item or items of appropriations disapproved shall be void, unless repassed according to the rules and limitations prescribed by the passage of other bills over the executive veto."

Trusting that this is the part of the constitution that you have in mind and that it will serve your purpose, I am,

Yours, very cordially,

JNO. L. CARTER,
Private Secretary.

Mr. BLANTON. Right there, before the gentleman leaves that point, will he permit me to ask him a question in the nature of a suggestion?

Mr. HASTINGS. I would be glad to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's line of argument is good, and along that subject I want to call his attention to what we lawyers know as a remittitur. Where a judgment goes to an appellate court in a certain amount of money, and the appellate court thinks that judgment is too great, it says to the plaintiffs below that "if you will file a remittitur reducing the amount so much in a certain time we will affirm it; otherwise we will reverse it." Thus the President might require us to reduce appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that if it should be permitted the Executive to reduce the appropriations made by the legislative power, that would be practically conferring the power of legislation upon the Executive?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; and for this reason: It does not work that way. For instance, suppose an appropriation of $100,000 is made for a particular purpose, and the governor of the State, or, if this proposed amendment is adopted, the President of the United States, thought $75,000 was sufficient. He would veto the extra $25,000. That item would come back to the House, and if the House thought that the sum ought to be $100,000 instead of $75,000, we would pass that extra $25,000 over the President's veto.

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand the gentleman's statement at the outset. I thought he could reduce it without vetoing it. I see the distinction now.

Mr. HASTINGS. No. The action is to go back in every case either to the legislature, or, in this event, to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am interested in the gentleman's statement as to the different States. In my State since 1896 the governor of the State has had the right to veto any item in an appropriation bill, and frequently he does so, and they have run over his veto or it goes out. But two years ago they adopted the budget system there, and the result was that this past legislature, which was the first one since the budget system was adopted, took all that was included in the budget and passed a million dollars more, and the result was that while our appropriation was $5,000,000 before, it ran up to $6,000,000. Is there any way to get around that? They justified everything in the budget and then added $1,000,000 more. Is there any way to get around that kind of procedure?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is no answer to budget legislation. I remember seeing the statement that during Washington's administration the annual appropriation was only $3,000,000. Now it is about $4,000,000,000. Our Government expenditures—municipal, State, and national—of course are growing more and more each year, and doubtless in the good State of South Carolina the State expenditures were perhaps not one-fifth 20 years ago what they are now. We are spending money for more things. We are doing a great deal more for the masses of the people of the country, and I doubt not that the expenditures—the legitimate expenditures—are greater in the State of South Carolina to-day, as they are in every other State, than they were 25 years ago.

Mr. STEVENSON. This increase is in one year and contemporaneous with the putting into effect of the budget system. They justified the first appropriations by putting them all into the budget and reporting the other amounts later.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have here a letter from the governor of South Carolina, in which he makes comment on the power of the veto of an item in an appropriation bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. That has been a very splendid provision. It has been used to safeguard the funds of the State frequently.

Mr. HASTINGS. The State of Colorado not only has the budget system but also has a provision in the constitution similar to the one proposed, permitting the governor to veto any item in an appropriation bill. The letter from the budget commissioner favorably commenting upon it states:

This section has proved very efficacious in holding down of State expenditures, as the governor has often exercised his right to cut various items from appropriation bills.

THE STATE OF COLORADO,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Denver, December 20, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HASTINGS: Your favor of December 4 addressed to the governor of Colorado was referred to the undersigned. In reply to your query permit me to quote section 12 of the constitution of Colorado, which answers your question:

"Governor may veto items in appropriation bills—reconsideration. The governor shall have power to disapprove of any item or items of any bill making appropriations of money, embracing distinct items, and the part or parts of the bill approved shall be law, and the item or items disapproved shall be void, unless enacted in manner following: If the general assembly be in session, he shall transmit to the house in which the bill originated a copy of the item or items thereof disapproved, together with his objections thereto, and the items objected to shall be separately reconsidered, and each item shall then take the same course as is prescribed for the passage of bills over the executive veto."

This section has proved very efficacious in holding down of State expenditures, as the governor has often exercised his right to cut various items from appropriation bills.

Yours, very truly,
C. A. LEMMERS,
Budget Commissioner.

Within the time allotted to me I can not take time to go through a great number of these letters, but as I stated a few minutes ago I have no letter from any governor unfavorably commenting upon it.

The letter from the governor of Connecticut states that there is no such provision in the constitution of that State, but heartily commends it in the following excerpt:

I am fully satisfied that he should have the power to express his disapproval of any particular item.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBERS,
Hartford, December 9, 1919.

W. W. HASTINGS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 4th instant is received. We have no provision in our constitution or statutes which permits the governor to veto any particular item in an appropriation bill; he must veto the whole bill or let it go. This is not as it should be. I am fully satisfied that he should have the power to express his disapproval of any particular item. I am,

Sincerely, yours,
M. H. HOLCOMB.

The State of Florida does not have such a provision nor does it have any provision for a budget.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Tallahassee, December 10, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 4th has been received, and in reply to same desire to advise that we have no budget bill in this State.

With best wishes, I am,

Yours, very truly,
SIDNEY J. CATTS,
Governor of Florida.

Section 11, article 4, of the constitution of Idaho gives the governor the power to disapprove any item or items of any bill making an appropriation of money that embraces distinct items, and the part or parts not disapproved duly become a law. The item or items disapproved are void unless passed over his veto. The governor of Idaho commends this provision of the State constitution, as well as a budget system, although the budget system has not been in force long enough to give it a fair trial.

STATE OF IDAHO,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Boise, December 26, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: Replying to your inquiry concerning the establishment of a budget system, under separate cover I am sending you copy of the constitution of the State of Idaho and cite you to Chapter IV, sections 10 and 11, page 20. Am also inclosing copy of senate bill No. 173, passed by the legislature of 1919 and approved by the governor March 12, 1919. This bill provides for the creation of a budget system in the State of Idaho and this is now in operation under the direction of the commissioner of finance.

We feel that the preparation of a budget as embodied in this act, to be submitted to the legislature, will be a wonderful improvement over the present method of introducing appropriation bills and will save the State many thousands of dollars. After the budget is presented to the legislature for consideration and action it will then go to the governor in the form of an appropriation bill for his approval or disapproval, as set forth in sections 10 and 11 of the State constitution.

I sincerely hope you will find the Idaho method of handling appropriations of interest and assistance. Of course, our budget system has not yet been given a fair trial, but we are very hopeful that it will prove a great success.

Very truly, yours,
D. W. DAVIS, Governor.

While the State of Iowa does not have such a provision in its constitution, the proposed amendment is strongly commended by the governor of that State.

COMMONWEALTH OF IOWA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Des Moines, December 9, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I regret that we do not have in our State constitution such a provision as outlined in your favor of the 4th instant.

I wish that we did, as it would be most helpful in keeping down expenditures.

Cordially, yours,
W. L. HARDING.

The following very brief letter from the governor of Indiana shows that he is in favor of adopting the proposed amendment. He heartily commends it:

STATE OF INDIANA,
EXCUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Indianapolis, December 6, 1919.

Mr. W. W. HASTINGS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of December 4. We have no such provision in our constitution, but upon my recommendation a proposed amendment almost identical with the one you propose passed our general assembly and will be submitted to the people for ratification.

I sincerely hope that the proposed amendment will pass Congress and be submitted to the general assembly.

Very truly, yours,
J. P. GOODRICH, Governor.

The constitution of the State of Illinois has such an amendment, and is highly commended by the governor as being helpful in keeping down expenditures:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Springfield, December 9, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 4. Our constitution contains such a provision as you mention, and it has been very helpful in keeping down expenditures.

Very sincerely, yours,
FRANK O. LOWDEN.

The State of Kansas has such an amendment to its constitution, and is strongly commended in a letter received from the executive secretary, who states:

This provision of the constitution has been found to be effective in preventing pork-barrel appropriations. It also enables legislation to get through without being defeated by vicious riders.

STATE OF KANSAS,
Topeka, December 10, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Answering your letter of December 4, will say in 1904 our people passed a constitutional provision amending section 14 of article 2 of the constitution in these words:

"If any bill presented to the governor contains several items of appropriaton of money, he may object to one or more such items while approving the other portion of the bill; in such case he shall append to the bill at the time of signing it a statement of the item or items to which he objects and the reasons therefor, and shall transmit such statement, or a copy thereof, to the house of representatives, and any appropriations so objected to shall not take effect unless reconsidered and approved by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house, and, if so reconsidered and approved, shall take effect and become a part of the bill, in which case the presiding officers of each house shall certify on such bill such fact of such reconsideration and approval."

This provision of the constitution has been found to be effective in preventing "pork-barrel" appropriations. It also enables legislation to get through without being defeated by vicious riders.

Very truly, yours,

C. W. SMITH,
Executive Clerk.

The governor of Minnesota advised that the proposed amendment is in substance the same as the provision in his State constitution. He strongly commends it as being wise, and suggests that the governor should also have authority to reduce appropriation items.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
St. Paul, December 8, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Your letter of December 4 relative to the proposed amendment to the Constitution permitting the President to disapprove any item in an appropriation bill is received.

The proposed amendment is in substance the same as the provision in the Minnesota constitution. I think it is a very wise provision, but it would be still better if the Constitution provided that the Chief Executive might also reduce appropriation items.

There are a great many times when the executive feels that the amount allowed is too large, but he can not veto the item without stopping the work of an entire department or division of the government. Usually the appropriation bills are not presented to the governor until it is too late to send them back to the legislature for revision.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. A. BURNQUIST.

The State of Michigan has no provision of this kind in its constitution, but the legislature passed a budget bill last year.

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Lansing, December 6, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Gov. Sleeper directs me to say to you that we have no provision in our State constitution such as you quote in your letter to him of December 4.

The legislature of 1919, however, passed a budget bill, a copy of which I herewith inclose for your information. We have not yet had sufficient experience with the operation of this bill to make any very definite statement as to its value, but we are hopeful that it will mean a large saving to the State.

Very truly, yours, ROLPH DUFF, Secretary.

Maine has no provision in its constitution permitting the governor to veto any item in an appropriation bill, but the governor is in favor of adopting such an amendment.

STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Augusta, December 6, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HASTINGS: I have read your letter of the 4th instant regarding the necessity for economizing in public expenditures with more than ordinary interest. Under the Maine constitution the governor has no power to veto an item in the appropriation bill passed by the legislature. I think that such a proposition is very essential and I am in favor of a constitutional amendment to that effect.

Very truly, yours,

CARL E. MILLIKEN.

In the absence of the governor of Mississippi from the capital, his private secretary wrote me that his State has no budget system, but that the governor has the right to veto any particular item in an appropriation bill:

MISSISSIPPI EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Jackson, December 6, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
Chairman of Committee on
Expenditures in the Interior Department,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In the absence of Gov. Bilbo, who is absent from the State, and will not return for some days, I beg to acknowledge receipt of your inquiry of the 4th instant and beg to say:

Mississippi has no budget system as it is generally understood. However, the constitution, as I understand, gives the governor authority to affix a veto to any particular item of an appropriation bill, and he communicates to the house in which it originates his reasons for such disapproval, and the item disapproved or vetoed by him can only be given force and effect by a vote of two-thirds. The vetoed item stands in the same position that any act vetoed by him would. The parts of the appropriation bill not vetoed stand as passed.

If this does not answer your query sufficiently, let me know.

Yours, very truly,

W. J. BUCK,
Private Secretary.

Gov. Gardner, of Missouri, in his reply, stated that there is no provision in the State constitution for a budget, but that at the beginning of his administration he succeeded in getting through the legislature the tax-commission bill, a section of which provides that the commission must submit a budget to the legislature. He is in hearty sympathy with the movement to establish a national budget, and will do everything possible in aiding it.

EXECUTIVE OFFICES,
STATE OF MISSOURI,
City of Jefferson, December 12, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: I have your letter in regard to the matter of a budget. Unfortunately, we have no provision in our constitution for a State budget. Our legislature has the power to appropriate any amount they please.

However, in the beginning of my administration I succeeded in getting through the legislature, in connection with the tax-commission bill, a section which provided that the tax commission should submit a budget to the legislature. This budget was submitted to the second legislature held during my administration, and was found to be of inestimable value. It set forth clearly the anticipated revenue and explained in detail where this money should be expended. It was of great value to the appropriation committee of the legislature and also to the governor in adjusting the appropriations to meet the income.

I am in hearty sympathy with the movement to establish a national budget, and believe Congress and the States should cooperate to that end. I will do everything I can to further the movement.

Sincerely, yours,

FREDERICK D. GARDNER.

Gov. Boyle, of Nevada, states that no provision of this kind is contained in the constitution. He can see everything in favor of the proposed amendment.

STATE OF NEVADA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Carson City, December 8, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of December 4 advising me of suggested budget legislation giving to the President the power to veto items in appropriation bills.

Unfortunately, we have no such provision in our own constitution.

The general appropriation bills passed in the State legislatures and in Congress are no doubt the most widely used vehicles employed in carting off the public funds.

I can see everything in favor of the amendment to the Constitution introduced by you amending section 7, Article I, suggested in your letter.

Very truly, yours, EMMET D. BOYLE,
Governor.

Hon. Philip F. Bross, secretary of finance, State of Nebraska, states that the constitution has a provision permitting the governor of Nebraska to veto any item in an appropriation bill, and that it is a check upon the legislature in placing items of expense in appropriation bills that are not meritorious.

STATE OF NEBRASKA,
DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE,
Lincoln, December 13, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HASTINGS: Your letter of December 4, addressed to the governor, has been referred to me for reply.

I inclose herewith copy of our constitutional provision providing that the executive may veto any item of an appropriation bill.

I think the executive has only availed himself of this right one or two times within the last 8 or 10 years, but having a constitutional provision giving the executive this power is without doubt a check upon the legislature in placing items of expense in appropriation bills unless they are quite sure that they meet the approval of the chief executive.

I am inclosing herewith part of the civil administrative code which was passed at the last regular session of the Legislature of Nebraska, establishing the department of finance. You will note that the department of finance, by this law, is given complete control over the accounts and expenditures of the departments which have heretofore carried on their work as boards and commissions under the governor. It also provides for a central purchasing department for the State, and for the preparation of a budget. The budget that we expect to prepare will be a work-program, cost-data budget, which will start in with total estimates for appropriations for departments, bureaus, and divisions within the department, and will be supported by schedules showing the need for the total amount, as distributed according to standard expense account. The supporting schedules will give complete and full details to show how the total for the unit is established, but the supporting schedules will not be included in the appropriation bill. Through this combination of appropriations in summarized form, with supporting schedules furnishing detail under main functions, the legislature and the public will be furnished the same detailed report of expenditures and estimates for appropriations as is contained in a segregated budget, without limiting administrative functions. The appropriations will be for stated purposes of expenditure, rather than for items of expenditure.

There will also be an estimate of the available resources of the State, and the budget, in this respect, will embody the first essential features of any budgetary system—the balancing of revenues and expenditures.

Under the civil administrative code we have standardized our salaries, so that employees doing the same class of work will receive the same compensation throughout all of the departments. This salary standardization plan provides for increases at certain periods and promotions from the lower to the higher grades.

In establishing the department of finance the State of Nebraska has a department which has no other functional activity outside of bookkeeping, accounting and auditing, and the preparation of the budget, and this department is given complete control over the expenditures of all the departments, so that not only the legality of an expenditure can be questioned but the department has the power to question the wisdom of and necessity for an expenditure. You will note the departments must make a three months' estimate before they can make any expenditures, and all the bookkeeping has been taken away from the departments and is carried on in a uniform central bookkeeping department in the department of finance.

In your letter to the governor you ask whether he considers the provision in our State constitution is helpful in keeping down expenditures. As I have indicated above, while I think it has only been used a few times in the history of our State, yet it has a tendency to keep the legislature from placing "riders" in appropriation bills which they have reason to think the executive might veto. However, under any republican form of government I think the executive and the legislative branches should have equal power and should not infringe upon each other. The legislature or Congress should be responsible to the people for both taxation and appropriations, and the executive should be responsible for the running of the executive government and for the expenditures in connection therewith. All appropriations for the legislative branch, for operating expense of the government, should be made from a work-program, cost-data budget submitted to the legislature by the chief executive, who will stand responsible for such budget. The expenditures from all appropriations made by the legislature should be under the control of the executive.

The budget submitted by the chief executive should be a business program, for which he would stand responsible to the legislature and to the people. The official under the executive who prepares the estimate should, with the executive's approval, have power to change the estimates as they come in from the various departments before the final budget is prepared and transmitted to the legislature. The executive budget when transmitted to the legislature should be handled by one committee in each house, where there are two houses of the legislature, and they should have before them all the information which the executive has when he prepares the budget, but they should depend for their information upon the executive rather than upon the heads of the departments. Final power should rest with the legislature to either increase or decrease any items contained in the budget. However, in order that the executive may be held actually responsible for his budget, the legislature should not have the power to increase estimates except by possibly a two-thirds vote. In establishing the budgetary system the power should not be taken from the legislature to make appropriations for new and special activities of the State that may not be contained in the executive budget. The legislature should be free to initiate legislation which would carry appropriations and for which no estimates were made by the executive. However, in such cases the legislature should provide at the same time for the raising of the revenue to meet each added appropriation.

In order to establish a correct budgetary system, a central bookkeeping and accounting department should be established. The system should be simple and yet complete and comprehensive enough so that it would be a complete check on all appropriations, and it should show at all times the financial condition of the unit of government. The central uniform accounting system is necessary in any executive budgetary system, as through this accounting system the executive has an eye on all expenditures day by day, and in that way secures the necessary information for the intelligent preparation of the budget. The final audit for all expenditures of the executive in a republican form of government should, to my mind, rest with the legislative branch, through a general auditor appointed by the legislature, who will be familiar with the intents and purposes of the appropriations made by the legislature, and whose activity would be confined simply to the legality of the expenditure.

This financial system for a republican form of government would embody these necessary features: The chief executive responsible for all expenditures and responsible for the work-program cost-data budget submitted to the legislative body, showing both estimated resources and estimated expenditures for the operation of the government; the legislative body responsible for the financial policy of the government, but limited in certain respects in increasing the executive budget, and responsible, through its auditor, for the final audit and the enforcement of the proper application of moneys appropriated by the legislative body.

If you should be interested any further in the accounting system which we have established in the department of finance, I would be very glad to answer any questions in regard to the same.

Very truly, yours, PHILIP F. BROSS,
Secretary of Finance.

CONSTITUTION STATE OF NEBRASKA.

ART. 5, SEC. 15. (Bills—approval, veto): "Every bill passed by the legislature, before it becomes a law, and every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary (except on questions of adjournment), shall be presented to the governor. If he approves, he shall sign it, and thereupon it shall become a law; but if he do not approve, he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it shall have originated, which house shall enter the objections at large upon its journal and proceed to reconsider the bill. If then three-fifths of the members elected agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered; and if approved by three-fifths of the members elected to that house it shall become a law, notwithstanding the objections of the governor. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays, to be entered upon the journal. Any bill which shall not be returned by the governor within five days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by their adjournment prevent its return; in which case it shall be filed, with his objections, in the office of the secretary of state within five days after such adjournment, or become a law. The governor may disapprove any item or items of appropriation contained in bills passed by the legislature, and the item or items so disapproved shall be stricken therefrom, unless repassed in the manner herein prescribed in cases of disapproval of bills."

Gov. Runyon, of New Jersey, states that there is no provision in the Constitution like the proposed amendment to the National Constitution, but that the people of his State have come to the conclusion in recent years that such an amendment should be adopted.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
December 5, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN HASTINGS: I have your letter of the 4th instant setting forth the proposed amendment to the Constitution having to do with appropriations and asking as to any possible provision in our constitution covering the same matter.

In reply, I would say that there is no constitutional provision of such nature as you mention, but of recent years we have come to the budget idea in our State, and my feeling is that it is a very valuable adjunct to the State machinery and undoubtedly is tending to make State expenditures less in amount and better understood by the public at large.

If there is anything further in which I may serve you, I shall be glad to do so, provided you make your wishes known.

Appreciating the work in which you are engaged and bespeaking for you great success therein, I am

Yours, very truly, WM. N. RUNYON, Governor.

The governor of North Carolina strongly commends the provision and states that in his judgment such a law should be enacted by Congress and every legislature, as follows:

"I heartily approve the law that you quote, and think that such law certainly ought to be enacted by Congress and by every legislature."

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Raleigh, December 6, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of December 4, I beg to say that the governor of North Carolina has no veto power of any kind. You will, of course, remember that North Carolina was the first colony to kick up the devil and declare its independence of Great Britain. The people looked upon the governor as the successor to the King, and they were dead against him. They took pains in their constitution to tie him hand and foot. The only power that he has is that of moral suasion.

I heartily approve the law that you quote, and think that such law certainly ought to be enacted by Congress and by every legislature.

Sincerely, yours,

T. W. BICKETT.

Gov. Cox, of Ohio, states that the constitution gives him authority to disapprove any item of an appropriation bill.

STATE OF OHIO,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Columbus, December 6, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: It gives me pleasure to send you under separate cover a copy of the constitution of Ohio, as amended September 3, 1912. I would call your attention to section 16, article 2, page 16, which gives the governor of the State authority to disapprove any item of an appropriation bill.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very truly, yours, JAMES M. COX.

Oklahoma has a provision in its constitution similar to the amendment proposed (sec. 12, art. 6), and the governor has exercised the power conferred upon him by withholding his approval from many items in various appropriation bills. Former Gov. Williams suggested that the proposed amendment should be so changed as to permit the President to reduce the amount of any item in any bill. The argument in favor of vetoing an item would, of course, favor the reduction of any item.

The letter of ex-Gov. Williams commending the proposed amendment reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA,
JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
Ardmore, Okla., October 24, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I notice that you have introduced a proposal to amend the Federal Constitution as to the vetoing of appropriations by the President. Press dispatches state that the proposal provides for the vetoing of separate items without affecting the entire bill.

Let me suggest that it should read this way:

"Every bill passed by Congress making appropriations of money embracing distinct items shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President. If he disapproves the bill or any item, or reduces any item or appropriation therein contained, he shall communicate such disapproval or reduction, with his reasons therefor, to the House in which the bill shall have originated; but all items not disapproved or reduced shall have the force and effect of law according to the original provisions of the bill. Any item reduced, unless repassed in the original amount by two-thirds vote, shall stand as reduced, and any item or items so disapproved shall be void unless repassed by two-thirds vote."

This is the rule in some of the States—I believe Pennsylvania. Whilst Pennsylvania has a constitutional provision similar to other States, yet under the construction given it by the Supreme Court the governor may reduce items, and such items as reduced will stand unless repassed by two-thirds majority. However, in the majority of States the courts hold that an item can not be reduced, but must be disapproved in the form in which it is passed. My experience as governor tells me this would be a wise provision.

Yours, truly, R. L. WILLIAMS.

Discussing the matter further in a subsequent letter, he gives certain citations. I wish to insert same in the RECORD, in order that they may be brought to the attention of the committee having the proposed amendment under consideration. Mr. Williams is at present judge of the eastern district of Oklahoma. In addition to being governor of my State, he was a member of the constitutional convention of Oklahoma:

Muskogee, Okla., November 9, 1919.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS, M. C.,
